When I listen to the remarks of Labour Members it is clear that they are still rooted in the belief that the country can pay for public services only by imposing incredibily high taxation on every working person. We all recall that at the last general election the Labour party was committed to increasing the basic rate of taxation by 2p if it was elected. The Labour party believed that the country can pay for good public services only if it raises particularly high levels of taxation from the most successful and talented people in our society. That lies at the root of all its arguments so far on the Budget.

We do not accept that. We believe that we can best pay for the good public services which we all require by creating the conditions for sound economic growth. We believe that it is necessary to encourage people to earn the wealth that the country needs to pay for personal prosperity and good public services. One way in which we can encourage people to engage successfully in the wealth-creating process is to reduce taxation generally, and particularly on the most successful people who provide the leadership of British industry.

The idea that reducing taxation enables the country to generate wealth and is beneficial to public services, particularly in the medium term, has never been accepted by Labour Members. I do not understand that. They should look back at their own experiences, particularly at the year which should have scarred the Labour party for ever—1976. At that time, they were levying taxation on earnings up to the absurd maximum rate of 83 per cent. In 1976, the maximum taxation on capital was 98 per cent. —a quite nonsensical level. In that same year, when they were levying punitive taxation on the rich, they were obliged to cut spending on the National Health Service in a way which has been done only once, by one Government since 1948, since the National Health Service started. When imposing that punitive taxation on the rich for their own political purposes, they cut revenue spending on the National Health Service by 3 per cent. in real terms. They cut capital spending on the National Health Service by no less than one third and delayed new hospital building throughout the country.

In contrast, this tax-reducing Government are steadily increasing resources. Since last autumn in particular, we have increased resources substantially for health, education and, above all, for social security, for the benefits that are paid to pensioners, the disabled and the poor. We have steadily increased those resources because we were taking the benefit of the growth produced by the enterprise economy which the Government have created. We are able to sustain those improvements in our public services as a result of the success which has been won by the men and women who work in British industry and commerce who have taken advantage of the climate which we have created.

Against that background, today I propose to examine the implications of my right hon. Friend's Budget for commerce and industry, on whose well-being practically everything else with which the House is concerned depends. I could hardly have chosen a better day. Things have improved even since my right hon. Friend sat down after his Budget speech on Tuesday.

It is not a very difficult task to address the House about the conditions of industry and commerce when interest rates have fallen this morning, as I am sure all hon. Members were delighted to hear, and unemployment has fallen by another 33,000 to its lowest level for six years. Hon. Members may not realise that this morning it was announced that capital expenditure by the manufacturing, construction, distribution and financial industries in the fourth quarter of 1987 was more than 6 per cent. higher than in the preceding quarter, and more than 12 per cent. higher than in the fourth quarter of 1986.

I do not envy the hon. Member for Livingston (Mr. Cook). He must try to address the House on the subject of commerce on a particularly bad day from his point of view when so much good news has been flowing in.

Mr. Eric Forth (Mid-Worcestershire): Does my right hon. and learned Friend agree that there are only about eight Labour party Members in the Chamber—probably because he has had so much good news to impart, and they have no answer to what he is saying? Does he think that it has scared them all away?

Mr. Clarke: It is remarkable that the Labour party does not seem to be able to sustain its campaign against my right hon. Friend's Budget for more than 24 hours and that the three items of extremely good economic news this morning have driven practically every Labour Member back to his or her constituency. They are probably already back in their constituencies getting the judgment of the general public.

Mr. Eric S. Heffer (Liverpool, Walton) rose——

Mr. Clarke: This year, at the time of this debate, the economic environment for business is extremely favourable.

Mr. Heffer: Will the right hon. and learned Gentleman give way?

Mr. Clarke: I shall give way in a moment.

It is not merely that the economy has continued to prosper during the past 12 months which is part of the enviably solid record of economic achievement and growth which is behind us. The economy has grown steadily for seven years, the longest period of sustained growth since the war. We are seeing the end of the caution and scepticism that was understandably ingrained in the British business community by so many years of comparative failure. Most of us with any contact with managers and leaders in British industry and commerce can sense the increased self-confidence and competitiveness that is now felt by those who lead our businesses.

We have not achieved that splendid result simply by riding a wave of international economic prosperity. For the period since 1981, since recovery has been under way, we have recorded the fastest sustained growth of any of the major European economies. The contrast with the 1960s and 1970s when we were stuck firmly at the bottom of every league table could hardly be more striking. British economic achievement is now a subject of envy and admiration internationally and is a source of pride that we all feel when we are congratulated on it by our colleagues overseas.

The principal duty of my right hon. Friend the Chancellor on Tuesday was to maintain the climate to sustain as much economic growth as possible in uncertain world conditions. I believe that he can do so. The House will see that my right hon. Friend's Industry Act forecast predicts continued growth in GDP of 3 per cent. in the present year. The House will recall that the prediction for 1987, which he made this time last year, proves to have erred on the side of caution.

Opposition Members often emphasise the particular importance of manufacturing performance. To some extent, when we make comparisons between manufacturing and services, we rather overlook the extent to which developments in technology and in the organisation of business are making the old clear-cut distinction between manufacturing and services a thing of the past. Given that we have a traditional definition of manufacturing and service activity, I know that pretty well everybody in the House will share my satisfaction that manufacturing output, as traditionally defined, rose by no less than 5·5 per cent. in 1987. Again, my right hon. Friend the Chancellor was modest last year in the expectations of what he was then doing. His forcast of 4 per cent. growth in manufacturing industry in this country has been exceeded.

The volume of manufacturing output now stands higher than when the Labour party left office, having risen by more than 20 per cent. since the trough of the most severe recession since the 1930s.—[Interruption.] I can sense a little scepticism. It may be that Opposition Members are aware that we still have a little way to go before the somewhat higher level is reached at which the previous Labour Government entered office in 1974. However, we are nearly there and, if my right hon. Friend's forecasts of a further 5 per cent. growth in manufacturing output in 1988 is realised, that level will be attained very soon and we will be on to record-making levels.

In addition to that improvement in our manufacturing performance, I trust that the House welcomes the sharp fall in unemployment that has now continued for more than 18 months. This morning's news simply underlines the benefit for the unemployed of economic success. The total number out of work and claiming benefits is now some 680,000 lower than its peak in 1986. The House knows that no one finds it possible to forecast future levels of unemployment. I certainly leave the House in no doubt that the existing figure of about 2·5 million is higher than anyone would wish and higher than anyone can tolerate, and a continued fall is desirable. In the present climate, there is every reason to expect a further reduction in the coming year, provided that pay increases are kept at a sensible level. I shall come to that subject shortly.

The hope for the remaining unemployed must come from the continued ability of British industry to continue to create additional jobs. Here, again, recent experience is encouraging. The improvement in the number of people in employment is dramatic. There are now more than 1·5 million more jobs in the economy than there were in 1983. The main contributors to that turn-round have been self-employment and employment in the service industries. Even in manufacturing, despite the historic and continuing trends against labour-intensive manufacturing, the long decline in the numbers employed has slowed almost to a halt in recent months.

When I look at the employment picture of the past 18 months, I cannot help remembering last year's major attack on the Budget by the right hon. and learned Member for Monklands, East (Mr. Smith). He was laying his principal emphasis on the problems of unemployment. The right hon. and learned Gentleman was putting forward the preposterous proposals of the Labour party for a great spending programme to bring down unemployment. That is what he said we should have done before the election. The Labour party was saying that a public expenditure programme of about £6 billion—that was the figure advocated last year—devoted largely to creating more public sector employment, principally in local government, could seek to reduce unemployment levels by 1 million over the next two years.

Following our approach, encouraging an enterprise economy and not putting £6 billion into the pockets of public authorities to create artificial jobs, seasonally adjusted unemployment has fallen by 535,000 over the past year and by 506,000 since last March, which is when the right hon. and learned Member for Monklands, East made his assertions. Therefore, after one year, we are half-way towards the Labour party's ambitious two-year target, which was set by the right hon. and learned Gentleman in his speech on the Budget last year. However, in my opinion, what he was setting out—tax increases, massive public spending and artifical public sector jobs—would have failed. More people would have been unemployed today. The right hon. and learned Gentleman was right to say that unemployment was a principal problem, and we have achieved his laudable aims. We have hit his targets for reducing unemployment but we have done so by adopting much more sensible and successful policies.

Mr. John Smith (Monklands, East): While the right hon. and learned Gentleman is in this confident mood, can he say whether unemployment, by the end of this period of Government, will be higher or lower than when the Government came into office in 1979?

Mr. Clarke: Of course I cannot. I said that no one can successfully forecast the level of unemployment. I do not believe any forecasts of unemployment more than three or four years ahead. It depends on the success of British industry in continuing to expand and create jobs. I am saying that the more we create an enterprise economy, the more prospects we have of increasing the total number of jobs and reducing unemployment. I am also saying that our record is as good as anything the right hon. and learned Gentleman aspired to and it has been achieved by our successful policies.

Mr. Heffer: Is the right hon. and learned Gentleman aware that in February 1987 unemployment in my constituency, in real figures, was 10,929 and that this year, February 1988, it is 10,031? It has gone down by about 800. Is that a great success? Is that the success that the Government talk about?

Mr. Clarke: It is a substantial step in the right direction.

Mr. Heffer: Only 800 people?

Mr. Clarke: The hon. Gentleman represents a depressed part of the country. We all know that. There are many other depressed towns. The fact is that a drop of 800, down to 10,000, is a substantial move in the right direction. My right hon. Friend the Chancellor is seeking to sustain that by creating the right conditions for economic growth. I trust that the hon. Member for Liverpool, Walton (Mr. Heffer) shares with me the special pleasure of the fact that the improvement in employment has extended throughout the whole country. The sharpest reductions over the past year in the numbers out of work have been recorded in the west midlands, Wales, the north-east and, the hon. Gentleman's own area, the north-west. The least prosperous regions have, most encouragingly, shared fully in the recent growth in employment, particularly in self-employment.

Mr. Max Madden (Bradford, West): The right hon. and learned Gentleman has been talking about new jobs. Is he concerned about the proportion of those new jobs that often involve long hours of work, including night and regular weekend work, for rates of pay which, in many cases, are less than £2 an hour? Is he concerned that there are allegations that jobcentres are advertising jobs, which are affected by wage councils, at rates that are below the legal minimum for those jobs? What action is being taken to ensure that jobcentres do not collude with unscrupulous employers and advertise jobs below legal minimum rates? What is being done to improve the rates of pay and the conditions of work of many of the new jobs being created in this enterprise culture?

Mr. Clarke: If jobs are being advertised in job clubs at below the legal minimum rates, those allegations will be investigated. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Employment has just told me that the one allegation of that sort that he has received has been dealt with.

The idea that the increase in employment is a low-wage increase is absurd. The general level of earnings in the British economy is rising rapidly. Indeed, if there is one cause for concern about the continuing fall in unemployment in this country, it is that we are beginning to slip back into the practice of paying ourselves rather too much, a little too quickly, which will slow up the fall in unemployment.

As far as I can see, the shadow Chancellor said that the excellent climate, which I have just described, is threatened mainly by the adverse balance of payments. The allegation is being made that we are facing a slow-down in growth because of the balance of payments problems that are being foreseen by some of our critics. His predecessor as shadow Chancellor, the right hon. Member for Birmingham, Sparkbrook (Mr. Hattersley), was making exactly the same predictions of a serious balance of payments crisis 12 months ago. In early 1987 he was saying that the balance of payments deficit would be £14·5 billion for the coming financial year. Last year's current account deficit is now estimated at £1·7 billion. Again, my right hon. Friend the Chancellor erred on the side of caution. His estimate last year was rather more than the outturn for the balance of payments deficit. It is not too surprising that we are facing a slightly adverse balance of payments. The principal reason is that the United Kingdom economy is growing faster than that of most of our main competitors. This is making the British market the one to go for as far as most of our competitors are concerned.

The volume of visible exports that we achieved was 5·5 per cent. higher in 1987 than in 1986, but at 7·5 per cent. visible imports rose somewhat faster because our market was expanding faster than the markets abroad to which we were selling. But those imports were not all, or even mainly, consumer products; a high proportion of imports were raw materials and intermediate goods for industry. That is the kind of increase in imports to be expected at a time of more rapid growth of our own industry. My right hon. Friend has predicted a rather larger current account deficit of £4 billion for 1988, which is easily sustainable by our present performance.

Mr. David Ashby (Leicestershire, North-West): Does my right hon. and learned Friend also agree that the reason for part of this deficit may be that companies, foreseeing a great future for this country, have been looking for new machinery for their companies and much of this machinery is foreign—German or Japanese—so that it is really investment for the future that we are seeing as well?

Mr. Clarke: I agree with my hon. Friend that the majority of the imports that we are seeing are raw materials, semi-manufactured goods and machinery—capital investment. That is an inevitable consequence of the current expansion of our economy.

Of more lasting significance last year was the very strong performance of our invisible earnings.

Mr. Bryan Gould (Dagenham): I have been trying to follow the right hon. and learned Gentleman's argument that the rapid rate of growth by which he is so pleased inevitably means that we should move into balance of payments deficit. How does he reconcile that with the experience of more successful and stronger economies than our own—notably the Japanese economy—for which rapid growth has invariably meant the building up of very substantial surpluses in their balance of payments?

Mr. Clarke: That was true of the rapid growth of the Japanese economy because of the then exchange value of the yen and the way in which the Japanese expansion was particularly export-led.

What I am saying is that we are currently expanding far faster than most of our competitors. It is in the nature of the British economy that we tend to import semi-manufactured goods, materials and machinery as we expand. What is being produced is a very modest balance of payments deficit, which is of no concern whatever as a percentage of our GDP.

If hon. Members wish to be reassured, I suggest that they look at the very strong performance of our invisible earnings. These contributed a surplus of almost £8 billion to the balance of payments, much of it in the form of net income from our portfolio of overseas assets, which is now second only to that of Japan. Members of the Opposition have objected strongly to our building up our portfolio of overseas assets. They would probably dissipate those overseas assets by higher discriminatory taxation and politically controlled investment in the country. But that overseas portfolio is of very great assistance to us in financing our balance of payments deficit.

Productivity has been the main key to industrial success. The strong growth in productivity has been maintained for another year throughout the economy. This, again, has been particularly striking in manufacturing, which should be encouraging for us all. Output per man in manufacturing industry has now risen by more than 50 per cent. since 1981 and by over 40 per cent. compared with the year when the Labour party left office. The growth in manufacturing productivity over the past seven years has exceeded that achieved by any of our main competitors, including Japan. The basis of that improved productivity has been the fundamental changes in working practices in very many industries and the ending of outdated demarcations between different trades. We still find that on the ground, throughout the country, in many industries those very necessary changes are still being opposed by some of the Labour party's allies in the trade union movement. We need to go still further. The levels of productivity in the United Kingdom still have some way to go before they match the best achieved by our competitors. Our aim must be nothing less than to achieve the best achieved elsewhere.

In my opinion, the Labour party is complacent about these improvements in productivity and about the need to stimulate still further the performance of the enterprise economy. It fails to realise that international circumstances are becoming more competitive. We have to succeed in the single European market in 1992. That is now the biggest single change facing British industry. I cannot help reflecting on what a disaster it would have been had the single European market been achieved in the mid-1970s when the Labour party was in office; it would have been a very major threat to British industry. It is now a considerable opportunity. And we have not only to succeed in the single European market; we have to aspire to compete with Koreans, Taiwanese and Japanese—the new strong performers in the world economy—in what is increasingly becoming a global market for a high proportion of goods and services. I believe that with our present sustained growth we are on target to do so.

Last year our sustained improvement in productivity meant that in manufacturing our unit costs remained virtually unchanged in 1987 despite a 7·75 per cent. increase in average earnings. The most recent figures suggest that in 1987 our performance on unit costs was better than that of Germany, although less good than that of Japan or the United States, where the figure for unit costs was negative. However, the present trend of increases in earnings is running at around 8·5 per cent. and that is of some concern. The biggest stimulus to that was quite clearly the rather disgraceful level of settlement achieved by largely Labour-dominated local authorities with their own trade unions. Any continuation of the upward trend that that settlement seems to have provoked would be bound to put severe pressure on unit costs over the next 12 months.

Fortunately, the private sector figure is an increase of 5·5 per cent., but in all parts of the private sector people must appreciate still more the direct link between moderate pay increases and improved employment prospects, which is still not fully recognised in this country.

I hasten to add, before any hon. Member takes up the point in a later speech, that the Government are most emphatically not in favour of a low-wage economy; that is quite plainly not what we are creating in the United Kingdom at the moment. We are in favour of a situation in which higher pay is achieved by higher productivity and better performance that generates the profits to finance the higher wages that everybody understandably wishes. It is unearned pay increases that raise costs and cost jobs.

The tax reductions in this Budget enable employers to create jobs. The improvement in industrial performance has been fully reflected where it matters—in the bottom line. The profits of non-oil companies have grown steadily from the beginning of the decade and the real rate of return among these companies in 1987 reached 11 per cent., which is its highest level for 20 years. The increased profitability of manufacturing industry made a major contribution here. With three quarters of capital investment funded from retained profits, business is at last freeing itself from the shackles of inadequate profitability. The benefits of this are not confined to the shareholders; they extend to the employees, the customers and the whole community.

My right hon. Friend has encouraged us by producing a situation in which we now have, I am glad to say, one of the lowest rates of corporate taxation in the developed world. Our small company rate is particularly low, at 25 per cent., because my right hon. Friend has lowered it in line with the reduction of base rate income tax. The low level of corporate taxation is having the effect that we have always forecast on business investment, and particularly the quality of business investment, in this country. The year 1987 saw a rise of 4 per cent. in business investment, to a record level. It was made clear in the DTI's investment intentions survey, published last December, that we can expect an even sharper increase of about 9 per cent. in business investment in 1988. The increase in the volume of manufacturing investment was resumed in 1987 after a pause in 1986. The forecast for 1988 is of another increase of no less than 11 per cent. in the level of manufacturing investment. If that level is achieved, it will bring manufacturing investment also to an all-time high.

It is not only the Government's word and my word that says that the economy is thriving under the kind of treatment that my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer is giving to the British economy. The CBI industrial trends survey in February was merely the latest in a line of reports on the buoyant state of business confidence. Output is expected to grow strongly. Both home and export order books remain healthy. The latest chambers of commerce regional survey for the last quarter of 1987 also shows that any effect of the stock market crash was confined to a narrow circle of financial institutions, and that confidence has remained at a high level through the rest of the economy.

Just look at the warm welcome that my right hon. Friend's Budget on Tuesday has received from industry. The president of the CBI, Sir David Nickson, said that it will help to maintain the momentum of our economic recovery and will give a great boost to business confidence. The director general of the Institute of Directors, Sir John Hoskyns, has also given his strong support. I listen to people like that rather than to Opposition Members, as such people have a proper understanding of the needs of industry upon which our prosperity depends.

If the Opposition do not like domestic praise for the present situation, perhaps they will look abroad for some evidence that people believe that the progress of the British economy is solidly based. I have no doubt that they all know of the recent speech of the Japanese ambassador, who spoke of the "British miracle". He not only talked about the British miracle, but he gave his reasons for saying so. He attributed our performance to the policies of deregulation, privatisation, tax and trade union reform, and to the encouragement of competition, all of which have contributed to the revival of an enterprise culture.

There is not only praise in speeches. People abroad are showing their confidence in the British economy in the most important and practical way. Nissan has decided to undertake a further major expansion at Washington new town, to accommodate the production of a second car model. Only this week, Nissan announced that it was going to locate a new design centre in the United Kingdom. Sanyo announced last week a major new investment in the north-east for the manufacture of microwave ovens and magnetrons. There was an announcement in January by the Finnish paper manufacturer Kymmene-Stromberg of the largest new investment in Scotland by an overseas company. So our policies are being imitated abroad and attract investors from abroad. We are setting the fashion in how to create the right climate for an enterprising economy.

Mr. Nicholas Fairbairn (Perth and Kinross): Does my right hon. and learned Friend recall that when the "Locate in Scotland" survey was done in the United States, 80 per cent. of all firms that proposed to locate in Europe said that they would rather come to Scotland than elsewhere in Europe, provided that the Government stayed in power and that their policies were continued?

Mr. Clarke: I entirely agree with my hon. and learned Friend. Most of those who are responsible for the investment decisions that I have just mentioned themselves cite the economic climate that the Government have created as one of their principal reasons for coming here. Alarm is expressed nowadays about the activities of overseas companies looking to locate in this country only when, for example, Ford contemplates a major investment in Dundee and encounters the last echoes of the sort of attitude encouraged by the Opposition, with threats of curious industrial activity being imposed upon that company. There was resistance to its sensible proposal for a single union agreement.

My right hon. Friend's Budget will increase business confidence still further. By aiming for a substantial Budget surplus for a second successive year, my right hon. Friend has made clear his determination to pursue a prudent fiscal strategy. This confirms the priority that is given by the Government to the reduction of inflation. By doing so, they set the scene for continued steady growth in the economy in a way that does not put the achievements of the past nine years at risk. In its overall fiscal stance, this Budget is for the long haul. This is just what is needed for business and for wealth creation if we are to take still further the change in attitudes and improved performance.

This Budget is also a Budget for enterprise in its detailed measures. First and foremost, the increase in the tax thresholds of double the rate of inflation and the reduction of 2p in the basic rate of income tax are worth almost £5 to a married man on average earnings. There is nothing wrong with all working people keeping a larger share of increased prosperity. Labour always objects to ordinary working people taking a larger share of increased prosperity via tax reductions. The Labour party consistently prefers a situation where each section or group fights for a particularly large share of prosperity, for themselves, as on the picket lines at Land Rover or wherever, where they prefer the nation's wealth to be divided up.

The abolition of the four highest rates of personal tax had become necessary if Britain was to retain her hard-won status as an enterprise economy. The energy generated by these lower rates will produce more wealth for the whole country, from which the whole community will benefit. We last reduced the higher rates of taxation nine years ago. At that time, our tax rates of up to 60 per cent. were among the most competitive in the industrial countries; but the world has moved on since our reductions of nine years ago. Our top rates of taxation were becoming once more among the highest in the developed world, until my right hon. Friend's Budget.

Not only have the United States reduced their higher levels of taxation, but a Labour Government in Australia have recently cut their higher rates. A Labour Government in New Zealand too have recently cut their higher rates — if the hon. Member for Dagenham (Mr. Gould) is tempted to return there. In my opinion, because there is plainly a prevailing mood throughout the world that is in favour of getting rid of punitive levels of taxation, most of western Europe will follow this fashion in the next few years.

The entrepreneurs and managers who will benefit from such changes in fiscal policy are vital to our economic success. Again, in modern conditions, more and more leading managers, scientists and engineers are becoming internationally mobile, and they are not tied to this country. We cannot isolate our tax structure realistically any longer from those of our competitors, even if we wish to do so.

Changes in capital taxes will be of particular benefit to business. The exclusion from capital gains tax of all gains dating from before 1982 will enable companies of all sizes to realise their gains on assets that were acquired before then. This will release substantial amounts of capital for more productive new investment. In addition, the extension of capital gains tax retirement relief to half of all gains between £125,000 and £500,000 will be of major help to proprietors of small businesses wishing to provide for their old age. It will make it particularly easy for such proprietors to hand on their businesses to the next generation as a going concern, which also helps the creation of an enterprise economy.

This is the Budget of a Government who understand the fundamental importance of enterprise and wealth creation to all of the other objectives that we have for the whole community, for our public services and everything else of importance to us. The overall fiscal policy, and the economic strategy of which it forms an integral part, is cautious; but within that prudent framework is a radical and reforming tax package that complements the earlier reform of corporate taxation, whose benefits we now see in the performance of industry. Indeed, changes in personal taxation in particular will continue to change the attitudes and actions of those individuals who do most to make the economy dynamic.

The community as a whole benefits from the creation of a more prosperous economy. That fundamental truth is sometimes questioned, albeit subconsciously, by some on the Opposition Benches. In my opinion, it is not true that if a person becomes wealthier, he necessarily becomes less generous. [Interruption.] It is certainly not true that, if a society becomes more prosperous, it becomes meaner. The Labour party frequently tries to claim that the greater prosperity of the past few years has been somehow divisive or has created a meaner spirit in this country. There is no evidence for that. Indeed, my right hon. Friend's concessions will make it even easier for charitable giving and will, among other things, reinforce the huge increase in charitable giving that the British public have been undertaking in recent years. If we look at the state of society today, and if the Labour party's fundamental message is that it does not like the new, healthier, Conservative society because it is less attractive than the poorer one over which it presided, it has a rosy recollection of conditions in society when it was in office.

Let us look at how wealth was created and shared out by the Labour Government in the 1970s, applying Labour principles. What happened then was that every section of society took it in turn to strike against the other. Every section of society took it in turn to deprive the wider public of transport, of heat, of essential services. There was a nasty mean streak in British society in the 1970s, as people tried to get their 17 per cent. increase over and above the 16 per cent. increase of their neighbours.

The Labour party has not understood that today's society is not only a more prosperous but a more attractive one, and that reducing the level of taxation to redistribute greater prosperity to those who have earned it is the way to stimulate further growth of an altogether more prosperous and better society. Not only are we creating wealth; we are re-acquiring confidence. This is a one-nation country that now believes in itself again. The two Conservative Chancellors that we have had in the past nine years have played a major part in that, not least my right hon. Friend with the most successful Budget produced so far, which he gave us last Tuesday.

5.40 pm

Mr. Robin Cook (Livingston): The Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster and Minister of Trade and Industry has addressed the House for three quarters of an hour, preening himself and his Government on their economic record. The stream of consciousness was broken only for one passage in which he had the sheer gall to describe Opposition Members as being complacent. We had nothing but 39 minutes of complacency in the rest of his speech. If the right hon. and learned Gentleman wants to talk about complacency, no innocent listener to his speech could have imagined that he was a member of a Government who had managed to combine a surplus in oil with a deficit on visible trade—an achievement that they share only with Iraq and Venezuela—and had managed to achieve between 1979 and 1987 zero growth in manufacturing output—a distinction that they share with Malawi and Barbados. I grant the right hon. and learned Gentleman, magnanimously and generously, that yesterday's figures mean that we have now pulled ahead of Malawi and Barbados.

On investment, the figures from the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development, published earlier this month, show that on all capital formation we are currently 21st out of the 24 member states of OECD. We are producing less fuel than Poland, fewer motor cars than Spain—and all this against a background of unemployment still more than double the level that the Government inherited. Even when measured by all the fiddles that they have used, all 23 of them, the Government still cannot bring that down to less than the figure that they inherited.

The right hon. and learned Gentleman represents this to the House as a unique economic success. It is unique certainly; as a success, it is rather less recognisable. To be fair though, the Chancellor did not invite us to judge his Budget by its contribution to commerce and industry and business. His Budget did absolutely nothing for business and industry, unless we count the business expansion scheme for Rachmans setting up for the first time in the centre of London. Perhaps it was the absence of any scheme for business or industry which led the right and learned Gentleman, wisely, to refer to the Budget as little as possible in the course of his speech. It certainly was not the need for brevity that caused him to leave out the references. It would, therefore, be unfair to judge the Budget by what it has done for business and industry.

Let us judge the Budget by the standard that the Chancellor himself set for it. He invited our applause because he had presented a balanced Budget. Let us then judge it as such. I am bound to say that to myself and to many of my hon. Friends this Budget does not appear balanced at all. It is a lopsided, cock-eyed, warped Budget. The Chancellor had £4 billion surplus this year to spend; he will apparently have a full £6 billion to play with next year. All of that sum he chose to put into private pockets; none of it did he put into the public services.

That is not a balanced judgment at all; it is a triumph of prejudice and dogma over common sense. It is a Budget for private affluence and public squalor; and nowhere do we see public squalor more clearly under this Government than in the National Health Service.

It is, of course, charming to have the right hon. and learned Gentleman speaking to us, and we are grateful to him for being able to spare us so much time, but the member of the Cabinet that the Opposition really wanted to hear, trying to defend the Budget, was the Secretary of State for Social Services. What we wanted to hear from him was how he defended the balance of this Budget—one that gives more to the rich but no more to the Health Service and even less to social security.

The Secretary of State for Social Services has not even been allowed near the Dispatch Box—something that we might have expected from the earlier proceedings of the House this week. On Monday we had a debate, when the House guillotined the Minister's own Social Security Bill, in which he did not take part. Yesterday he produced what, by any standards, was a major statement on community health care on which he made no statement to the House and held no press conference for the public. We are, therefore, familiar with the pattern that today he is silent again, and even absent from the Chamber. No doubt, another engagement was arranged for him in case he was tempted to interrupt.

We can conclude only one thing from his absence: that the National Health Service, in the Government's judgment, is adequately funded. We are obliged to conclude this because the Budget contained not a single extra penny for the Health Service.

Let me say straight away that I understand the Government's problems in identifying the financial difficulties of the National Health Service. We know that they have problems in identifying these difficulties because, in the December statement, the Minister for Health electrified the House with the observation that the Government's monitoring arrangements had identified a cash shortage in the Health Service. That was after six weeks in which every television bulletin had identified a cash shortage.

I regret to say that it would appear that the Government's monitoring arrangements have gone on the blink again. Yesterday, in the course of the debate, there was some play on the part of the Chief Secretary to invite my right hon. Friend the shadow Chancellor to intervene in his speech. As challenges appear to be the name of the game of this particular debate, let me issue a challenge to right hon. and hon. Gentlemen on the Treasury Bench. I challenge them—and I will willingly give way if they can produce one—to name a single organisation representing the people who work in the National Health Service, who administer the National Health Service, who represent the consumers of the National Health Service, which shares their view that the Health Service is adequately funded and that priority should be given to tax cuts. There is not one.

Yesterday my right hon. and learned Friend the Member for Monklands, East (Mr. Smith) referred to the British Medical Association survey, but he could equally well have referred to similar statements from any of half a dozen royal colleges — from the Association of Community Health Councils of England and Wales, the National Association of Health Authorities in England and Wales and the Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy, whose survey only a fortnight ago identified the £400 million of bad debts of the health authorities, which they cannot pay and which must go forward into next year.

Even those Conservatives who have listened to those who work in the Health Service have come to the same conclusion as the workers. We have the Conservative majority on the Select Committee for Social Services, which came out in support of a request for an immediate transfusion of £1,000 million. Our absent Secretary of State responded immediately by describing that figure as arbitrary, which produced the second report of the Select Committee, with the stinging observation:

"The only arbitrary aspect of our recommendation for £1 billion was that it was less than the £1·896 billion shortfall that we had identified."

Yesterday, the Chief Secretary informed the House that we were spending more on the Health Service.

Mr. Jeremy Hanley (Richmond and Barnes) rose——

Mr. Cook: Let me finish this passage and then I will give way to the hon. Gentleman.

Let us look at how much more the Government are spending. I put down a parliamentary question to the Secretary of State a couple of months ago, inviting him to express the required increase in expenditure on the Health Service, applying the pay and prices rate of inflation. That is a fair test. We know that it is fair because, after only a couple of weeks, the Government used the same rate of inflation as a test of the amount by which they should increase prescription charges. Prescription charges had to go up by 8 per cent., they said, because that was the rate of inflation in the price of medicines. If that test is fair for deciding how much prescription charges should rise, it is fair for deciding by how much the funding of the Health Service should increase. The answer showed that since 1982 the total increase in spending on the Health Service was a niggardly £50 million—half of 1 per cent. That is why the Health Service is in crisis today.

Mr. Hanley: Will the hon. Gentleman tell the House in how many Budgets between 1974 and 1979 the Labour Government announced increased expenditure on the Health Service?

Mr. Cook: In the last Labour Budget, in 1978, the Chancellor announced a significant increase in the health budget. If the hon. Gentleman intended to help his hon. Friends, he would have been wise to consult them in advance. They would have pulled him down before he made precisely the contrast between the way that previous Labour Chancellors behaved and the way in which the present Chancellor has run away from the real needs of the Health Service. Because he has done so, operations are being cancelled at a rate of 300 a week, 20 cancer patients on the waiting list for operations in the west midlands die every month and beds are closing at three times the rate of the 1970s. That is why, on six separate occasions in October, women in labour had to be taken from central London by ambulance to Brighton, because that was the nearest place with an empty maternity bed.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The hon. Gentleman has complacently defended his Government's record by relying on 1978. Let me remind him of what the president of the Royal College of Nursing said on 6 June 1978 to the then Secretary of State for Social Services:

"I can tell the Secretary of State what is wrong with the Health Service. It is basically suffering from a shortage of cash with which to train and employ nurses and other personnel."

She said that those involved in the service were "at breaking point". Before the hon. Gentleman calmly claims that Labour financed it properly in 1978, he should recall the strikes, crisis and turmoil that his party left behind in 1979.

Mr. Cook: I welcome that interruption. The reason why the previous Labour Chancellor was quoted yesterday by my right hon. and learned Friend the Member for Monklands, East, and today by me, is that we were reminded specifically of that precedent by members of the Royal College of Nursing, who drew it to our attention with plaudits and warm, nostalgic affection, in comparison with their treatment under the present Government.

If hon. Members wish to talk about nurses, let us do so. There are now fewer nurses in the wards. We know that because we have seen the Government's submission to the pay review body. Their own evidence admits that there are now 6,000 fewer nurses in general nursing wards than in 1982—not that there were enough to go around in 1982. An article in the Nursing Times and Nursing Mirror in that year stated:

"We follow with a brief tour of the hospital and I note again how easy it is to construct buildings, yet fail to provide the staff, particularly nurses."

The author of that article was a councillor Mrs. Currie, chairman of central Birmingham district health authority. I took the precaution of looking up central Birmingham to find out how well it is doing now that councillor Mrs. Currie is Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Health and Social Security. I can report that the authority now has a shortage of 350 nurses, and the number of beds for children has halved since the general election. As a result, consultant surgeons are being told to take every seventh week off. They are told, "Go away. Go to the golf course. Take the family to the seaside. Do anything but operate and involve us in extra cost." Where is the cost-effectiveness there?

Lest it be thought that central Birmingham has fallen into neglect because its former chairman is now concentrating on the affairs of southern Derbyshire, I can also quote from last month's Burton Daily Mail, which reports:

"Local health chiefs are predicting the worst cash crisis in the history of Southern Derbyshire Health Authority . . . The only hope may be to get out the prayer mats", according to the district treasurer.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett (Pembroke): So that we can keep the nursing position in perspective, perhaps the hon. Gentleman would like to note the international comparisons. He will find that there are 34·5 nurses per 10,000 of the population in West Germany, 51·4 per 10,000 in France, 46·9 per 10,000 in Japan, 54·3 per 10.000 in the United States of America and 84·2 per 10,000 in this country.

Mr. Cook: I suggest that the hon. Gentleman gets in touch with whoever put the Minister in touch with the Royal College of Nursing, because that person can put him right on the figures. The British figures count all nurses — auxiliary, state-enrolled and student nurses — and weigh them against people of graduate experience in foreign countries. If the hon. Gentleman bothers to go around the hospitals in central London, he will find that it is the student nurses who are keeping those hospitals open.

Yesterday, as we debated the Budget, Bloomsbury district health authority debated its budget for next year. It was a very different story. There is no surplus in that health authority; there is not even a balanced budget. The authority faces a £5 million deficit next year, and the only way that it can see of closing the gap is to shut its hospitals to all but life-and-death emergencies.

To wipe out the deficits of central Birmingham, south Derbyshire and Bloomsbury would take less than half of what the Chancellor gave away yesterday in capital gains tax alone. The deficits of all the district health authorities in England could be wiped out with one third of what he gave away in capital transfer tax. There are jobs in this. Three quarters of the expenditure on the Health Service goes on staff. The Minister lamented the passing of labour-intensive industry, but there is still one labour-intensive industry around — the Health Service. There is no surer way of creating jobs than investing in the Health Service.

That means not just jobs for Health Service workers. On Friday at a conference of the National Association of Health Authorities in England and Wales, a staggering figure was produced. It was revealed that the backlog of maintenance and repair work in our hospitals is now £4,000 million. Tackling that backlog would mean contracts for the private sector; it would mean real jobs in construction and labouring; it would mean profits for the small business man — the very person whom the Goverment claim to encourage. There is an opportunity to tackle unemployment there.

I understand that the Government defend tax handouts on the lofty ground of freedom: that people should be free to spend their money as they choose. Poll after poll shows that the people of Britain want their money put into the Health Service. The NOP found that 95 per cent. wanted more funds for the Health Service. The MORI poll found that 79 per cent. wanted it. Monday's "You and Yours" programme on the BBC found that only 1 per cent. supported tax cuts before the NHS.

That is the sort of result that gets the BBC into trouble with the Government. But that is how the people of Britain want their money spent. They have the sense to know — unlike the Chancellor — that it is no good getting a couple of pounds in your hand today if you have no hospital tomorrow. The NHS is a cost-effective service that provides value for money, and it is time that the Government provided it with money to the value of the service that it provides.

In part, I must admit that the Health Service is so cost-effective because it is held together by low pay. That brings us to the other measure of the imbalance of this Budget — the gap between the rich and the poor. I am grateful to the hon. Member for Derby, North (Mr. Knight), who has a question for answer today on the rates of tax among the Group of Seven. It shows that, after the Budget, Britain has the lowest top rate of tax in the group. It also has the highest starting rate of tax in the group.

This is a low-tax country only for some people. We know how well the rich have done out of the Budget. We know that Sir Ralph Halpern, knighted by this Government, got £265,000 out of the Budget. When the Minister tells Opposition Members to warn the trade unions that we should not pay ourselves more than we can afford, he should suggest that to the Chancellor who is giving £265,000 to Sir Ralph Halpern. I hope that Conservative Members had the sense to celebrate with gin and tonic. The Government put up the duty on beer but not on gin.

Last autumn in the uprating statement the Secretary of State for Social Services froze child benefit. The reason he gave for doing that was that child benefit was not well targeted. He said that the problem with child benefit was that it did not help only those who needed it most. References were made to the Duchess of Westminster. We were told that child benefit could not be increased by 30p because the Duchess of Westminster would get it as well. As a result of freezing child benefit the Government saved £120 million. In his Budget the Chancellor gave away £270 million to people in the top rate bands. That money was solely and entirely targeted to give help to those who need it least. Why is it wrong to give the Duchess of Westminster an increase of 30p but entirely right to slash the top rate of income and inheritance tax which will give her thousands of pounds?

Each person on the top tax rate has gained, on average, £3,300 from Tuesday's tax cut. Under the new social security scales, that is more than a single parent with two young children will get to live on for a year. That brings us to the real contrast in the Government's policy — the contrast between cuts in taxes in March and cuts in welfare benefits in April.

Yesterday the Chief Secretary to the Treasury claimed that there were very few losers. That was certainly an advance on his performance on "Newsnight" the previous night when he said that there were no losers. The Government are putting up the package of social security changes under the heading, "Shouldn't you know the facts?" Taking that heading entirely seriously, let us try to explain to Conservative Members the facts about the gainers and losers from the Government's package. First, there are some spectacular losers, such as the one that my hon. Friend the Member for Bristol, South (Ms. Primarolo) told us about on Monday. My hon. Friend has a constituent suffering from multiple sclerosis. Under the new rules that constituent will lose her entire entitlement to social security and will, therefore, lose £48 a week. She is losing £48 a week while someone on four times average earnings is gaining £48 a week from the Budget.

The irony is that the people who lose most are those who are in work, because the cuts are focused on housing benefit. A family of four paying average rent are worse off on any income between £60 and £140 a week. When we put that to the Minister for Social Security and the Disabled a week or two ago, he said that it was a purely hypothetical, fanciful example. When pressed to say why it was purely hypothetical and fanciful, he said that it was because we assumed the family were paying average rent. I plead guilty, because we were assuming that. If they were paying more than average rent the losses that they would incur would be even greater.

There is a link here with the National Health Service. We cannot have a healthy population when children are being brought up in poverty. The best promoters of disease are low income and bad housing, and the cuts in April will drive more children further into poverty. Yesterday the Chief Secretary said that 88 per cent. of people were no worse off. That 88 per cent. includes 2·25 million who will not get a penny more in April and who will, therefore, be worse off in real terms. Of the remainder, another 2·25 million will get a cash increase that is lower than the rate of inflation. Collectively, that means that 4·5 million households face a decline in their standard of living in real terms. Even that flatters the figures, because it takes no account of the abolition of single payments.

On Monday the Under-Secretary of State for Health and Social Security told the House that my constituents will benefit from the social fund to the tune of £51 per claimant. That is the allocation to my constituency, and I concede that the figure is correct. Two years ago the expenditure on single payments in my constituency was £154 per claimant. The new figure represents a cut of £2 per week per claimant in my constituency.

I shall conclude with two stark contrasts. This Budget will be remembered for what it does for the super-rich. The top rate of tax that anyone can now pay is 40 per cent. The funny thing is that that cut to 40 per cent. is taking place at a time when more people on benefits will have to face a higher rate of deduction.

Dr. Norman A. Godman (Greenock and Port Glasgow): Is it not the case that with the social fund we now have public provision for money-lending and the state system for money-lending will take place within local DHSS offices? The only difference between the state money-lending service and the loan sharks who infest many of the schemes in the west of Scotland is that this heartless, inhumane Government offer no-interest loans.

Mr. Cook: As the previous Secretary of State observed, the social fund is to be a banking facility for the poor. Of course, it differs from other banking facilities because the bank manager is guaranteed repayments. He will make the deductions at source from a subsistence level income that will, logically, leave families with children on an income that is below subsistence level.

Yesterday I interrupted the Chief Secretary to tell him that the number of people on benefit who would face a deduction of over 70 per cent. would double in April. The Chief Secretary said that he suspected that I had got my figures wrong. It is quite likely that the figures are wrong. I confess that I do not have a high degree of confidence in them, because I got them in a parliamentary answer from the Government. The figures show that the number of people facing a deduction of over 70 per cent. will increase from just over 250,000 to 550,000. That is a clear coincidence because Britain has 600,000 top tax payers, all of whom have seen their tax rate fall in the Budget. They are to be weighed against the 550,000 welfare benefit claimants, some of the poorest people in our country, who face a deduction in their benefit of over 70 per cent. This is indeed redistribution with a vengeance.

The Budget marks a massive shift in the burden of taxation from the rich to the poor and a massive shift in benefits, both by way of tax handouts and in terms of welfare benefits, from the poor to the rich. The Government have mastered the advice of Ivan Boesky who said:

"You do not need to feel guilty about being greedy".

I am sorry to say that I have not yet achieved that state of moral anaesthesia. I find it difficult to relish these tax cuts.

Yesterday the Chief Secretary said that the tax cuts were not just of value to the super-rich. I accept that. I have a personal involvement, as has every hon. Member, in the tax handouts. To my embarrassment, I find myself a gainer from the tax cuts because my income tax will go down by about £6 a week.

Mr. Frank Haynes (Ashfield): Will my hon. Friend give way?

Mr. Cook: Perhaps my hon. Friend would let me finish.

Next year I will benefit from the poll tax when it is introduced in Scotland. The poll tax demand on me and on my wife will be £600 less than our current payment in rates. Therefore, we will benefit from the Budget and the poll tax. When I contemplate those benefits I do not relish them. I feel a sense of shame, because I expect to pay my fair share for public services. I am conscious of the poverty of some of my constituents whom I met this winter, such as the unemployed family of six who during the winter had to live on cold meals because they could not get a single payment to replace their cooker. The single mother of an incontinent child spent this winter hand-washing sheets because she cannot get a single payment to buy a washing machine. A constituent with a curved spine spent most of the winter lying in bed because the reclining chair is broken and she cannot get a single payment to replace it. That is the true face of poverty in Britain today. By the way, I do indeed make donations in my constituency; I do give to welfare organisations to help my constituents. But I do not believe that my constituents should depend on charity. I believe that they should get that benefit as of right.

The Government have chosen to cut the top tax rate rather than help people in poverty. They have chosen to cut inheritance taxes instead of helping the Health Service. This is not a balanced Budget. It is a dangerously, disturbingly unhinged Budget which is an affront to decency, to justice and to fairness. Long after the Minister's and my names are forgotten, the Budget of 1988 will be remembered. It will be remembered as a Budget for the greedy paid for by the needy.

Mr. John Biffen (Shropshire, North): A Budget debate inevitably involves such a pervasive coverage of the economy that I think it appropriate to declare an interest. The Register of Members' Interests will show that I am a director of the engineering company, Glynwed.

Let me say at once that I hope I shall not trespass upon the privileges of privy councillorship and detain the House overlong, but there are two aspects of the debate upon which I wish to touch. The first is the tax changes themselves and the formidable challenge that they represent. The longer the debate proceeds, the more discomfort Opposition Members will suffer, because they will be confronted with the challenge of deciding whether they would reverse the changes if they were in government. Secondly, I wish to talk a little about the economy to which the Budget is related.

I accept the broad philosophy embodied in the tax changes, and I should like to make three comments upon them. First, the hon. Member for Livingston (Mr. Cook) talked about the Budget lasting in memory. I think it will. I think it will compare with the Budgets before 1910 and Lloyd George, and I think that my right hon. Friend the Chancellor will be remembered as much as anything for his reforms in husband and wife taxation. Those reforms will be long-lasting and will retain their message long after the arguments about the rates have settled into near consensus between the two sides of the House.

Secondly, from what I have just observed, it will be clear that I am not outraged by the concept of two rates of taxation, with the higher rate at 40 per cent. I understand that that is the New Zealand practice, so we have thus validated the hon. Member for Dagenham (Mr. Gould) as a reverse tax exile. But when the door is opened, it is amazing what opportunities begin to arise.

I commend to my hon. Friends the reinforced potency of the arguments of my hon. Friend the Member for Ealing, Acton (Sir G. Young) that a community charge could be based upon a graduated system—a proposition further reinforced by the fact that my right hon. Friend the Chancellor has not altered the national insurance rates. That is not to argue here the alternative to the present near-universal flat-rate poll charge unhappily proposed by my hon. Friends on the Treasury Bench but to say that my hon. Friend the Member for Acton has argued his case with great diligence. I think we shall hear more from him.

Thirdly, in the debates about the rates of higher tax, I am sure that a great deal will be said about alleged incentive. I use the word "alleged" because I am tolerably agnostic about all this; I am prepared to be open-minded in considering these matters. These things operate not only at the top end of the income scale but also at the lower end. We should not be so elitist in our view of lower-paid wage earners as to suppose that they do not have a shrewd idea where their marginal rates come into effect. My right hon. Friend said that he hoped we would proceed to a basic rate of 20p. I am not too happy about such long-range targets, which then begin to exercise a clammy embrace on all intermediate policy.

However, if we are to have that objective, it might be worth while for the House, in a calm and unpartisan way, to consider the possible reintroduction of the reduced rate band, for all its administrative difficulties. We should ensure that the question of thresholds, of the reduced rate band and of the basic rate can all be related to provide as effective a counter as we can achieve against the ravages of the black economy and the relationships between taxation and benefit. I hope that, when the noise of the battle that will take place over the next few weeks about hither rates of tax has abated, consideration can be given to that issue. However, there is enough reform in this Budget without bringing such considerations before the House on this occasion.

My second point concerns the economy more generally. Every Budget has its characteristics, and this Budget has been stuffed with drama. The Budget itself is heroic; as I said, I am sure that it will command comparison with Lloyd George. The reaction on the Floor of the House, to use the most moderate language, was vigorous. I understand that the sentiments were genuine, deeply felt and spontaneous, although I think we might just as well make our arrangements to avoid such exuberance.

Underlying everything was the prologue to the Budget which was an everyday story of Downing street folk. It seemed as though there were nuances of difference about how the exchange rate policy should be operated. We have put all that into happy context, although it would be a heroic judge indeed who decided that the issue might not yet arise again at some time in the future. I was very impressed by the way in which my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister dealt with the matter in her exchanges with the Leader of the Opposition. She said:

> "It is absolutely vital to try to keep inflation down." —[Official Report, 10 March 1988; Vol. 129, c. 517.]

I do not think that that was just philosophical reflection or abstract comment. I believe that my right hon. Friend believes that the price of stability is external vigilance and that there are plenty of signs in the economy to require us to be conscious of the inherent challenge of inflation.

I should like to detain the House for a moment on the subject of how such matters used to be regarded when inflation was much more to the forefront of our economic debates. Those who worshipped at the ancestral shrine of money supply were very much in vogue—born again—in the 1970s and early 1980s. Alas, my hon. Friend the Member for Wolverhampton, South-West (Mr. Budgen), who is still keeping alive that faith, is not here. I always think of him as a 1660 Prayer Book monetarist.

I have observed my right hon. Friend the Chancellor for a while. At first he seemed to have gone to series 3 and now I think he walks his monetary dog on the heath on Sunday mornings, so some of the more familiar landmarks for the debate have become somewhat fudged. It is undeniable that practically every monetary measure now shows a money supply expansion at an annual rate of something like 20 per cent. One or two odd measures, which tend to be picked up for their providential use, might falsify that proposition. When I see the Chancellor's Parliamentary Private Secretary scribbling down every word, I know this must be good stuff. If I had to summon experts, I should call Mr. Tim Congdom who knows that the Treasury still trembles a little at the thought of such representation.

I have managed to stumble through life without one day of formal education in economics, so I belong to the instinctive school of economics. My judgments are thus more prosaic, but none the less effective in that they are based on certain signs in the economy which I believe are trying to tell us something. At present, there is no shortage of such signs. The Bank of England says that lending is up by 20 per cent. over the year. The Building Societies Association and the Department of the Environment say that United Kingdom house prices generally are up by 16 per cent. and those in greater London by 24 per cent. over the year. The Department of Employment says that earnings are up by 8·5 per cent.

Anecdotal evidence comes from the Association of British Chambers of Commerce survey, which has just been published. The ABCC states:

> "Skill shortages in London, the Thames Valley and East Anglia have reached 'crisis levels', according to Chambers' 4th Quarter Regional Business Survey, published today (14 March) by the Association of British Chambers of Commerce. . .
> The ABCC was so concerned by the sheer scale of the skills gap reported by 8 of the 12 regions surveyed that it double-checked the figures."

Unemployment figures are probably the most difficult to interpret. I acknowledge that this is anecdotal, but my right hon. and learned Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster reported sharp falls in Whitehall-recorded unemployment. One way or another, all the signs point to a tightening in the labour market. Treasury statistics and privately collected statistics all show that we are uncomfortably close to an overheated economy in many selected but substantial areas. Rodney Lord wrote in The Times on 24 February:

"Last year saw the fastest growth in the economy since 1973, the year of Lord Barber's boom."

That was a very happy reference to Lord Barber. I hope that references to him will not become less happy as time goes on. Politically, I am a child of the late 1960s and early 1970s. I know what has been the consequence of inflation, socially and politically. I know how easy it is in the early stages to convince oneself that it will all come right and that there is no need to do too much about it.

On Tuesday, we had a very ambitious Budget which has understandably overlain this aspect of economic argument. How could the House do otherwise than feel passion about the proposed tax rates and the implied social and political judgments? Behind all this, however, lies the problem of the economy out there, which is showing signs of incipient inflation. I have to ask myself — it is a personal question and I do not invite my hon. Friends to share my agonies about it—whether tax cuts of such an ambitious character are the appropriate response to what I believe to be incipient inflationary conditions. I believe that their magnitude implies risk, about which I wish to register unease.

Therefore, if I can thread my way through the melée of Budget resolutions on Monday night, I shall vote specifically against the reduction of the basic rate of taxation by 2p. I shall do that as a personal gesture. It is not perverse, and it carries not an iota of disenchantment. Indeed, I applaud my right hon. Friend the Chancellor for what I believe to be an imaginative and thoroughly welcome Budget. But inflation is not a challenge to be put aside until more comfortable times when one can choose more politically congenial company. I shall make my judgment and expect to be judged by it.

Mr. William Ross (Londonderry, East): The right hon. Member for Shropshire, North (Mr. Biffen) reminded us of the words uttered by the hon. Member for Wolverhampton, South-West (Mr. Budgen) yesterday. I wish to remind the House of something else that the hon. Gentleman said. He pointed out that the present Administration were elected first to control and then to eliminate inflation. Like the right hon. Member for Shropshire, North, I detest inflation as the theft of people's work, their thrift and their efforts to provide for the future, and I applaud any Government who succeed in bringing it down.

The Government were also elected on a pledge to reduce Government expenditure, but that pledge seems to have vanished into the mists of time and to have been replaced by calls for greater efficiency in the way in which the expenditure is used. To give credit where credit is due, the Government have brought inflation down to 4 or 5 per cent. for the past several years. As that seems to have been deliberate policy, I wonder when they intend to squeeze the last 5 per cent. out of the economy. If they were letting it run at that rate to ease the financial pain of those who overreached themselves in the late 1970s, that need has passed and it is time to bring inflation down still further to give more protection to those on fixed incomes who are hardest hit by inflation.

When I first came to the House, the air was full of arguments about the public sector borrowing requirement. The Chancellor told us the other day that that problem had been relegated to history. I hope that he is right, but I am not sure that he is. We must see what happens next year. I was pleased that the Chancellor used some of the surplus to repay debt, as the Prime Minister put it. I do not wish to hurt anyone's feelings by talking about selling the family silver, but if the family silver has to be sold, the proceeds should certainly be used to reduce the overdraft. If that has been the case to some extent in the past year, so much the better. Page 58 of the Red Book shows that 10 per cent. of Government expenditure goes to pay interest charges on this country's existing debts.

It is perhaps not a fair analogy, but if I were running a household and constantly had to use a large part of my income to pay the interest on my overdraft, I would expect my bank manager to be very worried. Over a long period, balanced or surplus budgets should gradually reduce interest payments. That too is money saved, although I have not heard any economists making that comment. If I am wide of the mark, I hope that the Minister will take this up when he replies to the debate. As I foolishly took on a very early morning engagement in Northern Ireland tomorrow, I must apologise for the fact that I shall not be here for the winding-up speeches, but I shall read with great care the Official Report of the Minister's response.

If the Government wished to make massive tax cuts, they were wise to do so on this occasion. If one does not get round to doing it in the first Budget after an election, it will certainly not be done in the last Budget before the next election, so this is indeed the time to do it. The Government have, by so doing, got rid of what is bound to be most offensive to their principal political opponents at the earliest stage of this Parliament and taken all the flak that will come in order to get it over and done with.

I quibble with the statement that we are down to two levels of income tax. We still have differing rates of national insurance contributions, which can be considered part and parcel of income tax. If they are taken into account, we still have five or six rates. Perhaps the Government made a serious error in allowing national insurance contributions to cut off, rather than carrying them through all levels of income. That would have diminished, to some extent, large tax decreases for the highest paid, and made them rather more acceptable to many people in the country.

Given that the Government have made a commitment to get income tax down to 20 per cent., we can look forward to certain adjustments in coming years, with the Government perhaps tying together national insurance contributions and the basic tax rate, so that there will be a reduction in one and an increase in the other. In that way, when we get down to a basic rate of 20 per cent., people will pay a basic rate of 25 or 26 per cent. in real terms, taking national insurance contributions into account. Most people would like that, as they would know where they stood.

The Government must also face the fact that the cut of 20 percentage points in the top rate of income tax is equivalent to a massive pay increase for people on very high incomes. I have been a Member since 1974, and I remember endless rows about people receiving huge pay increases of £10,000 or £12,000 a year, so as to put a few hundred pounds in their pockets at the end of it all. Can we be assured that there will not be such increases for those people this or next year? They have already had their 20 per cent., and not many people in the country will get 20 per cent. — mighty few will have 20 per cent. more in real terms in their pay packets.

It was all very well for Governments to give these massive increases when inflation raged at 15 or 20 per cent., or even 26 or 27 per cent. But now inflation is down to 5 per cent., and all the chickens that were let loose in those days of high inflation by those paper increases have come home to roost. I appreciate that this Administration were not responsible for that inflation — the Labour Government were — but the Government must take account of the problem. We cannot forget the consequences of that inflation. I abhor allowing inflation to get out of hand to that extent.

In the coming months and years, more thought must be given to, and more action taken for, people who are truly unemployed — there are many of them — and whose weekly income is tiny. They suffer real hardship. My hon. Friends have objected strongly to many of the things that the Government are bringing into operation in April. I hope that, although those changes will be rushed through now, they are only the beginning of a serious look at how to care for those who are unemployed, chronically ill and unable to work. There is real hardship in that section of the community. We should recognise that, and do our best to help them.

The Chief Secretary told us — truthfully — that lower taxes create jobs. In the long term, provided that we manage to defeat terrorism — there has not been much evidence of that lately — that will be of great benefit to Northern Ireland whenever foreign firms, especially the Americans, are looking around for places in which to put their money. Such firms will compare Northern Ireland not with Scotland, Wales and England but with what else can be found on the island of Ireland.

The Republic's corporation tax was reduced this year from 50 per cent. to 47 per cent., going down to 43 per cent. So even Mr. Haughey, who has not yet been mentioned, is following the taxation policy of the Government. The rate of income tax in the Republic, which a comprehensive article in The Economist recently pointed out was driving the best people out of the Republic, still starts at 35 per cent., rising to 58 per cent. The comparison between the Republic and Northern Ireland will be wholly to the advantage of Northern Ireland when people look for places in which to site their factories and jobs in the future. I welcome that, and I hope that the Government will maintain that gap for a long time.

Finally, I refer to the enormous help that reforms in recent Budgets have given to capital taxation, especially for small family-owned firms and, above all, for owner-occupier farmers in places such as Northern Ireland. The teeth of capital transfer tax were drawn when its name was changed to inheritance tax 14 or 15 years ago. This year, the re-basing of the capital gains tax from 1965 to 1982 will have an astonishing effect on farmers' liability to the tax. In 1982-83, and just before, land prices were at their highest and if anything they have declined since then. That means that many small owner-occupiers and family farms will wind up paying no tax on that score. I hope that that is a long step on the road to the end of that tax.

The increase was a paper increase in value, which the person concerned never got his hands on. The farmer who worked all his life to build up his farm to a reasonable size and left it to his son or daughter was leaving a burden of debt to them that they found it difficult to meet. It is welcome that the Government have got rid of that devastating burden on the agricultural community. These two taxes have been the cause of much heartbreak in small family firms and in the farming community. I am glad that they have been so diminished in scope.

Although we do not like some parts of the Budget very much, there is much in it that we welcome and I am glad that the Government are trying to reduce taxes. That can only be good for the economy in the long run.

Mr. John Butterfill (Bournemouth, West): My right hon. Friend the Member for Shropshire, North (Mr. Biffen) said that he grew up as a political child of the 1960s. I, by contrast, was probably a political infant at that stage. I joined the Conservative party in 1957 and my abiding recollection of our economic performance since the last war has been our relative economic decline compared with our western competitor nations. Not until the Government came to power and my right hon. Friend became Prime Minister was that economic decline correctly arrested.

My right hon. Friend the Member for Shropshire, North was clearly concerned about the growth of money supply. His speech echoed many of the fears expressed yesterday in our debate by my right hon. Friend the Member for Chesham and Amersham (Sir I. Gilmour). He drew a parallel between the expansion of the money supply today and that of the early 1970s, at the time when my right hon. Friend the Member for Old Bexley and Sidcup (Mr. Heath) was Prime Minister. That parallel is badly drawn, although it reflects the concern about broad money, M3, and the growth of debt.

The circumstances applying today are different from those applied in, for example, 1972. I have taken the trouble to look at the economic background to the 1972 Budget and should like to draw some of those comparisons to the attention of the House. It is true that in 1972 the productivity of British industry was rising by about 5 per cent., compared with a 7 per cent. rise today, but it is also true that unit labour costs were also rising, whereas today they are falling significantly, and have been falling for some time — by 20 per cent. since 1980. It is also true that our gross domestic product was growing in 1972. Indeed, in 1971 it had grown by more than 1·5 per cent., but that compares with 3·5 per cent. today, using the non-oil figure. That shows that we are now growing much faster than our western competitors whereas in 1972 we were growing considerably more slowly. Similarly, business investment is up today by 9 per cent., but was falling in the period immediately prior to the 1972 Budget. Non-oil exports rose — we must take oil out of the equation — by 5 per cent. in 1971-72, but are now rising by 7 per cent. Today our share of world trade is increasing faster than ever. However, more important than anything else, we need to consider the public sector borrowing requirement. Only now, in this last Budget, have we achieved a balanced Budget and a debt repayment, rather than a borrowing requirement.

All those circumstances are materially different from those that prevailed in 1972. I advise my right hon. Friends the Members for Chesham and Amersham and for Shorpshire, North that, although it is right to draw parallels with the past — how else can we learn — the fears that they expressed are no longer as valid as they would have been in the early 1970s. If we do have a growth in the money supply, that is a reflection of an underlying healthy economy, which is expanding, rather than a reflection of one that is incipiently unhealthy.

I should like to pay tribute to the amazing reforms that have been brought about in our economy by the present Chancellor of the Exchequer. Those reforms have been striking. We have had a growth in home ownership, a wider ownership of shares, and reforms in company taxation. Those have been followed this year by the very important reform of the taxation of married couples. I know that that reform will be widely welcomed in my constituency. Indeed, that is perceived throughout the country as having been long overdue.

My constituency is one in which there is a considerable housing shortage at the moment. Many people are moving into Bournemouth from the north, seeking employment, because we have a thriving and buoyant economy in south-east Dorset, in which many people from all over the country would like to participate. Therefore, I am especially pleased that my right hon. Friend has proposed to include the provision of assured housing schemes within the business expansion scheme. That will contribute materially to the provision of rented housing for those who would otherwise be unable to afford it. It is an excellent use of the business expansion scheme which has done so many good things elsewhere in the economy. One hopes that that will carry forward into housing. It is an innovative measure that I heartily applaud.

My constituency also has a large number of small businesses. I know that they will be particularly pleased that the Chancellor has been able to raise the VAT threshold to the maximum now permitted by the European Economic Community. One can only hope that negotiations within the Community in the near future will enable that ceiling to be raised still further. I am sure that my right hon. Friend will maintain his efforts in that direction.

Small businesses will also be particularly pleased at the reliefs given in capital gains tax, especially those relating to retirement relief. That will enable many small family businesses to continue to thrive and not suffer the penalties that they have in the past. It will enable the people who have built up those businesses to enjoy the fruits of their lifetime of labour. Small businesses will no doubt also welcome the reductions in the small business rate of corporation tax to 25 per cent.

I should like to turn to a particular problem that affects my constituency with its high number of elderly people who have retired and who have relatively low incomes. Many people in my constituency retired on what might have appeared to be good pensions some years ago and bought small homes, but they now find that the effect of inflation over the years has eroded the value of their pensions or savings. They now find that they can no longer afford to enjoy the standard of living that they thought that they might be able to. My right hon. Friend the Chancellor will no doubt be aware that to address that problem I have proposed that annuity schemes secured upon the home of an elderly person should be afforded additional tax relief by allowing the interest to be rolled up and repaid after death if a mortgage is taken out to purchase such a scheme. That kind of proposal has met with a good deal of support in the House. The early-day motion that I have tabled, which recommends such a scheme, has now been signed by 233 hon. Members. That illustrates the degree of support in the House for the proposal.

There is no doubt that such a proposal would give a significant advantage to elderly people, and especially to those in my constituency. I shall give an example of the difference that such tax relief would make. If we consider an elderly widow, aged 75, living in a house that is worth about £100,000—that may sound an awful lot, but it is not a great deal of money in my constituency, given the inflation in property values, and it is certainly not a great deal in London today — if that lady were to borrow £30,000 on the security of that property to purchase an annuity, under current tax law that annuity would yield her a net spendable income of £1,908 per year. If my right hon. Friend were to permit the interest to be rolled up while allowing tax relief to be given, that income would more than double to £4,120 per year.

We must make a choice when considering the position of elderly people, many of whom have worked hard throughout their lives, but whose savings are locked up in their sole residence. We must decide what we want them to do with the savings that they have worked so hard to accumulate over their lifetimes. Do we wish those savings simply to be passed on to their heirs, affording no benefit to the elderly person, or do we think that we should make arrangements that would enable the elderly to make some use of those savings during their lifetimes? It seems enlightened self-interest as far as we are concerned to do the latter. If we do not, it may well be that the incomes of those elderly people will fall to the point where we may be obliged to offer them support — as we often do — through housing benefit or income support. Therefore, enabling them to remain independent in their own homes is to the advantage of the community as a whole and also enables them to do what they would most like — to remain independent and to stay where they have chosen to retire.

Such a scheme poses certain problems. My right hon. Friend the Financial Secretary has written to me only recently outlining some of the difficulties that will arise if we pursue such a scheme. He has told me that the principal difficulties that he envisages are, first, the problem of a level playing field between annuity schemes and other similar schemes, for example, where the elderly person sells part of his home or part of the equity in his home to purchase an annuity. Any improvement or reform that we make in that respect will inevitably change the levels in the playing field in one direction or another, although that should not necessarily deter us from going down that route.

My right hon. Friend has also pointed out that the accumulation of interest would lead to a diminution of the estate of the annuitant and, therefore, a loss to the annuitant's heirs. However, most heirs whom I know would be happy to accept a reduction in the value of what they might receive upon the death of a relative if it meant that that relative could live in much greater comfort.

My hon. Friend has also pointed out that this would not target particularly well on poorer pensioners, because only those with relatively large house values could afford to borrow a significant sum to purchase an annuity. If interest is not paid but rolled up, the accumulated debt would, over a period of years, grow larger and it would be necessary to restrict quite severely the proportion of value of a home that was given by way of loan. To some extent, that is true. Indeed, it is inevitable that those people with larger value homes could afford to borrow larger amounts of money on them but, nevertheless, it would be valuable for all the elderly to be able to borrow in that way.

It does not necessarily follow that home values have a direct correlation with income. Indeed, in many cases, it is clear that they have not. Many people from all over the country retire to my constituency. When they retire, their income may be high, but 10 years later their income may be relatively low. However, at the same time, house prices in my constituency have risen enormously over the past 10 years, so it may well be possible for people to have high value homes but low incomes. The final point made by my right hon. Friend—this is a more valid point—is that, if annuitants are encouraged to take out such schemes when they are relatively young, and if they live a long time, the debt will become an unacceptable proportion of the value of the home. That is true and such annuity schemes would, therefore, be unsuitable for younger retired people and might need to be restricted to those aged at least 70 or perhaps even 75.

Finally, I should like to turn to one other matter which, to my disappointment, was not covered in the Budget speech, but to which I hope we shall turn during the forthcoming Finance Bill — single property ownership trusts. During the proceedings on the Financial Services Bill 1986, the Government agreed that single property ownership trusts would be a good thing because they would particularly assist urban renewal schemes which had high values. The idea behind a single property ownership trust is that a group of investors can get together and own a large property between them in the same way that they would if they were direct single owners with all the advantages of single ownership. There are problems in many of the large urban redevelopment areas because the schemes proposed are so large that they are beyond the resources of one institution or even of a consortium of institutions. They involve an unacceptable level of risk for, for example, pension funds, but by allowing a group of institutions each to take a small part in the scheme, the risk is spread and schemes become possible that could not otherwise have gone ahead.

Such schemes require some changes to the Finance Acts to enable such trusts to become tax-transparent. I very much hope that my right hon. Friend will bring forward amending legislation in his forthcoming Finance Bill.

Mr. Andrew Smith (Oxford, East): Like my hon. Friend the Member for Livingston (Mr. Cook), who made such a fine speech, my theme is the unbalanced Budget. I make no apology for repeating that theme because never before in a Budget can the word "balance" have been so callously misused. Where is the balance between the Government's obsession with some monetary and fiscal targets, on the one hand, and their neglect of the real world of economic, industrial and public expenditure policy, on the other? Speaking of contrasts, I was amazed at the gall of the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster in opening the debate, when he spoke about paying ourselves a little too much, a little too quickly. There are some people not a million miles from here who are paying themselves a great deal too much, a great deal too quickly. I am staggered that such hypocrisy is not recognised.

There is no balance in the Budget in the huge benefits to the well-off, not just in the massive 50 per cent. of concessions available which have been concentrated on the richest 10 per cent., but in the increased thresholds in inheritance tax and in the absence of any proposal to tackle the gross inequities of national insurance, which becomes increasingly regressive. Nor is there any balance in the failure to limit tax deductible allowances to the basic rate. There is no balance in the extension of opportunities for untaxed capital gains.

There is no balance between the interests of the few who can afford to pay for private medicine and the view of the vast majority of British people that Health Service funding should have top priority. Knowing that that is his weak spot, the Chief Secretary yesterday made something of a meal of Labour estimates of the cash injections needed to bring the NHS back from the brink of utter collapse. He appeared to be overlooking the fact that the figures that he mentioned referred to different things.

The first figure of £200 million was the absolute minimum immediate cash injection that we advocated in the current financial year to avoid the worst of the cuts, just to keep the NHS ticking over in its present inadequate state. The second figure of £1·3 billion referred to the cumulative underfunding of the NHS, based on the assessment of the Select Committee on Social Services. That figure merely showed the money needed to make good the underfunding of the NHS to date and was quite separate from the Labour party's additional commitment to improve the current levels of service. So my right hon. and learned Friend the Member for Monklands, East (Mr. Smith) was perfectly correct to identify the Government's gross misuse of £2,000 million in tax handouts to the super-rich as the figure which Labour says should have been put into health care.

The Chief Secretary would have served the country far better, as would the Chancellor, if, instead of his mealy-mouthed sniping at Labour's commitment to the NHS, which commands overwhelming public support, he had come clean on how far the Government are prepared to dig into the £3 billion reserve to fund the Health Service and to meet the nurses' pay review. The important point is that the Government have the money. Why will not they give it to the nurses and the NHS?

Given the vast amounts of money at the Chancellor's disposal, the continued underfunding of essential services is nothing short of obscene. Indeed, it is becoming increasingly obvious that the only possible explanation for the Government's fiscal intentions, even more so in the light of the savaging of social security benefits in April, may be found in an extreme Right-wing ideology which raises Galbraith's nightmare of public squalor and public affluence to the level of a deliberate policy objective, the better to undermine the public services by starving them of funds.

We can see who the Government are looking after best in the Budget by examining the benefits of just a couple of the Prime Minister's friends. Sir Ralph Halpern will get £5,134 extra a week, and Lord Hanson £4,728 extra a week. While some richly-paid bosses receive £5,000 per week, some of our nurses barely take home £5,000 a year. Where is the balance or the justice there?

There is no balance either when we examine what the April social security changes will mean in practice. The Government's and DHSS's press releases talk about roughly equivalent numbers of gainers and losers, but a detailed survey undertaken in Oxford for the welfare benefits research team of the department of social and administrative studies has provided shocking new evidence of just how far from the truth that is.

Previous studies, including those by the DHSS, of the effects of the social security changes were based on estimates of the effects of 20 per cent. rates contributions and the loss of single payments, but this one study has recalculated the effects using actual claimants and known levels of rates. They show that 79 per cent. of those submitting a claim after 11 April will be worse off than at the moment.

Those groups who will especially lose are pensioners, single people under 25 and, in sharp contrast to what the Chief Secretary said yesterday in the House and the day before on television, even people with disabilities. Some of the losses are significant. Overall, between 37 and 38 per cent. of the sample will lose more than £4 a week. That might not seem much to some Conservative Members, but it is £4 out of a weekly benefit of just £50 a week. That is the real obscenity of the Budget.

On Budget day the Chancellor had a clear choice on how to spend the £11 billion windfall. He chose to give it to those who are already doing nicely. It is a Budget for the healthy and the wealthy, for those with a high-paid job, not one for unemployed or retired people or those on low pay. When one takes into account the increase in electricity prices and other charges, it provides literally nothing extra for those who, through no fault of their own, now find themselves lodged in an underclass of this callous Government's creation. It must be becoming clear, even to some Conservative Members who may have had doubts before Tuesday, that the creation of that underclass has become a clear objective of Government policy. The Government say, "It is all a question of mind over matter. We do not mind and you do not matter."

Basically, the Chancellor's message is that the person who earns £2,000 a week can have a tax handout of £250, less a few extra quid, of course, for the company car. The low-paid person needs only a couple of quid and those who do not have a job can make do with even less.

Even the Chancellor's much vaunted tax changes for married couples has its greatest impact in effectively doubling the capital gains allowance for those rich enough to realise £10,000 of capital gains in a year. Paying the proposed married couple's allowance to the man, albeit with transferability, is a pretty strange way of going about eliminating sexism in the tax system.

Finally, perhaps most serious of all are the effects on the economy in the long term. Whatever effects the Chancellor was expecting his decision to have, one thing is sure: the Budget will do nothing for the economy's industrial strength and nothing for long-term future employment.

The agonies of 1980 and the subsequent years were, we were told, necessary to transform British industry. We were to cut the fat and become a modern economy, able to export in good times and in bad. What happened to that supply side revolution? I draw attention to the remarks made yesterday by the right hon. Member for Chesham and Amersham (Sir I. Gilmour). He said that the question of the so-called "transformation" of the economy must be examined in its proper context in the period snce 1979. When we do that, we find that production in manufactured goods is barely higher than when the Government took office. That should not surprise us because the Government's figures show that gross domestic fixed capital formation in manufacturing was down 5 per cent. in 1986—lower than in 1980.

That shows, and also explains, the widespread scepticism, even in the City, about the Budget's impact on industry—that the much vaunted boom simply has no foundations. The worry is that we are in a boom and bust situation, with increased output coming about not because of investment in new machinery, but because of massive amounts of overtime. The Government's own statistics acknowledge that. The "Financial Statement and Budget Report 1988-89" on page 27 says:

> "It is difficult to discern a reliable trend in recent private sector pay settlements. They have been markedly lower than the recent high growth in earnings, which reflects record overtime working and bonus payments."

What is all the suffering, hardship and unemployment, and all the grand talk and excitement of Conservative Members about our booming economy and the spirit of enterprise based on? At the first hint of a downturn the overtime will stop, our so-called competitiveness will crash through the floor and the tired machinery which is being flogged to death will come to a halt.

What have the Government done in the Budget? Where is the balance in investments in the future of science and technology and industry in Britain? When one compares what the Government put into research and development in industry with our competitors, one sees that the United States is spending £9·3 billion, and it is rising; West Germany is spending £4·3 billion, and it is rising; Japan is spending £3·6 billion, and it is rising; and Britain is spending £2·2 billion, and—hon. Members have guessed —it is falling.

Despite the fact that the Chancellor's friends in the City are cock-a-hoop at their personal good fortune as a result of the Budget, there is no sign that it will affect or help the future of British industry and competitiveness and employment in the future. Shorn of its pretensions, of which there are many, it boils down to a purely partisan Tory Budget for the rich. The Chancellor has intoned the final requiem of what was once called one-nation conservatism.

The Chancellor may delight in fiscal balance and in the sickening greed of those gloating in the City, but the Budget is divisive beyond belief, contemptuous of the common good and ignores with deliberate disdain the nation's need for investment in health, education, housing, science and industry. It will serve the country and ultimately the Conservative party badly, because, judged against the standard of future opportunities for all citizens, it is not just unbalanced; it is morally bankrupt.

7.10 pm

Sir Anthony Grant (Cambridgeshire, South-West): I disagree with everything in the speech of the hon. Member for Oxford, East (Mr. Smith) except for two points. I agree with him about the importance of research, as Cambridge is in my constituency, and I agree with him about nurses' pay. As I am married to a nurse, I very much hope, like him, that a substantial increase in pay is given to nurses, after the report of the review which was set up by the Government in April.

When I sought to intervene in the speech of the hon. Member for Livingston (Mr. Cook) to suggest that he should give some of his new-found largesse to one of my charities, as I sought to encourage him to do, it was not meant personally. I have a very high respect for the hon. Member for Livingston, having been to the Council of Europe and the Western European Union with him for many years. I wanted to make the point not that people should depend upon charity, but that if we take away the characteristic of voluntary giving and receiving, we lose part of the fabric of a decent, civilised society.

I enjoyed very much the speech of my right hon. Friend the Member for Shropshire, North (Mr. Biffen). He will become one of those very rare hon. Members to whom Back Bench Members come in to listen, and we shall do much of that in the future. It was a little whimsical of him, as it was charming, to praise the Budget and then announce that he will vote against its main thrust, but he is a whimsical man.

For a nation which is as dependent as we are on international trade, it is immensely important to ensure that the Budget takes account of trade. If we do not get that right, we can forget about the National Health Service and everything else. The Chancellor anticipated that this year there would be pressure on the balance of payments, but that we should be able to sustain it because of the strength of our economy and the substantial overseas assets that the Government have built up. We should be able to sustain pressure on the balance of payments provided, first, that there is no return to protectionism. I hope that the Chancellor and his colleagues in the Government in all the forums—the EEC and GATT—will strongly resist attempts by other nations to resort to protectionism, which would be disastrous for the whole world. Secondly, we should be able to sustain pressure if there are no wild fluctuations in the dollar.

Like my right hon. Friend the Member for Shropshire, North, I find it difficult to understand what, if any, debate took place within the Government about our currency. I was abroad at the time, so I could not possibly know, but the strength or weakness of sterling is determined ultimately by the confidence with which it is regarded by the rest of the world. Interest rates are important, and I am delighted that they have been reduced today, as I do not like high interest rates, but it is equally absurd to pretend that one can opt out through a return to fixed exchange rates.

I remember when Lord Callaghan came to the House and announced, when he was Chancellor, the devaluation of the pound sterling. It was a traumatic experience for the House and for the nation. It provoked Lord Wilson of Rievaulx to reassure the nation that the pound in their pockets had not been devalued, but we know how misleading that proved to be.

It is essential that the Treasury and the Government use all the weapons at their disposal to prevent excessively wild fluctuations in currency. If I have rightly interpreted that as the view of the Chancellor and his Ministers on the Treasury Bench, I share that view, if that is any consolation to them. The CBI and other such organisations sometimes whine too much about the value of the pound. If it is too low, they give us a lecture on inflation; if it is too high, they moan about export difficulties. Businesses want reasonable stability, not artificial stability, from our currency so that they can plan ahead. If I am right in assuming that my right hon. Friend the Chancellor believes that we should fairly soon be members of the EMS, he has my agreement and support.

I have just returned from a visit to Japan and the United States with the Select Committee on Trade and Industry. In Japan I saw amazing opportunities for our exports and industries. Since I was last in Japan some 17 years ago, a remarkable but not perceived change has taken place, in that the people are becoming a consumer society and they are encouraging imports. There are many subtle non-tariff barriers which must be overcome, and there is constant argument and debate, but I doubt whether many hon. Members realise that Japan has introduced favourable interest rates for the import of certain goods.

It would be better if we heard less from industrial bodies, businesses, Parliament and the press about how difficult it is to export to Japan and how appallingly the Japanese behave, and instead just got on with the job in the new climate. Many people are getting on with it by exporting textiles, chemicals and even motor vehicles and motor vehicle components. Substantial exports are earned in this country, but we do not talk about them; we talk about the difficulties, snags and impediments. That is a national characteristic.

Much the same situation prevails in the United States, but in both countries I found enormous admiration and even envy of Great Britain's economic performance. I was pleased to discover some praise for Cambridge, which is still held in high esteem throughout the world for the original research work that goes on there. The economic transformation was described, perhaps rather boldly, as the British miracle. I do not call it a miracle; it is a triumph of common sense and good housekeeping, as evidenced by the Chancellor in balancing his Budget. If the Prime Minister were to run in the presidential election, she would win by a landslide, with or without primaries.

People in the United States find our tax system and the level of taxation inexplicable when they contrast it with other EEC countries and with Socialist Australia and Socialist New Zealand. They said, "You seem to be keen on exports, but why are you so keen to export your best brains and ability?" That is why the principles of the Budget are absolutely right — to reform and reduce taxation.

I have only one complaint about the Budget. I would have liked the Chancellor to tackle stamp duty, perhaps by raising the threshold level to help housing, but apart from that the principles in the taxation proposals are absolutely right.

I urge the Government to disregard whining, egalitarian fanatics who would level us down to the state of the lowest. It has been our clear policy for many years to reduce direct taxation. That has been overwhelmingly endorsed by the people at no fewer than three general elections. I am delighted that the Government and the Chancellor are fulfilling that pledge.

One of the great illusions of our age is that there is some peculiar merit in extracting more taxation from the public —including nurses, teachers and fairly humble people— swirling it about in a vast, expensive bureaucracy, and doling it out in response to the latest and loudest clamours. Another illusion is that there is a choice between giving more to the National Health Service and reducing taxation. That is an illusion. We can have both. No one wants more funding for the National Health Service more than I do, as Addenbrooke's hospital and Papworth hospital are in my constituency.

[Sir Anthony Grant]

That bunkum of soaking the rich as a viable policy that we have heard in speech after speech of Opposition Members was really debunked by the late Anthony Crosland as long ago as the 1950s. He pointed out that there was no substantial overall increase to be achieved in the standard of living merely by distribution through the taxation system. I know that Anthony Crosland is no longer fashionable among Opposition Members, so I suppose that they disregard him.

I believe that the Budget will be good for British international trade, good for Britain and, ultimately, good for the health of the nation.

7.21 pm

Mr. Eric S. Heffer (Liverpool, Walton): Many years ago, just after the war, an Italian partisan who I knew came to this country and gave me the watch that I now wear. He looked around the country and said, "How civilised Britain is." I thought that he was referring to our manners and willingness to hear the other chap's point of view. He was not referring to our manners; he was referring to our society, to the things that we had done, to the fact that we had raised the living standards of the poor and had actually tackled the problems of poverty by creating a National Health Service and a social security system that removed the fear of poverty.

At the same time, if one went to Rome, Milan or Turin, one still saw people huddling in alleyways, out in the cold, because they had nowhere to shelter, and one saw the shanty towns. Therefore, he was contrasting the civilised behaviour of our Governments and people in dealing with those problems.

The Budget has been described by some newspapers, by the Chancellor and by other Conservative Members as a radical Budget. I think that that is a misuse of the term "radical". It is not a radical Budget; it is a reactionary Budget. In some respects it puts us back in history, before the days of a genuine radical Budget, as far back as the radical Budget of Lloyd George. This Budget is not radical at all.

If hon. Members do not believe me, perhaps they should read what was said in the Financial Times. I will not bore the House with the full editorial of the Financial Times, but I think it would be very good if hon. Members were to read it. It starts with the headline "A one-sided budget." The heading on another page is, "Impact On the Taxpayer," with the sub-heading "Dramatic gains for the rich". It says:

"The 1988 Budget is one for the rich to a much greater extent than any of the Conservative Government's previous Budgets."

Apparently, that is radical, as far as the Financial Times is concerned. The fact that it is the worst Budget we have had and puts more and more money into the pockets of the super-rich means that it is radical. I thought that the term "radical" meant that one was helping those at the lower end of the scale.

When I hear all the talk about those who earn a great deal of money getting more money back or assistance initiatives of one kind or another, I want to ask one question: who really creates the wealth of this country? The wealth of this country is created by ordinary men and women at the point of production. The wealth comes from the application of their labour, together with the machinery which they have produced over the years. The wealth is not being distributed to those at the lower end of the scale; the money is going to the top end of the scale. That is what is happening. The Budget is a redistributive Budget to the rich.

I think that the Financial Times was absolutely right in stating:

"The Thatcher Government swept to power in 1979 promising incentives and opportunity in place of old-fashioned egalitarianism."

That point was made by the hon. Member for Cambridgeshire, South-West (Sir A. Grant). The Government do not say any more about the egalitarian society. They do not worry about the bottom end of the market; they do not concern themselves with the unfortunate. They only look after the rich. They are a Government of the rich for the rich, and nothing else.

There is an old saying in our movement that goes back a long way: that the Conservative party does not preach the class war, it carries it out. The Government are certainly carrying it out in this Budget, not on the streets, not in a violent way, not with the jackboot, but in the form of the new Finance Bill this year, and they are redistributing the wealth of this country to those who are already doing very well under the system. That is the biggest criticism that we should make of the Government.

The Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster spoke about unemployment coming down. It would be hilarious if it were not so serious. The "Financial Statement and Budget Report" states:

"The objective of the Government's economic policy is to defeat inflation and to maintain a vigorous and enterprising economy, with sustained growth of output and employment."

That sounds all right until one examines the Government's record over the years. The right hon. and learned Gentleman talked about unemployment falling recently. In my constituency in the course of a year it has gone down by approximately 800. I welcome that.

We have heard much criticism of that terrible Labour Government. Conservative Members never seem to get off their seats and vote against their own Government when they do not agree with them. I have never known such a lily-livered lot of hon. Members on the Government Benches. When the Labour Government cut the amount to be spent on housing and cut the money for the National Health Service, Labour Members made it quite clear where they stood. We traipsed through the Lobbies and voted against the Government. On one occasion my Chief Whip said to me, "It would be very nice, Eric, if you actually voted with the Government on occasion." We did that because we disagreed. Compared with the present Government, the Labour Government were angels; they were wonderful people.

When some of us were being critical of that Government from January 1979 until the election in May 1979, in Liverpool alone they reduced unemployment by over 2,000. They were actually bringing unemployment down when we lost the election. Now look at what has happened. Unemployment in Liverpool was 57,000 in May 1979 when the Government took office. Today, despite all that is being said about bringing unemployment down, unemployment in Liverpool—and remember that thousands of people have moved out seeking jobs elsewhere—is 89,366.

Certainly, there has been a small decrease in unemployment over a period of time, but that is nothing. As long as the capitalist system is in existence there will be booms and slumps. At the moment, we are in a mini boom. The Government can come along and say, "Look, we have modernised our industry. We have done a great job and really shown what can be done with our competitive capitalist system. Unemployment is going down and employment is going up." All I have to say is, "Yes, OK, that is expected to a certain degree, but it does not get away from the fundamental fact that as long as this system exists things will not really improve." If the Government continue to put private profit before the interests of the community or the interests of the people as a whole, and if they do not build the things that are required or put money into the NHS or the regions or invest in new industries, preferably publicly owned, the improvement will be an illusion. It will last for a time, but, when the crash comes, it will be even greater than anything we have experienced up to now. That is the reality.

This is a kidology Budget; it is a deceiver's Budget. In fact, although it talks in terms of reducing taxation, the amount of taxation will be about the same as it was before. [HON. MEMBERS: "Oh!"] Not for you lot; you will be doing very well indeed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Harold Walker): Order. The hon. Gentleman must not bring me into this.

Mr. Heffer: I apologise, Mr. Deputy Speaker. I would certainly not put you in the same category as Conservative Members. Having battled with you against the Conservative party on previous occasions, I know that that would be a gross insult to you and I would not wish to do that. I do not want to insult that lot either. I simply think that what I am saying is the truth. I am not insulting Conservative Members; I am simply telling the people of this country, through the House of Commons, what is happening.

I will not make a long speech, but I wish to refer to one other point. The Government have hit their supporters. For example, the change in the rules concerning covenants will affect many people. What will happen to the lower middle classes who accept the terms of the Government and do something about financially supporting their young people through school and university? They will be worse off.

This time—I am thankful about it—the Government have gone over the top. At the same time as they are handing out money to the super-rich and to the new millionaires who have grown up under this Government, they are putting the worst possible pressure on the people at the bottom end of the scale. After 1 April those people will suffer cuts. At the moment they do not understand what will happen. However, when they do understand, they will be hurt and will suffer tremendously. All people with a conscience will wake up to the fact that it is time that the Government were ended once and for all. They have three more years before going to the polls, but I predict that this time they will have had it. One Conservative Member boasted about them having won three general elections. However, they did not win the majority of votes. They are a minority Government. They may have more seats in the House of Commons, but they have never had the majority of votes. Next time people will understand what has happened to the Social Democratic party, the Liberal party and the new party. Their day has gone. [HON. MEMBERS: "Where are they?"] They have gone from here and they are gone politically.

Next time there will be a Labour Government, and I trust that the Labour Government will reverse what this Government have been doing. There will be another redistribution of wealth in this country, but it will be to the people who create the wealth—the working people. We will get back to the position that the Labour party has always advocated of creating a decent and civilised society.

Mr. James Hill (Southampton, Test): It seems rather strange that my right hon. Friend the Chancellor is not receiving more congratulations this evening from the Opposition. After all, I can recall no Chancellor in this House who has spent more than £2·5 billion, cut taxes by £4 billion and cut borrowing, overseas borrowing in the main, by £7 billion. To balance those three things is the finest art of financial management.

We are lucky to have my right hon. Friend as our Chancellor. I hope that there is no hesitation in all of us insisting that, certainly for the lifetime of this Parliament, he should stay as our Chancellor. Whatever the Opposition may say, he has got the formula and he is beginning to deliver the goods. I believe that the Budget will make the Conservative party, not the party in opposition, the party that will easily win the next general election.

Mrs. Maria Fyfe (Glasgow, Maryhill): Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Hill: I am sorry but I cannot give way. There are still several hon. Members who wish to take part in the debate.

My right hon. Friend the Chancellor has created two tax bands. He has simplified the tax system and, whether one would call it radical or otherwise, he has reformed it. He has done that by many methods.

This country has been notorious for its tax system for many years. At one time the top rate was 83 per cent. and there was even an extra little prod to take it up to 98 per cent. I remember saying to a Labour Chancellor of the Exchequer, when he was proposing a 2 per cent. wealth tax —I am sorry Mr. Deputy Speaker, but it was from a seated position — "Don't you realise that that is everything?" I began to wonder what would happen to the economy, to industry and to our progress if that happened.

The hon. Member for Livingston (Mr. Cook) devoted almost his entire speech to the National Health Service, regardless of the fact that tonight is industry night, and I should like to say a few words about the NHS. First, all staff in the NHS will benefit from this Budget. The nurses' pay review is under way and I have already written to the Royal College of Nursing saying that I am anxious that they should get an extremely good review. And I hope that we shall carry forward a good training programme in the skills that we need in the nursing fraternity.

Although NHS spending has risen substantially both in real terms and as a share of total public expenditure, it is clear that all is not well in the National Health Service, and I am pleased that there is to be a fundamental review. I hope that we shall all take part in the debate on that review to find out how to improve the NHS. I do not support the blinkered approach according to which only another £2 billion this year and perhaps another £2 billion next year will solve all the ills; that is not the problem with the National Health Service. It has been proved conclusively over the past three of four months that there are radical faults connected with the NHS and that this review must be carried out.

When I go further into the Chancellor's speech, I begin to understand what he means by raising the thresholds. This time he has taken another 750,000 people out of paying any income tax at all. There has not been a word about this from the Opposition, yet it must be an enormous benefit to those three quarters of a million people.

Then there is the inheritance tax. My constituency is not a wealthy one and for the inheritance tax threshold to be raised from £90,000 to £110,000 is a real bonanza for a working-class person whose mother or father may have died. That is a first-class move.

The Chancellor also dealt with one of the greatest anomalies in the tax system—the capital gains tax. Once again I quote my constituency. One of my constituents is a corner shop newsagent who lives over the shop. He has not been able to sell his business because he has been afraid that the capital gains tax would not leave him enough to buy a little home. The Chancellor has looked at that and when I get back to my constituency I shall expect to find a nice letter from that newsagent thanking me for what the Chancellor has done. Capital gains provide one way of getting the business community moving. How many people realise that, until the present Budget, it has been almost impossible for anyone to sell property, regardless of the fact that by selling that property he or she could expand the business in other directions?

Another very good thing that the Chancellor has done, as Opposition Members who are worried about the homeless and residential accommodation must agree, is to enlarge the business expansion scheme to allow firms that are letting residential property to borrow from £0·5 million to £5 million to produce homes for rent. I cannot see that there can be any argument against the Chancellor on these scores.

The only thing that I am a little disappointed about is that the Chancellor has increased the tax on petrol and diesel, because that will add to delivery charges and cut down some people's motoring. Apart from that, however, I can see no reason why he should have acted in any other way than he has.

I represent a part of Southampton, which is well known as a seaport. We have gone through some very bad times and have had strikes that even Liverpool could not duplicate. At the end of the day we privatised and Associated British Ports is now in being. The port is flourishing. There is a great deal of building going on and a great deal of interest. These lower rates of tax will obviously encourage more investors, and my area wants investors as much as Liverpool does. This Budget will give the people in the business world confidence. It is not only a good Budget but the threshold of many more years of Conservative rule. It will give people in all regions, not just Southampton, confidence to invest and will mean a tremendous amount of business activity over the next year or two.

Mr. Robert N. Wareing (Liverpool, West Derby): I was interested in what the hon. Gentleman said about Liverpool, because my constituents live in the city of Liverpool. Can he tell us what the strike record has been in the Liverpool docks during the last five years compared with the situation in the Southampton docks?

Mr. Hill: I was talking about the period in the early 1980s, when everyone who knew the shipping world realised that there were not only strikes in Liverpool, Southampton and London but a general feeling that there was unrest in the ports and docks of our country. I am not saying that we are any better or any worse than Liverpool; I am merely pointing out that we went through a very bad spell. Casting one's mind back to the early 1980s, what investor would have invested in the port of Southampton? Even the shipping companies were avoiding us. So there has been a complete change of atmosphere. Confidence has returned, and this Budget will increase that confidence.

My right hon. Friend the Chancellor has done a magnificent job and I hope that he will give us many more Budgets like this one. When we talk about taxation, we mean everyone's taxation, and the fact that some people, by paying less tax, will be able to employ more staff. [Interruption.] The hon. Member for Islington, South and Finsbury (Mr. Smith) disagrees. What does he think running a company is all about? If a company pays low tax it can expand and if an investor pays low tax he can help the company expand. This is a Budget that is going to get us off the ground almost rocket-propelled to a more prosperous future.

Mr. John Battle (Leeds, West): Government Members have suggested that tonight is "industry night", and I should like to suggest that the debate tonight should be about investment. [HON. MEMBERS: "Hear, hear."] Hon. Gentlemen say, "Hear, hear," but we have not heard in this Budget proposals for investment in either the private or the public sector, which we would insist on and want to see.

I want first to draw the attention of the House to the analysis in The Times today headed "Cuts give most benefit to the top 3·7%".

That makes it absolutely clear that the Budget is for the richest. The Minister may well want to rebut those figures in detail and deny that the Budget benefits have gone to such a tiny group in our society, because for 3·7 per cent. to receive most of the benefits is targeting with a vengeance.

The Financial Secretary to the Treasury (Mr. Norman Lamont): Is the hon. Gentleman aware that 70 per cent. of the cost of the Budget in the first year will go on the basic rate of tax, and to increase personal allowances? How does he square that with what he has just said?

Mr. Battle: I will be coming to that. I am happy to answer the Minister. Most of the commentators on the Budget have made it clear that this is an inegalitarian Budget for the rich. Yesterday, the Chancellor said, in an apparently throwaway line, that most of those who were complaining were rich men themselves, who could always send the money back. Remarks like that provoke real anger in my constituency, where I estimate that more than 30 per cent. of those I represent will not benefit at all from the Budget. They are still unemployed and they have to survive on benefits or are on low pay and still caught in the poverty trap. The Minister ought to take that into account in analysing the figures.

Even in television interviews, some Conservative Members seem to be saying that everyone will gain. Do they not realise that about 30 per cent. of people in our society earn too little to pay tax in the first place? Are they really unaware that 13 million live in families that are below the threshold for untaxed benefits? In other words, they will get not tax cuts at all.

For 2 million people living on low incomes, the benefit cuts due on 11 April will cancel out any tax cuts. I hope that Conservative Members will condemn that. There must be real contempt on the Government Benches for Tory Members to condemn those who cannot pay tax and have no share in this new-found national wealth, which the Government have chosen to distribute to so few in our society.

The Times leader on Monday 14 March announced:

"The Chancellor . . . has the best opportunity for many years to make Britain's tax system both fairer and more efficient."

The Treasury's press release says—we have heard this repeated often—that the Budget is a radical, reforming Budget. There has certainly been a clear shift of resources from the poor to the rich, but there has not been an attempt radically to restructure the relationship between taxation, national insurance contributions and benefits. Whereas, as a result of tax cuts, some people may not have to think twice before they buy a new microwave oven, others in our society will have to struggle to get the assistance even to buy a second-hand cooker. That is the reality when we compare the Budget with the budget for the poor that will come on 11 April.

Here I am responding to the hon. Member for Southampton, Test (Mr. Hill), who asked why the Labour party was not applauding the tax cuts. In practice, although the reduction in the basic rate, coupled with a reduction in tax allowances, will float some families out of poverty, the interaction between family credit and housing benefit, which will be based on net income after 11 April, will mean that the income tax cuts for the poorest families will have little effect on the poverty trap or on their poverty. I pointed that out in the Consolidated Fund debate last Thursday, very late at night.

When the Budget for the rich is compared to the budget that will take from the poor on 11 April, it will be as plain as day that there has been a massive redistribution of wealth from the poorest to the rich. Many of the poorest in our society will lose out altogether from the benefits changes, and they will feel cheated by the priorities of a Government who have set their course on targeting their resources directly on those who are least in need of them. People in such a position will feel rightly insulted at the Chancellor's remark that they might like to give the money back.

Last Monday night, I heard the hon. Member for Northampton, North (Mr. Marlow) highlight the connection between the freezing of child benefits and the expected tax cuts. He said:

"by combining these two measures, we are taking money from those with children and giving it to those without. That cannot make sense." —[Official Report, 14 March 1988; Vol. 129, c. 928.]

I have to say, for once, that I absolutely agree with the hon. Gentleman, and perhaps the hon. Member for Test will agree with his hon. Friend as well.

If the Minister's concern to improve incentives is genuine, it obviously does not reach out to many of the poorest in our society. Many of them face a marginal adjustment of their tax rate. They will have to pay more taxes, as their rate of payment will be twice as high as that of the highest paid. The line in the poem by Samuel Johnson, "The Vanity of Human Wishes"— has never rung truer. The poor will have no chance, as they have been effectively priced out of the benefits of our society—as the Government heralds them. There has not been a radical change, or a reform in the tax system. There has been a crude operation of the ratchet mechanism, which gives proportionately the most to those with the most. That is why a nurse earning £6,250 a year will get £1·82 a week, whereas someone earning £65,000 a year will get £129 a week. The Chancellor has adjusted the ratchet by a few notches to direct even more income to the richest.

What is notable about any ratchet mechanism is that it is set for the purpose of preventing reversible action; it is one-directional. In this case, the direction is from the poor to the rich. When the common treasury of our society is geared to funding the better-off at the expense of the poor, surely the ratchet mechanism should be changed and the tax, benefits and National Insurance system should be changed radically to ensure that the poor, albeit a minority of only 30 per cent. of our society, are not priced out of our society.

Surely tackling that would have warranted a radical and reforming Budget. What happened on Tuesday was in effect a tampering with the tax system to gear it further towards the richest. The Government seem to fall back regularly now on the dictum of Bentham, that the greatest happiness of the greatest number is the foundation of our morals and legislation. That statement has a superficially democratic ring to it, but the problem is that such a dictum completely excludes minorities.

Is the purpose of the Budget to price out the poor, not only excluding them from the benefits of the Budget but putting them out to live at the margins of our society in dehumanising poverty? They are not offered incentives but condemned to continuing hopelessness. How many people in Britain will be unable to get a break before the Government are prepared to write them off politically?

In terms of the future, I shall refer briefly to the Budget proposals for housing, and the changes in capital gains and inheritance tax. The housing proposals make it apparent that not only is this not an investing Budget; it is a "cashing in on the assets" Budget. It withdraws mortgage tax interest relief on home improvement loans. That clearly is a case of throwing out the baby with the bath water.

If the abuse of that system was that people were buying second-hand cars with the loans, why not tie such loans to specific home improvements? If the Chancellor wished to prevent luxury improvments, the relief could have been retained for basic improvements and essential repairs, such as the installation of damp-proof courses, inside bathrooms and toilets. Could we not have had the relief limited to the lower tax bands, on the ground that those in the higher tax bands already had a tax windfall? That would have been targeting on those in real need.

It is interesting to note that the National Council for Home Improvements is amazed at the proposals for housing contained in the Budget. How will it ensure that basic improvement of the housing stock in Britain, which some could claim to be our country's greatest asset—people's homes? Yet £29 billion has been estimated to be needed to improve and enhance the housing stock in the private sector alone.

How can this Budget tackle that? How can this Budget be an investment Budget, in that context? What has the Budget to do with investing in housing as our key national asset? At a stroke, the Government-backed building society scheme which would enable key workers, such as nurses, to get together to buy a home is crossed out by the pen of the Budget. Do the Government propose to step back from that policy now?

The hon. Member for Southampton, Test (Mr. Hill) referred to the business expansion scheme proposal. It is all of a piece with the Housing Bill which has been heralded as a means of extending the private rented sector. The proposals in the business expansion scheme for housing are the clearest signal yet of the Government's intention to give a direct subsidy to individual landlords. Yet what an outcry there is about public subsidies to local authorities. Why is a subsidy to an individual landlord right, and a subsidy to a public body wrong? The effect of the business expansion scheme proposal will be to give a tax advantage to the landlord. It will encourage the individual Rachman rather than the institutions, the building societies and the pension funds that the Minister himself said would become — it is his term — the new "social landlords" of Britain. Those very people will now be priced out.

Mr. Ian Taylor (Esher): Does the hon. Member not realise that this piece of legislation is tied to assured tenancies, which will give him the comfort that he seems to lack?

Mr. Battle: I am sure that the hon. Gentleman will be interested in the debate—I invite him to participate in it — on Report and Third Reading of the Housing Bill, which has just gone through Committee, a debate in which we will make it plain that the assurances in the Bill are no assurances at all. If these proposals for housing go through, how on earth can the Government claim, as they did in their manifesto proposals, that they will make Britain the best housed nation in Europe? That claim now rings hollow, because the Government have totally withdrawn from investment in housing.

The selfish generation who presently rule us seem intent not only on personally pocketing the nation's oil benefits but even pocketing the income from taxes levied on the worst off. The Budget is socially divisive, economically unsound and morally unjust. The people of this country are already almost universally condemning it.

8.1 pm

Mr. Ray Whitney (Wycombe): The hon. Member for Leeds, West (Mr. Battle) complained about a lack of investment. He seems unaware that investment is scheduled next year to increase by 9 per cent. He seems not to understand that investment is made not only by Government but by companies and individuals. He complains about the social security budget. He seems unaware that in the lifetime of this Government social security spending has increased by something like 35 per cent. That has been made possible by the strength of the economy.

Mr. Battle rose——

Mr. Whitney: Yes, I know what the hon. Member is going to say—I will give way to the hon. Gentleman.

Mr. Battle: I am grateful to the hon. Gentleman. Will he tell me whether the increase is due to the fact that those on benefit are now better off or to the fact that more people need benefits?

Mr. Whitney: Both are correct. Benefits are higher in real terms and there are more people. That is to say, there are now nearly one million more elderly pensioners, and that is where more than half the social security budget goes.

Mr. Jeremy Corbyn (Islington, North) rose——

Mr. Whitney: No, I will not give way. There are too many people wanting to speak.

That is where £46 billion in the social security budget goes, and we are able to make those payments because of the strength of the economy.

The hon. Gentleman also complained about Health Service spending and, if I have your permission, Madam, Deputy Speaker, I will return to that in a moment.

I woud like to join in the congratulations of nearly all my hon. Friends to my right hon. Friend the Chancellor and his colleagues in the Treasury on what they have achieved, both in the Budget and in the stewardship which they have carried out on the nation's behalf, which has created the wealth of this economy, and, in turn, enabled the Budget measures to be put into place.

I have some concern about the inflationary tendencies which still exist in our society, and I believe that we must exercise careful monetary control in the months ahead against that danger, so that we can ensure that the steady growth of the economy, now into its eighth year, will be sustained. Of course, I stop a very long way short of the concerns expressed by my right hon. Friends the Member for Shropshire, North (Mr. Biffen) and the Member for Chesham and Amersham, (Sir I. Gilmour). I believe that my hon. Friend the Member for Bournemouth, West (Mr. Butterfill) did the House and the nation an excellent service by pointing out the significant differences, the beneficial differences, between the situation now and the situation in, for example, 1972-73. We could very well not be in the dangerous situation that my right hon. Friends fear—the positive signs greatly outweigh the others—but we must have regard for the inflationary pressures that are still present.

Much has been said by Opposition Members today and earlier in the debate about the National Health Service. I would like to offer a few thoughts on that very important issue. What we have had of course, is no thinking, or no new thinking, on this subject from either the Labour party or our absent friends from the Liberal-and-whatever-their-other-names-are-now Benches. We have had a string of figures plucked out of the air. I know that some hon. Members on the Opposition Benches have displayed some sensitivity because their figures increase as it becomes clear that the money available for the Government is increasing. Not many weeks ago the official figure of the official Opposition for our extra requirements in the National Health Service was £200 million. The figure then went up to £500 million. Then we reached £1 billion and £1·5 billion. Today's figure seems to be £2 billion.

This is, of course, typical of the Labour attitude. Labour Members have no thoughts at all to offer on any area of our national life, least of all here. They have no new ideas and are wedded to the old ideas which have failed the British people. The Government are absolutely right to reject the Opposition's charges and their demands, not least because of the Government's own record of provision for the National Health Service. My right hon. Friends, however, are also right to make a review of the whole question of health care provision in this country. Such a review must be careful and thorough, but must not be delayed.

Mr. Heffer: The hon. Gentleman says that we have no new ideas. Is he suggesting that the Conservative party, based on the views of Adam Smith, Samuel Smiles and Professor Hayek, is putting forward bright, modern ideas?

Mr. Whitney: If the hon. Gentleman will bear with me, I will offer him some new ideas about the National Health Service. The tragedy of the hon. Gentleman, who is almost invariably the authentic voice of the Labour party—and we heard him in typical flow tonight—is that he speaks as the uncomprehending, out-of-date voice when all the Labour and socialist parties in the rest of the world have learned the lesson. The Labour parties of Australia and New Zealand and the socialist parties of France and West Germany understand that if one wishes to look after the poor and needy one can do so only if one has the resources, and that the way to produce resources is the way we have chosen to use, a way that is being copied by Labour and socialist parties in other parts of the world.

Mrs. Fyfe rose——

Mr. Whitney: I will give way for the last time, if the hon. Lady wishes—no, she does not.

The Labour and socialist parties in these countries have new ideas—I see that the hon. Lady is rising again.

Mrs. Fyfe: I thank the hon. Gentleman. So many hon. Members on the Government Benches have produced these figures on taxation from other countries described as socialist that I can only imagine that they have all been reading the one brief and very little else.

Is this by any chance the Tory party's application to join the Socialist International, since they feel that their policies are to some extent in line with those of other, socialist Governments?

Mr. Whitney: The hon. Lady showed diffidence in getting to her feet and I now understand why.

I return to the essential point of introducing new thinking into the National Health Service. If the hon. Member for Liverpool, Walton (Mr. Heffer) has any new ideas, they would be most welcome, although I think its very unlikely that he has. It is essential that we look in a serious and open-minded way at our own historical experience of the provision of health care and that of other countries. When we look at the latter, there is no doubt that we shall find that a significant number of countries now provide a substantially higher standard of health care than our National Health Service does.

The simplistic answer to that — the Pavlovian response that we are likely to receive from Opposition Members: the simplistic reaction of those who still have not woken up to the fact that the National Health Service, sadly, is not and never has been the envy of the world—is "Let us have another £1 billion, another £2 billion, another £3 billion."

Such an attitude reveals a total failure to understand the nature of the problem, which is that we were led down a cul-de-sac by Aneurin Bevan in 1946. He went against the thinking that had been put into health care by parties of all complexions and experts of all types: thinking enshrined in the 1944 White Paper on health introduced to the House by the then Conservative Health Minister, Henry Willink, on behalf of the wartime coalition. The aspirations of that White Paper were the same as all our aspirations. It called for a comprehensive Health Service, free at the point of delivery. But there is no doubt that there are alternative methods of achieving that laudable objective — not just the method that Aneurin Bevan foisted on the House and the country.

Mr. Corbyn rose——

Mr. Whitney: No, I am sorry. I shall not give way.

Aneurin Bevan could, for instance, have built on the insurance-based system that had been in place since 1911. Our absent friends from the Liberal Benches referred last night to Lloyd George. The Lloyd George National Insurance Act 1911 gave the country — for a time — a structure that was progressive and highly beneficial. By 1945 or 1946, it would have provided the opportunity of advancing to an insurance-based system. Sadly, however, we did not go down that route, which was adopted by most countries that now provide their people with a higher level of health care. Bevan did not accept the views of the Labour party at the time, which may come as a surprise to some Opposition Members. The Labour party conference at the end of 1944, just before the general election, endorsed the Henry Willink White Paper objectives, and said that there should be regional or locally funded hospitals. That, too, was thrown out of the window by Bevan.

The third resistance that Bevan overcame was that of Herbert Morrison, who warned against the Bevan plan. He said that it was overly centralised and overly bureaucratic, and who is to say that he was wrong? For 40 years, the health issue has been in the political bear garden that it has so notoriously occupied for the past few months. For 40 years, we have tried to meet the resource implications, and we have failed.

Only a few months after Bevan launched his scheme —after he had, as he said, stuffed the doctors' mouths with gold — he was complaining to the late Hugh Gaitskell about what he described as cascades of medicine pouring down British throats. It took him by surprise, and year by year it has taken every Health Minister by surprise. Over the past 40 years, averaged out against inflation, spending on the Health Service has risen by 3·7 per cent. a year. Of course, it has risen much more in years when the Conservatives have been in charge of the economy than when Labour has been in charge of it. But I do not want to make this a party issue; it is a national issue, which we should now approach coolly and with knowledge that has been ignored.

We have had 40 years of struggling with the structure. We have had 40 years of committees, Royal Commissions, inquiries and reorganisations, and it is still a mess. Every Minister who has been in the DHSS knows that it is a mess. Every Minister who has stood at that Dispatch Box seeking to answer for something that has been done, or not been done, in some district general hospital knows that the structure is ludicrous. We have created the ultimate in the sense of responsibility without power, and for 40 years we have tried to change that.

The Government must understand that, after 40 years of attempted change and 40 years of increased funding, the system cannot be reformed; it must be changed. I hope that they will regard this as a new opportunity. They must recognise how different we are as a society from the society in which the Health Service was born; the society of 1946, when Britain was weak and worn out, not only from the war but from the inter-war years; a society accustomed to rationing and queues.

We see that reflected now, as we always have, in the waiting lists of the Health Service. There have always been between half a million and three quarters of a million people on our waiting lists. That is virtually unknown in many advanced industrialised countries, countries with which we rightly like to compare ourselves. Those countries have different systems, and we must learn from them.

I would offer my own solution, Madam Deputy Speaker, but I think that you would rule me out of order, as this is not a debate on the Health Service. Nevertheless, although we must fund properly the present structure and the nurses' pay review, I beg the Government to understand that there is no thinking on the Opposition Benches, and very little—sadly—among Health Service professionals. The Government must provide that thinking, and I assure them that it is available.

I hope that in the near future the Government will produce a new Health Service, truly worthy of a modern Britain: a Britain that is economically sound, where the people can look after themselves and where we are now rich enough to ensure that those who need proper care can receive it.

8.17 pm

Mr. Gerald Bermingham (St. Helens, South): I listened with amazement to the speech of the hon. Member for Wycombe (Mr. Whitney), who, I know, served as a Minister for Health. He had no faith in the system, and that may well explain some of the problems of the system today. It may be why the medical practitioners' committee in my constituency, which is not overtly political, writes to tell me that orthopaedic consultancy appointments involve a wait of about 152 weeks. How am I to go home to St. Helens and explain that it will still be 152 weeks next week, next month and perhaps even next year?

We are not a poor nation; we are a rich nation, as has been shown time and again. We have the skills—inventive, manufacturing and economic skills—to make the products and provide the services that the world wants. We have the skills and the manpower, but we waste them. Our priorities are wrong.

When I examined the Budget, I asked myself, "What am I to say to the guy in Corporation street, St. Helens, on Saturday morning? How am I to explain the Budget? That man will want to know what it means for him." The average person in St. Helens does not earn much more than the average wage, and probably earns a bit less. What does it mean in terms of investment and what will it do for the town that I represent? The more that I considered that question, the more difficult I found it to answer.

In St. Helens we do not have vast numbers of people earning £30,000, £40,000 or £50,000 a year, so not many people will be affected by the top rate tax cuts. Many people earn £120 to £130 a week. I looked at their tax cuts, but they did not seem very high. Then I looked at what would happen to the not-so-well employed in my constituency, those on low wages or on benefits. I looked at the workers in the glass industry who have been made redundant because of modern technology. Over the last five years the coal mining industry in the area has shrunk from a work force of about 4,000 to 400 or 500. I looked at those who had been employed in the chemical industries that have moved away or closed down and the industries that have modernised and shed labour. Many small engineering companies, which fed off the large companies, have gone out of production. Their ex-employees are now in their 40s and 50s and are on benefit.

What will the Budget mean to all those people? Much of what I have heard in the debate about what will happen on 11 April I need not repeat. We know that the benefit system will change and that for many people benefits will decrease. The Budget means little to those people because they are unemployed. As regards people on low pay, one newspaper quoted a saving of £90 a year in tax. I am not the world's best economist but I can do my arithmetic, and I know that if 5p is put on a gallon of petrol it will affect the people of St. Helens because we are landlocked and, as we do not make most of our consumer durables, they come in by road. That increase in the price of petrol will push up costs.

I looked at how interest rates stood until today. I welcome the cut of half a per cent., but they need to go down much more. All those who understand anything about these matters would agree on that. Interest rates are still high.

I examined other factors in the Budget. The Government have put 1p on a pint of beer and increased the price of cigarettes. Those are things that matter to ordinary working people. Effectively, the Government have put up the cost of living. That is a simple and straightforward fact. They have written off any benefit for those who are employed in St. Helens. As income tax has been reduced, it follows that mortgage repayments will go up slightly—depending on one's tax position. There is a balancing effect. But for many people in employment in St. Helens, there is no real benefit in this Budget.

I looked at the Budget again from a completely different aspect—from the point of view of what is in it not for the citizens of St. Helens but for the economy. How will it affect the production of motor cars? We do not make them in St. Helens but we make the glass that goes into English motor cars. I asked myself how the Budget would affect the motor industry and found the answer was simple: it will hurt it. People asked me why I thought that, and I said that we have only to use our common sense. It is because the great perk of the motor industry, the car allowance, has been affected. Many people in the middle order band of industry and management will no longer want a company car because it will cost an extra £700, or whatever the figure is, per year. It will be more economical not to have a company car and to rely on the wife's car or the small family car.

There is something quite fascinating about motor cars. When people buy a car for themselves they tend to buy the cheapest foreign little model that they can find, but when fleets of cars are bought by companies they are English motor cars.

Mr. David Shaw (Dover): No.

Mr. Bermingham: The hon. Member says no, but he ought to do his research before he hops on the band-wagon. They buy Vauxhall, Ford——

Mr. Shaw: Porsche.

Mr. Bermingham: I know where I am, Madam Deputy Speaker, so I shall not say what the hon. Member is, but I will treat his remark with contempt. It is the sort of stupid remark that has led to the economy and our manufacturing industry being in the state that they are in.

Mr. Corbyn: Have hon. Members seen the patriotism of the car park?

Mr. Bermingham: My hon. Friend is right. That is an example of how the Government have not thought through what they are doing, and it is by such means that one can see the Budget for what it is. It will not induce people to invest in industry. I am no great lover of capital gains tax or of anything that goes with it, but even that aspect of the Budget is a disincentive to the small saver, the person who might have money out of this Budget—with which I fundamentally disagree—that he might want to invest. That is a disincentive because the Government have not thought it through.

At the end of the day one asks: who will gain from the Budget? The answer: a tiny minority. The Government have made no secret of their sectional interest or their belief in a divided nation. They make no secret of the fact that they believe that those who have shall have more, and if someone can crawl over the guy ahead of him to get more, so be it, and the Government will support him. They make no secret of the concept of greed as their dominating feature. The Budget is a reflection of that. It says to the guys who have a lot, "Here you are; have a lot more." To the guy who has nothing, the Government say, "We are not really interested in you, and you will not get very much."

The British people are a strange race. They will take it and take it, and then one day they will decide that they have had enough. This Budget displays blatant divisionism—that is about the best word that I can find. It divides the rich from the poor. The majority of our people—the poor, those on social welfare benefits or on low incomes—are ignored and will get nothing from the Budget. The nation has seen demonstrated in the Budget the triumph of greed over need, and the Government will pay for that.

Mr. Jeremy Hanley (Richmond and Barnes): I shall be as brief as possible, although hon. Members might imagine that, as a chartered accountant, I find that there is a great deal in the Budget that I should like to speak about. I have a sneaking suspicion that the abolition at a stroke of the attraction of many tax havens in the world will mean that there might be a slight reduction in the income of many chartered accountants who give tax advice. I welcome that!

Sir Humphrey Appleby, that well-known Secretary to the Cabinet, said that the three most unreliable things in public life were political memoirs, official denials and manifesto promises. After this Budget the list should be reduced, at least for the Conservative party, because our manifesto commitment was to reduce income tax to 25 per cent. and my right hon. Friend the Chancellor has done that on this historic occasion. He said that it was a historic occasion and it certainly has been. It will be seen as a new dawn, not only this year by people in Britain, but by people throughout the world. It will be seen as a major watershed for investment in Britain. In one fell swoop, money, effort and talent will return to this country and those are the things that would have been exported because of our previous tax rates. No greater contribution could be made to Britain than a Budget that will retain our doctors, scientists, engineers, teachers, qualified people and, indeed, nurses.

The change will be so deep-set that these tax cuts will be difficult for any other party in government to reverse. The tax changes are the successful culmination of nine years of prudent management of the economy and the background to them is clear. Only this week The Independent said that manufacturing output supports optimism. The article in The Independent says, contrary to the argument of the hon. Member for St. Helens, South (Mr. Bermingham):

> "Mr. Lawson's Budget forecast of continuing firm economic growth was supported earlier yesterday by figures showing that manufacturing output, led by the motor industry, is increasing at its fastest for 15 years."

The article says that manufacturing output, even excluding North sea oil, is higher than it has been for many years. The Guardian, not usually quick to praise the Government, says:

> "The last economic indicators before the Budget confirm a picture of strong economic growth".

The article in The Guardian concludes:

> "The sectors which have grown most rapidly comparing the latest three months . . . are metals . . . plastics, toys, jewellery and other manufacturing (up 11·5 per cent.)".

In other words, it is an extremely healthy economy that the Chancellor has to play with, and he has earned that play.

In this Budget we have given something to those who have provided the increased wealth needed to produce the increased expenditure from which all our people have benefited. Even socialist Australia and New Zealand have seen the light, but then they have at least had the responsibility for running an economy in the modern world—something that Opposition Members have not done for many, many years, thank goodness.

We should remember that almost every aspect of government is now receiving more in real terms than ever before. In the National Health Service, pensions, the police, even in Scotland, Northern Ireland and Wales, more money is spent by this Government in real terms than has ever been spent before. Only in housing and energy do we spend less and that is because the expenditure is matched by increased private sector expenditure. All that expenditure is paid for by increased growth. Let us consider increased expenditure on the Health Service. When the Government came to power we spent £8 billion on the National Health Service whereas the sum is now nearly £24 billion—an increase of £16 billion. That is nearly five times as much as the total tax cuts in this Budget.

All that the Labour party can say is that the Chancellor did not use the Budget to make an Autumn Statement. Either Opposition Members have short memories or it is gross incompetence. It is the wrong time of year to talk about expenditure. I sometimes wish that it was called not the Budget but the income debate and that the Autumn Statement was called the expenditure debate. I wish people understood when is the time to talk about which. It is no good blaming the Chancellor for not taking enough wickets or scoring enough runs when he is meant to be playing football.

Our economy is now so strong that we have increased the take through reducing tax rates since 1978-79. The total tax taken in 1978-79 at today's prices was nearly £119 billion. This year it is £156 billion. In other words, we have taken nearly one third more through cutting tax rates. In 1987-88, we shall spend £46 billion on social security and in 1988-89 it is estimated that we shall spend £48·5 billion. Therefore, at the same time as announcing a cut worth £1 billion to top taxpayers we have announced an increase of £2·5 billion in social security, which will benefit the least well off. I think that that is perfectly fair. That does not represent the reduction that the Opposition claim. But then Opposition Members have always preferred the cynical gesture to the genuine solution.

I have every confidence that, because of the healthy economy and because of the extra boost given, even more will be spent on the National Health Service and all the Government's responsibilities. I believe that as tax rates fall the tax collected increases. One of the simplest examples that one can give is of the supermarket manager who cuts prices not to sell less but to sell more. In the United States, the top rate is between 33 per cent. and 40 per cent. when federal and state taxes are taken into account. For the first time there, the majority of millionaires are self-employed people. Those are the people who create the jobs. They create sub-contracting and enhance the local economy. That is the sort of success that flows from wealth.

If Opposition Members want to soak the rich, I remind them that in 1978-79, the last tax year for which they were responsible, the top 5 per cent. of taxpayers paid 24 per cent. of our total revenue, whereas in 1987-88—before the present tax changes — that top 5 per cent. contributed 29 per cent. of revenues. Even after the tax reductions, the top 5 per cent. will pay 27 per cent. of the revenue. In other words, the top 5 per cent. have increased their contribution to the total taxes taken by 3 per cent. In volume terms, the top 5 per cent. now pay one third more than they did in 1978-79, so the Opposition should not complain.

It is difficult to forecast the actual rise in revenues. In America, it is said that revenues may now be falling, but that is because the American economy is weaker than ours. Ten years ago we were the sick man of Europe. The Labour party had had to have the International Monetary Fund brought in to look after its affairs. Even three years ago, in 1985, the Opposition tabled a censure motion because the exchange rate was $1·04 to the pound. Opposition Members now complain about the strength of the pound. Opposition Members will remember Westland and Land Rover in 1985 and 1986. People were saying that our economy was crippled. We should remember that at that time British companies in America were buying companies the size of Westland every week and companies the size of Land Rover every fortnight. Now, thanks to the strength of our economy, we are buying companies the size of Westland every other day and companies the size of Land Rover every week. If one asks the man in the street, "Does America own more of Britain than Britain owns of America?", he will say that the Americans own more of British industry. That is not true. British companies now own 25 per cent. more of American companies than American companies own of British companies. Such is the strength of our economy. Alas, next year, following the American general election, our tax rates will probably be lower than those in America. We can then expect a rapid repatriation of those who have fled our shores for America. It will be a strong incentive, too, for Americans to come here.

The Chancellor's achievement is unique in the world. He has cut taxes and produced a balanced Budget. He has got rid of anomalies and of unfairnesses and discrimination between men and women. He has created a simpler system. I must admit that, for this Chancellor, any other Budget must be an anti-climax but I hope that he will see through his pledge to cut the bottom rate to 20 per cent.

The problems that might flow from the Budget could be an overheated economy because of the extra money pumped into the system, a rush of imports, a balance of payments problem or an increase in interest rates. Those are the possible problems listed last night at an excellent Budget briefing run by Ernst and Whinney. In fact, interest rates have fallen today and they look as though they will fall further. Furthermore, only £4 billion has been injected into the economy and I do not think that that is inflationary against the total of £160 billion of tax; 2·5 per cent. is not enough to create the rush of imports that some fear. This is not a spending Budget so much as a Budget that will encourage saving and investment. Being a prudent and modest Budget, it should encourage prudence and modesty among those who have benefited from it. I do not believe that consumer spending will go through the roof. I regret that there is no tax on credit card spending, because that would reduce debt. I would also prefer it if the Chancellor did not use the blunt instrument of interest rates to manage the economy, although, as we have seen, they have fallen.

There are four ways in which the Chancellor could have done a tiny bit better. This may seem like carping after so much success. I think that the top limit on mortgages should have been raised. I represent Richmond and Barnes where house prices are astronomical — unfairly so to many young people. Most young people in dormitory areas of London need to share houses to get a foot on the property ladder. In areas such as the south-east, the increase from £30,000 would not be before time; it should increase to £60,000 or even £100,000, particularly for shared accommodation. I fear accommodation poses problems for nurses. Such a provision would also help with the right to buy. I would have pegged the mortgage rate at the standard rate, but because of the reduced top rates perhaps that is not necessary. Before the Budget, I stated openly that I hoped that the national insurance top limit would increase. I believe that there was justice in the case for that increase. I now understand why the Chancellor did not make such an increase. The generous reductions in all rates of tax have rendered it not only unnecessary but undesirable. Had it been increased beyond the 9 per cent. limit, middle and lower managers would be paying more rather than less tax in total as a result of the Budget, which would have been unjust.

I am sorry that there are no research and development incentives. I had hoped for more in that respect, but other incentives to industry are greatly improved.

Does the Budget answer the needs of the nation? It certainly answers the needs of the taxpayer. Let us never forget that we are not putting money into people's pockets — we are taking less out. That is an important distinction. The Budget also helps non-taxpayers by creating an even healthier economy. As a result of the Budget, a further 750,000 people will not pay tax at all. The Opposition's envy — a deadly sin — is sickeningly destructive and exploiting it shows up the negativity for which the Labour party is famous, dragging down rather than pulling up helpless people and ignoring the facts and the history of this Government. In terms of meeting the needs of the nation, the Budget deserves a resounding welcome. As for our position in the world, the Budget puts us in the forefront with an exciting economy which should bring people here to trade from all over the world, to the benefit of all our people.

Mr. Andrew Welsh (Angus, East): The hon. Member for Richmond and Barnes (Mr. Hanley) produced various theories and some statistics, but I wish that I could impart to him even a glimmer of knowledge of what life is really like for large sections of the population. He clearly fails to understand the reality of trying to scrape together some quality of life in parts of the north of England, Wales and Scotland. I shall be brief and stick strictly to the points that I wish to make so as to allow other hon. Members to take part in the debate.

From the Scottish point of view, the Budget is a great disappointment. It is a Budget for the south-east of England — designed, conceived and executed from the viewpoint of the Government's stronghold. As such, it is a disappointment and a wasted opportunity for Scotland. There is nothing in the proposals to hold out much hope for the regeneration of Scottish industry and commerce and nothing to tackle the fundamental social problems of Scotland, such as housing and unemployment, or to wage war on the poverty that afflicts our nation. On the contrary, the Budget gives massive tax handouts to the rich while totally ignoring the imposition of the poll tax on the poor and the needs of the National Health Service. It is a Budget for London —

Mr. Corbyn: Not all of London.

Mr. Welsh: It is a Budget for parts of London — for the money market and the rich sectors of the south-east of England economy. Scotland and other areas need a Budget to tackle poverty and promote social justice and an all-out drive to create new jobs and industrial regeneration. We need investment in health, housing and education, but the Budget fails to deliver it.

There is an air of unreality about this Budget. The London Evening Standard carries stories of individuals who are gaining more than £5,000 per day as a result of the Budget while one in three of the Scottish population lives on or below the poverty line. How can the Minister talk of a one-country economy when tax handouts of that magnitude are made to the rich while many people — if they are employed at all — probably will not earn that amount of money in a whole year? The Budget increases inequality and ignores the economic reality facing large sections of the population.

The so-called Thatcher economic miracle does not apply to oil-rich Scotland. Throughout 1987 and into 1988 we have been told how well our economy is doing. Yet seasonally adjusted unemployment in Scotland has fallen by only 1·6 per cent. — from 349,300, or 14·1 per cent., in January 1987 to 306,200, or 12·5 per cent., in January this year, whereas the United Kingdom rate fell from 11·2 per cent. to 9·2 per cent. The unemployment rate in Scotland is still 35 per cent. higher than the British average. Is that what the Government regard as doing well?

The index of industrial production in Scotland — the best available measure of output — in the second quarter of 1987 was only 0·1 per cent. higher than the average for 1980, seven years earlier, while in the United Kingdom as a whole it had risen by 11·6 per cent. The Prime Minister's economic miracle does not bear close inspection. For Scotland it represents nine years of wasted opportunity and more than £30 billion in oil revenue poured down the drain in support of unemployment levels unknown since the 1930s. Community programmes, youth training schemes, part-time work and a host of definitional niceties have been used to underestimate the unemployment figures and to hide the fact that almost a quarter of those fit and able to work in Scotland are without full-time employment. According to the latest figures from the Scottish Council (Development and Industry), Scottish manufactured export trade showed an unprecedented decline in 1986, completely out of line with the United Kingdom trend. The Government are now heaping on extra petrol taxes which will directly harm the rural areas and other parts of the Scottish economy.

I have outlined briefly some of the problems that a true Scottish Budget would tackle in the knowledge that the SNP can offer alternative proposals which have been mapped out and costed in detail and which I commend to the Chancellor. To meet Scottish needs, our proposals would include a massive programme of public works and industrial investment to create 290,000 new jobs in five years. We would propose expenditure of £200 million on house modernisation and insulation, an increase in basic pensions to £60 per week for a single person and £90 per week for a married couple, bringing us into line with European standards and well above the pittance currently offered in the United Kingdom. We would propose a cold climate allowance of £7 per week throughout the winter and a 10 per cent. increase in social security benefits rather than the cuts offered by the Government. We would inject £350 million extra resources into the National Health Service in Scotland. We would propose controls on takeovers of Scottish companies. We would set up a Scottish oil fund for industrial research and investment, a Scottish export unit to boost sales of goods and services, and extended powers and budgets for the Scottish Development Agency and the Highlands and Islands Development Board.

Those are just a few of the measures necessary for Scotland and they could easily be afforded within a Scottish Budget. Our economists calculate that a Scottish Treasury would have a pre-Budget surplus for 1988-89 of £2·2 billion. The total gross cost of our Budget package would be £2·7 billion. As the net cost would be substantially lower due to increased tax receipts and fewer benefit payments as a result of reduced unemployment, the Scottish Treasury would be left with a modest surplus. We look in vain for such positive proposals for Scotland in the Chancellor's Budget, which fails to provide any such policies and completely fails the Scottish people.

Mr. David Shaw (Dover): I welcome the Budget because throughout the 1970s—the start of my working career—I witnessed an economy which went from stop-start to start-stop. The 1970s began with economic growth, but ended in decline. Towards the end of the 1970s, world opinion of us was at an all-time low. Far worse than that, however, was the attitude of the Labour Government towards the Health Service in 1976. The National Health Service suffered badly under Labour, but last November my right hon. Friend the Chancellor announced that £1·1 billion more would be put into it next year.

Many things are wrong with the National Health Service. There are no satisfactory performance indicators by which to monitor its efficiency. Numbers of administration staff are still rising; on figures that I have seen, it appears that there are more administrators in the National Health Service than in the health service of the United States. I welcome the Government's review, therefore. The Government's approach has to do with value for money, not blank cheques.

My right hon. Friend the Chancellor gave us all good news about the economy in his Budget speech. He said, among other things, that manufacturing exports were up by 8·5 per cent. and that unit labour costs hardly rose last year, which shows that there is more efficiency and success in the economy.

Mr. Battle rose——

Mr. Shaw: I shall not give way. There are others wishing to speak.

The figures that were announced today should no longer be known as the unemployment figures but as the employment and job vacancy figures. In February alone, 86,000 more jobs were created. There are now 260,000 registered vacancies, which—it is well known—are only a third of total vacancies.

I was delighted with my right hon. Friend's other announcements of success. He said that we had had six years of sustained economic growth, achieved through tax cuts. We have had six years of sustained increases in public expenditure and of real increases in National Health Service funding. That could only come about through managing the economy successfully. However, I suggest to the Minister that the Government have had one economic failure — they have not yet convinced the Opposition that there is no such thing as a free lunch.

Mr. Corbyn: The hon. Gentleman has them all the time.

Mr. Shaw: The Budget was about increasing personal responsibility and putting people's incomes under their own control. It was also about home and share ownership. I am delighted that there are now 9 million shareholders in the country, a number which the Government proposals should increase. The benefits of privatisation are not only to widen ownership but to increase the profits being earned by the privatised companies to levels higher than they earned in the public sector. As a result of those profits, more taxes are paid to the Exchequer than when the companies were in the public sector. The privatised companies are also better at providing consumer services than they ever were in the public sector.

Budgets are about income and how much the Government take away in taxation. I welcome the proposals on the taxation treatment of wives. For more than 200 years that treatment has been unfair. For much of that time the tax on marriage has been excessive. When I got married, I was charged more by the Inland Revenue on my marriage than my wife's wedding ring cost.

There are lower taxes for everyone in the Budget. Some will ask, "Why not more lower taxes?" About 750,000 people have been removed from tax altogether and some us might ask, "Why not a million?" The staff nurse who has had a 2·5 per cent. net pay increase as a result of tax deductions is a case in point. Some will ask why she should not be given a 3 per cent. reduction. I want more tax reductions.

As for the famous business man that almost every Labour spokesman has mentioned, one must ask why the Opposition hate success. Why do Opposition Members hate the people who create jobs and who earn money overseas and bring it back to this country? Why do they hate successful business men who manage companies here and abroad and who bring profits and dividends to this country? The Opposition hate, and will always speak against, success. We should not lose sight of the massive contribution that the higher rate taxpayers have made to the country under the Government. When in government, the Labour party tried to squeeze them until the pips squeaked, but they raised only £800 million from the higher rate taxpayers. Under this Government, higher rate taxpayers pay £3,800 million a year which, even after the reduction of £1 billion, will still be about three times as much as Labour managed to get from them by the end of their years in office. I believe that next year the higher rate taxpayers will still be paying as much as this year because, with the tax cuts, they will be earning more, going in for fewer tax avoidance schemes, putting less money into pension plans and more into creating jobs and new businesses.

We are going to remove many of the technical requirements that have been holding some share option schemes back, but they have not exactly held back share ownership in this country: 1,500,000 people are now in such schemes. We now have a true capital-owning democracy. I am pleased to say that some of those 1·5 million people are in my constituency. Many secretaries, typists and shop floor workers there are part of share option schemes and have done well out of them.

I was also delighted by the abolition of yet another tax —capital duty. I have been involved for some time in my business career with helping to raise equity finance for companies and businesses, and capital duty was a considerable expense that hit those companies' receipts right at the start of their new expansion phases. It came in just as the equity finance was being raised, and has proved extremely disadvantageous over the years.

I wish to draw attention to the business expansion scheme, in which I worked for some time raising money for very small businesses. It has been a success, not as a means of helping the rich to avoid taxes as Opposition Members say—according to one report, more than 20 per cent. of the people who invest in the business expansion scheme pay tax at the standard rate—but in helping 2,200 small businesses, many of them having raised less than £100,000.

However, there has been one thing wrong with the business expansion scheme. Indeed, four years ago I brought this to the attention of my right hon. Friend, who was then a Treasury Minister and is now the Secretary of State for Social Services. In a paper which is no doubt gathering dust in the Treasury, but which perhaps might have been brought out recently, I pointed out that we should cap the business expansion scheme. I am delighted that the Government are now to do so at £500,000 for any one company.

However, I draw the attention of my hon. Friend the Economic Secretary to the Treasury to articles in today's newspapers and to representations that have been made to me that that policy, as announced, could be unfair. There are several prospectuses out at the moment for the purpose of raising money under the business expansion scheme. The case of one small company has been brought to my attention. Although only about £600,000 is being raised to help expand the business and to create more jobs, that company may lose the whole of the money subscribed for shares because it may not be able to close the issue. That company has had to spend between £70,000 and £100,000 in legal and advisory fees, which will be lost if the issue cannot be closed. The problem of costs is caused by the Financial Services Act 1986, which is correct and proper in protecting shareholders but which has made more expensive the legal and professional advice that is required for the issue of prospectuses. I hope that my hon. Friend will be able to consider that, if the date of the issue of a prospectus is after Budget day, then that date could be the closing date for investment under the business expansion scheme being limited to £500,000 or so. I would advise him that some relief is needed on this point.

I realise that time is getting on and conclude by saying that I welcome the Budget and the tax changes that have been made. This Budget is about increasing the number of jobs in our economy and the prosperity of individuals and businesses. I believe that the nation will be a lot better off with the many years of sustained economic growth that lie ahead of us because of this Budget.

Mr. Robert N. Wareing (Liverpool, West Derby): The hon. Member for Dover (Mr. Shaw) has just repeated many of the myths that we have heard since the beginning of this afternoon's debate. When I listened to the Chancellor of the Duchy who opened the debate, I was troubled not so much by what he said about the so-called buoyancy of the British economy, but by whether he actually believed it. If he is only saying those things, he is a fool, but if he really believes that the British economy is doing as well as he argues, he is more than a fool—he is a dangerous man and we shall have to take cognisance of that fact.

The tax cuts that have been made in the Budget are not simply the way in which the rich will be fed from the tables of the needy, but the way in which the consumer boom will receive a boost. In the context of the British economy at present, that consumer boom means an increase in this country's trade deficit.

It was interesting to hear the hon. Member for Dover talk about the percentage increase in exports. However, he never mentioned the percentage increase in imports, which is the true guide to whether the economy is moving in the right direction. Therefore, let us look not at what the Labour party says about exports and imports, but at the Treasury's forecast. The Treasury forecasts an increase of 3·5 per cent. in exports next year, but it also forecasts a 7 per cent. rise next year in imports. Again, according to the Treasury, that will lead to a manufacturing trade deficit of £8·5 billion next year.

What would be the deficit in our balance of payments next year if we did not have North sea oil? There has not been a single mention in any of the Tory speeches this afternoon—or indeed yesterday—about North sea oil. When Conservative Members talk about the then Government running to the International Monetary Fund in 1976, they should ask where this Government would be running if they had not inherited the bonanza of North sea oil. Britain is the only oil-rich country in the European Economic Community.

This afternoon the Minister talked about the top rates of income tax and gloried in the fact that, in giving largesse to the richest people in this country, the top rates have been reduced to 40 per cent. He is happy about that and tried to snipe at the Labour party by saying that Labour Governments in New Zealand and Australia have relatively low rates of taxation. However, he has forgotten that in capitalist countries such as Japan the top rate of income tax is 60 per cent. In both Holland and Belgium the top rates are 72 per cent. In Germany the top rate is 56 per cent.—nearly as high as it was in this country before the Government came along with their giveaway Budget to the rich. In France, the figure is 58 per cent. and in Sweden, which has a Labour Government, it is 77 per cent. The Government might say that the figure in the United States is as low as 33 per cent., but they forget that United States federal Government taxation is supplemented by taxes from the state and local authorities. The Minister had the gall to refer to workers paying themselves too much too quickly, yet he is a member of a Government who are giving large sums of unearned income to many rich people, as my hon. Friend the Member for Livingston (Mr. Cook) illustrated earlier.

In his Budget speech, the Chancellor of the Exchequer said:

> "During the 1960s and the 1970s, Britain's growth rate was the lowest of all the major European economies. During the 1980s, our growth rate has been the highest of all the major European economies."—[Official Report, 15 March 1988; Vol. 129, c. 995.]

The true test of whether a country is building an economy for the future is whether it is modernising its equipment, building factories and providing the most up-to-date equipment in those factories. On 2 March, I asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster about Britain's standing in comparison with OECD countries in respect of the proportion of gross domestic product spent on fixed investment. He gave me a comparison between this country and OECD countries. In Australia, Austria, Canada, Denmark, Finland, France, West Germany, Iceland, Ireland, Italy, Japan, Luxembourg, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Portugal, Spain, Sweden, Turkey and the United States—that is 20 out of the 24 OECD countries—fixed capital investment in relation to GDP is greater than in the United Kingdom. The Government have nothing to be proud of there.

That proportion is also reflected in the fact that the United Kingdom spends the lowest percentage of GDP on health of all EEC countries, with the exception of Greece, Spain and Portugal. The Government claim that there has been a 30 per cent. real increase in health spending since 1979, but that takes no account of the fact that pay and price levels have risen faster in the Health Service than in the economy as a whole. It takes no account of the need for NHS resources to grow in real terms each year to keep track of the rising number of elderly people and advances in medical technology.

Even the former Minister for Health, the right hon. Member for Brentford and Isleworth (Sir B. Hayhoe), has said that NHS funding needs to rise by at least 2 per cent. every year to keep up with prices. That has occurred only once since 1979, in 1981-82. The Government insist on keeping expenditure low in the essential services. The Minister said that Labour Governments would have contributed to local authority expenditure as if there were no tomorrow, suggesting that local authority expenditure was of no importance. Without investment in our infrastructure — roads, schools, the Health Service, the lighting of our streets and the provision of homes — there is no modern civilised economy. Those who think that public expenditure is a waste should look to the private contractors who feed off the contracts of local authorities. Ask them how they have suffered from the cuts in local authority expenditure.

This is a rich man's Budget. It was Benjamin Disraeli who once said that the Conservative party is the party of the rich. He also said, as Conservative Members in their speeches have attempted to confirm tonight, that the Conservative party is an organised hypocrisy.

9.10 pm

Mr. Ian Taylor (Esher): I am delighted to catch your eye, Madam Deputy Speaker, and I promise that I shall take no more time than a long wink.

The Budget is to be welcomed. I have sat through many Labour Members' speeches. They seem to forget that for many years the great economic objective of many of us was to see a balanced Budget which at the same time released resources to individuals to spend as they would wish.

This is a balanced Budget which gives us tax reform and simplification, for which many of us have been searching for many years. It removes the worst excesses of tax as a weapon of so-called enforced egalitarianism.

No longer can it be regarded as immoral to have unearned income from capital or savings as opposed to the so-called superiority of earned income. Many people who are dismissed as being rich by Labour Members are ordinary working people who have scrimped and saved to achieve an unearned income, only to find that the Labour party points a finger at them as if they had descended into some deep immorality.

The Labour party's thinking on that issue has stultified since the 1970s. It is the policy of envy to call rich anybody who has worked hard and thriftily.

The Conservative party has given people an opportunity. It is we who have enabled them to buy their council houses and to buy shares so that there are now as many shareholders as there are members of trade unions.

The Budget has kept the level of taxation as a stable percentage of the gross domestic product but made radical shifts in the rates that are payable. It has taken 750,000 people out of tax altogether. That is not something of which we need be at all ashamed.

There are one or two anomalies in the Budget which I should like my right hon. and hon. Friends on the Treasury Bench to consider, including the fact that there now seems to be a bias against incorporation. If one adds up the national insurance paid by employers and employees, it comes to 19·45 per cent., payable by companies which are owned by their directors. The self-employed pay only a 6·3 per cent. rate. I do not have time to amplify the implications this evening, but I hope that it will be looked into.

In broad terms, the Budget gives us all an opportunity to look forward to a sustainable growth in the economy, the creation of jobs and a thriving Britain.

9.13 pm

Mr. Chris Smith (Islington, South and Finsbury): Our debates yesterday and today have revealed the Budget to be fundamentally uncaring, divisive, inegalitarian and based on an utterly misplaced sense of priorities.

My hon. Friends the Members for Oxford, East (Mr. Smith), for Liverpool, Walton (Mr. Heffer), for Leeds, West (Mr. Battle), for St. Helens, South (Mr. Bermingham) and for Liverpool, West Derby (Mr. Wareing) have made a powerful case for the uncaring nature of the Budget that the Chancellor introduced on Tuesday.

Conservative Members have stressed the prudence with which the Chancellor has approached his task. "Prudence" has been a favourite word this week. It was used frequently by the Chancellor. It was used again yesterday by the Chief Secretary and it was used by the Financial Secretary to the Treasury. Doubtless it will be used by the Economic Secretary when he replies to the debate.

How should we rate the Chancellor for prudence? What would a prudent Chancellor, faced with the economic circumstances of this country, have done in a prudent Budget? He would have looked, first, at the worsening balance of payments. The Government predict a deficit of £4 billion on our balance of payments next year. The scale and trend of the deficit ought to be worrying the Government, because the trend is in the wrong direction.

The Chancellor, in considering the deficit, should have decided to make his Budget choices in ways best designed to encourage and stimulate exports, not to suck in imports; yet he has done precisely the opposite. The Budget has been designed to fuel personal consumption of durables, which is the highest import content of economic activity.

The Chancellor should have looked at interest rates. He should have given a much clearer signal than he gave today to the markets, first, about the need for a stable but competitive exchange rate, which at the moment is desperately uncompetitive; and, secondly, about a substantial reduction in interest rates, because we have one of the highest real interest rates, in real terms, in the developed world. The Chancellor today has gone some way towards restoring his credibility and a better policy direction, but it is too late and the reduction is not sufficient. We must have lower interest rates and a more stable and competitive exchange rate to improve the competitive edge for business and trade.

If the Chancellor were being prudent, he would have considered the value of United Kingdom-owned assets abroad. The Government have given the game away at page 22, paragraph 3.29, of the Red Book:

> "The value of the UK's stock of net overseas assets is provisionally estimated to have been about £90 billion at the end of 1987, some £20 billion down on end-1986."

The reduction in value is due to the exchange rate with the dollar and to the fall in the equities market last October. The Chancellor ought to have thought carefully about avoiding actions which would lead inevitably to the accumulation of further assets abroad. The combination of available liquid resources for the rich and an overvalued pound is guaranteed to do precisely that.

The Chancellor should have looked also at the disturbing level of growth in personal consumer credit and he would have noticed that from 1979 to 1986 mortgage borrowing rose as a proportion of GDP from 3·2 per cent. to 7·1 per cent., and personal credit other than mortgages rose from 7·3 per cent. of GDP to 13·5 per cent. of GDP. If the right hon. Member for Shropshire, North (Mr. Biffen) is worried about the economy overheating in the south and south-east, he should look carefully at the figures for personal debt and personal savings. Personal savings are at their lowest since 1959, which is indicative of the current real state of the British economy. Instead of a Budget for personal spending, largely by the rich, a prudent Chancellor would have gone for a Budget spending money on investment. He did not do that, so I fear that the Chancellor has not done terribly well by the prudency test.

What other tests should we apply to test the Chancellor? Let us be charitable to him, to start with, and consider him in his new guise as an environmentalist. He has done one or two sensible things in the Budget for the environment. For example, the differential way in which he has approached lead-free petrol is much to be welcomed. We strongly applaud that. But what steps are the Government taking to make it worth while for the manufacture or conversion of vehicles which take lead-free petrol?

The Chancellor has also taken one or two sensible steps in regard to the taxation regime for commercial forestry. We welcome the removal of tax relief on planting and maintenance. I note that he has also removed taxation on sale, but, of course, hardly anyone paid tax on sale anyway, because it was easy to avoid. The introduction of grants for small-scale planting, especially of broadleaves and deciduous trees, is also to be welcomed, and the guidelines issued for England and Wales by the Forestry Commission are indeed worth while.

However, we are entitled to ask further questions. First, what is the Scottish Office up to? The Scottish Office has yet to issue the same sensible guidelines for Scotland that the Forestry Commission has issued for England and Wales. In Scotland, the principal environmental concern about forestry planting being damaging to the environment is at its height. We are also entitled to ask about the 100,000 hectares of land which currently have forestry approval, but which have not yet been planted. That land includes four environmentally sensitive sites totalling 2,000 hectares in the flow country in the far north of Scotland. We do not have the details of the Chancellor's changes, so we do not know whether his changes will still permit those areas to be planted under the previous taxation regime, as that would be environmentally damaging.

We are also entitled to ask why the Government have not taken the most environmentally sensible step in relation to forestry, which is to bring maintenance within the planning system. Perhaps "Mr. Lawson the environmentalist" deserves one and a half or two cheers.

What then of "Mr. Lawson the feminist"? The Chancellor, in his Budget provisions, has made much of the relationship between a husband and wife. In particular, he brought in, from the introduction which he gave them, what sounded to be extremely valuable proposals. The principle of independent taxation for a husband and wife and the end of aggregation and the disgracefully demeaning process whereby a wife's income automatically counts as her husband's income is very much to be welcomed. If the Chancellor's scheme as proposed in the Budget actually did all that, we would be applauding it to the echo, but of course his scheme does not really do that at all.

The present system operates the married man's allowance which is worth something like 0·6 the ordinary personal allowance. If the wife goes out to work, there is the earned income allowance to be added to that, so that 2·6 times the personal allowance is made available to the husband.

Under the Chancellor's new scheme the husband will have one personal allowance, the wife will have one personal allowance, and there will be a floating married couple's allowance worth 0·6 of a single allowance. That married couple's allowance will go, in the first instance, to the man. The press handout from the Inland Revenue gives the game away. It says:

> "The married couple's allowance will go in the first instance to the husband, so he will see no reduction in his tax allowances as a result of the change to the new system. But if he does not have enough income to make full use of the allowance he will be able to transfer any unused portion to his wife."

The transfer of that allowance to the wife will take place only if the husband's income is insufficient to make full use of the allowance and only if the husband decides to transfer it. I do not call that independence for married women.

Of course, some people will gain by the changes that are proposed to the married man's allowance, especially about three quarters of a million pensioner couples with savings. However, their gain will come not because of the new independent principle that the Chancellor claims he is instilling into the system, but because of the change in the wife's earned income allowance into an earned or unearned income allowance. It is not the principle of independence that produces the financial gain, but the change in the nature of the allowance that the Government are introducing.

Of course, a substantial number of people in higher income brackets will gain from the new extra allowance that will effectively be given for capital gains or investment income. So "Lawson the feminist" does not come out terribly well from the Budget.

We should look at the other things that the Chancellor is doing. For example, the changes in maintenance will, in our view, almost certainly lead to lower maintenance provision being made by the courts. The Chancellor has failed to take the three principal decisions that he could have taken which would have transformed the economic and taxation status of women. The first decision would have been a substantial improvement in child benefit—not just removing the refusal to uprate fully in line with inflation but to go further. Child benefit is far and away the best targeted means of improving the ability of women to bring up children. The second decision would have been proper taxation relief for workplace nurseries. The third decision would have been to persuade his colleagues to remove the poll tax. On precisely the same date as the Chancellor's much trumpeted taxation independence for a man and his wife takes effect, the man and his wife will become jointly and severally liable for the payment of the poll tax.

What about "Nigel Lawson the battler against perks and loopholes"? There are one or two bits of tightening up in the Budget which are to be welcomed. However, it is hardly a great package of reforms. Of course, some additional anomalies are being included in the Budget. For example, we have only to look at the pre-1982 provisions on capital gains tax. Some Conservative Members—for example, the hon. Member for Southampton, Test (Mr. Hill)—made considerable play of the small shopkeeper who is likely to benefit from the proposals. Who will really benefit from the changes in the capital gains tax regime?

It is no accident that while the Chancellor was making that announcement on Tuesday the value of property companies on the stock market was going up dramatically, and it has continued to go up since. Warburg's analysis of the Budget, for example, says:

"The change in the base date . . . for both companies and individuals will have an enormous impact on contingent tax liabilities. For many older established property investment companies, the change in the base date together with the benefits of indexation since then will virtually eliminate the tax liability."

If I were a Chancellor aiming at targeting £290 million of tax relief I would not particularly target Peachey Property, Town Centre and Chesterfield to benefit.

One of the most outrageous decisions in the Budget is the extension of the business expansion scheme into the private rented sector. It is bad enough that the Chancellor has left the business expansion scheme more or less intact, with one or two minor changes at the margin, but here a massive and highly lucrative new loophole has been created. Under the present terms of what the Chancellor is proposing there is no guarantee that the property that is to be let by the newly established companies will have tenants. They need only have property available for letting. I hope that when we get the detailed rules there will be a provision that the property must be let to tenants.

Conservative Members have said that there is security in the fact that they are going to be let on assured tenancies, but assured tenancies have open-ended rent provisions. In addition, according to schedule 2 to the Housing Bill, there are 12 ways in which a landlord can get rid of a tenant under an assured tenancy, and the tax relief that will be available under the business expansion scheme will be not only on the initial investment but on the capital gain after five years.

The financial pages of the Evening Standard are perhaps not the normal place that one would look for evidence to back up a case mounted by the Labour party, but in yesterday's edition there is a quotation from accountants Grant Thornton, who say that such residential property could become Britain's number one tax shelter. The article concludes by saying:

"Rachman, one suspects, would not have been slow to take advantage of the scheme if it had been around in the 1960s."

That is the real nature of the business expansion scheme change that the Chancellor introduced on Tuesday.

So, "Lawson the prudent Chancellor, Lawson the environmentalist, Lawson the feminist and Lawson the plugger of loopholes" does not get a very high rating on any of those tests.

What of "Lawson the fair-minded maker of choices and priorities"? On this count, above all, the Budget stands roundly condemned. Any Budget is about making choices: where to raise money, where to return money, where, indeed, to spend money. It becomes increasingly clear, if we look at the figures in this Budget—£2,195 million on top-rate taxpayers, £40 million on the business expansion scheme extension, £10 million on capital gains tax retirement relief, £290 million on the ending of the early capital gains tax liabilities, and £200 million on inheritance tax—that those are the decisions on priorities that the Chancellor has made in this Budget, and those decisions have been made just three weeks before major changes in social security and housing benefit will savagely hit the poorest people in our society.

What are the Government saving by those measures on housing benefit and on social security? If one counts the savings and costs of the transitional arrangements, the Government are saving about £480 million on their changes in social security which are due in three weeks' time. The cost of their 1982 decision on capital gains tax and their inheritance tax decision, taken alone, could have paid for those savings in social security, which will hit the poorest in our society. Nothing could more eloquently highlight the Government's sense of priorities.

This Budget does nothing for the Health Service and it does nothing to bring about a truly progressive tax system. That would have been a really radical reform by the Chancellor. The Budget merely pretends an interest in the needs and wishes of women. It creates massive new loopholes for tax evasion and makes the wrong decisions about the macro-economic effects of public and personal sector spending. It leaves industry competing internationally with its hands tied behind its back. Above all, the Budget redistributes resources fundamentally from the poor to the rich. As such, it is a wrong-headed, socially divisive and fundamentally unfair Budget. Given what the Chancellor was saying on Radio 2 earlier today, I sincerely hope that it is his last Budget.

The Economic Secretary to the Treasury (Mr. Peter Lilley): I congratulate the hon. Member for Islington, South and Finsbury (Mr. Smith) on his contribution to the debate, which was characteristically lucid, eloquent and constructive. Regrettably, few contributions from the Opposition these days have those features, so I welcome his speech all the more. I will not damage the hon. Gentleman's career any further, however, by saying that I agreed with everything that he said, although I agreed with some of it.

I often agree with much that the hon. Gentleman says. For example, I am a regular reader of his column in Tribune. I agreed with much of what he wrote in his October column, where he said:

"There is now widespread agreement, through most parts of the Labour movement, that one of the principal reasons for our election defeat in June was our failure to convince many of our potential supporters that we had it right on economic policy."

He was right. Unfortunately, after two and a half days of debate, the Labour party is no nearer convincing its supporters, or the House, that it has got it right on economic policy. The party has not succeeded because no one on the Opposition Front Bench who has addressed the House in the past two and half days has endeavoured to spell out an alternative strategy to that laid down in my right hon. Friend's Budget. They have told us what they dislike, but not what they like.

I have three very simple questions for the hon. Gentleman. One of them picks up a matter that he went on to discuss in the Tribune article. He said:

"We lost support in the final week of the campaign over taxation and especially on the married man's tax allowance issue."

I want to know from the hon. Gentleman, or from his right hon. and hon. Friends, what they are going to do about the married couple's allowance, as it will be soon. Will they abolish it, as they said they would during the election campaign? "No answer" came the stern reply.

Perhaps the hon. Gentleman will answer a second question, which has been raised by several Opposition Members. Will Labour abolish the upper earnings limit on national insurance contributions? Hon. Gentlemen have criticised my right hon. Friend the Chancellor for not doing so.

Mr. Chris Smith: The Economic Secretary clearly has not been listening to the debate in the past days. We have made it very clear that the existence of a ceiling on national insurance contributions is profoundly regressive in the tax system, and we want to see a properly progressive tax system that does not leave that anomaly in place.

Mr. Lilley: It is very useful to have that on the record. It would move in the opposite direction to that taken by my hon. Friend in his Budget. Marginal rates of taxation were reduced across the board. He will be increasing the marginal rates of tax and contributions which people face across a broad spectrum of incomes.

A third question, to which I will also welcome an answer, is this. Will they oppose the reduction in the basic rate of income tax on Monday? They will have to make up their minds on Monday night when the chance will come to choose. We have heard his decision from one of my right hon. Friends, the Member for Shropshire, North (Mr. Biffen). Will they also have the courage to join him? We would like to know. Once again, "No answer," came the stern reply.

Mr. Whitney: Would my hon. Friend allow me to join him in pressing the Labour party on this? We had an interesting contribution from, I think, the hon. Member for Livingston (Mr. Cook), who complained that 25 per cent. is a high rate of entry to tax. That statement appears to be in some contrast to the Labour party's objection to reducing the tax, when at one point Opposition Members seemed to advocate that 25 per cent. was too high. I hope that my hon. Friend will join me in welcoming this converstion of the Front Bench of the Labour party.

Mr. Lilley: My hon. Friend is quite right. It is a shame that we have not been able to flush them out on this issue. If they believe in open government, do they not believe in open opposition as well?

Mr. Robin Cook: I am afraid that the hon. Gentleman—I cannot remember whether he was here at the time—has apparently forgotten that the very first Budget that his Government brought in abolished the reduced rate band, a reduced rate band which was then 8p less than the current standard rate. If one wishes to reduce the starting rate of taxation, one begins with the reduced rate band.

Mr. Lilley: Since we are all now on what was Labour's reduced rate band, that does not really carry us much further. Would Labour Members reduce the rest of us to the reduced rate band if they had their way on Monday night? That is what we would like to know.

My right hon. Friend's Budget has many facets—fairness to married women, recognition and removal of penalties on marriage, simplification, the removal of perks—but a major aspect is the range of measures designed to improve the working of the supply side of the economy. As the theme of today's debate is industry, I shall try to concentrate on these supply side measures, but, first of all, I want to respond to a number of comments made by my right hon. and hon. Friends and by Opposition Members.

I turn first to the contribution of my right hon. Friend the Member for Shropshire, North who made, as he always does, a punchy, witty and excessively modest contribution. He was modest in one respect, in that he said that he had never had a day's lesson in economics.

I think that my right hon. Friend may have forgotten summoning me round, when he was Chief Secretary to the Treasury, and asking me to explain and elucidate the monetary situation at the time, which was causing him concern, as it apparently does now. I remember the occasion vividly. He sat there behind an otherwise empty desk, containing one book, which faced me rather than himself, a biography of Enoch Powell. When I asked him why it was there, he said that it was to show his officials where his intellectual loyalties lay—where, of course, they still lie.

But I wonder whether his master, from whom I take many of my own views, would agree with his proposed decision today, because I then pointed out to him—I think that he agreed with me—that, although the money supply figures were showing considerable expansion, one should, as he always does, use common sense and examine the situation as it is. Clearly it was wrong to say that we were being profligate monetarily at a time when unemployment was far too high, when the exchange rate was visibly very strong, and when interest rates had been raised to considerable levels.

I would ask my right hon. Friend to consider today whether it can really be said that there is a serious danger of overheating from this Budget, which, for the first time for 20 years or so, gives us a substantial surplus; when we have interest rates which, in real terms, are significantly positive and obviously bearing down on inflation; and when there is, regrettably, still a high measure of spare capacity and unemployment in the labour market.

Surely, with a strong exchange rate, with a surplus and with the capacity and resilience that the economy has shown, we do not need a yet larger surplus, as my right hon. Friend implicitly proposes. Or am I mistaken in thinking that, in voting against, as he has suggested he may—and I hope that he will reconsider it—a cut in the basic rate of income tax, he wants to add that money to the public sector borrowing requirement, the repayment of debt? If not, and if it were merely to be spent by the Government, that must be at least as, if not more, inflationary in its consequences. [Interruption.] If the hon. Members who are making sedentary contributions wish to make more reasoned contributions in an upright position, I shall give way.

Mr. Nigel Spearing (Newham, South): I am grateful to the Minister for that invitation, because he may be able to give us a lesson, as well as his right hon. Friend the Member for Shropshire, North (Mr. Biffen).

[Mr. Nigel Spearing]

If the money was spent on, say, the Health Service, would that necessarily be inflationary?

Mr. Lilley: It would be just as inflationary as leaving the money in people's pockets and allowing them to spend it themselves—no more, and no less.

The hon. Member for Londonderry, East (Mr. Ross) welcomed the Budget from the point of view of Northern Ireland. I am sure that, on St. Patrick's day, and after yesterday's tragedy, all of us wish success for any measure that may bring renewed peace and prosperity to Northern Ireland. The hon. Gentleman is absolutely right that the lower tax rates will render that Province more attractive to international business, as well as giving a domestic stimulus to the economy.

My hon. Friend the Member for Bournemouth, West (Mr. Butterfill) has campaigned effectively and assiduously on behalf of a proposal which he believes would help the elderly to benefit in their retirement from schemes enabling them to raise income from their residential homes. My hon. Friend has received a detailed reply from my right hon. Friend the Financial Secretary. Let me add that such schemes are possible under the present law. He proposes extending extra tax relief not so much to the existing occupants as to their heirs, who would get double relief.

The proposals as my hon. Friend has suggested them would be of little or no value to those living in houses of modest value—£50,000 or less. They become a serious proposition only if the houses are worth £100,000 or more. There, the case for making such a concession is much less strong, on social grounds. Although we shall respond to the suggestion in greater detail, I do not know whether we shall be able to change our view.

My hon. Friend was followed by the hon. Member for Oxford, East (Mr. Smith). I look forward to going to his constituency tomorrow, and visiting the Radcliffe hospital. I noticed that, unlike many of his hon. Friends who have berated Conservative Members for using national statistics about the Health Service and have responded with anecdotes, the hon. Member for Oxford, East stuck to the statistics. He told us no anecdotes about his local Health Service. I suppose that that is because his local newspaper—which I just happen to have with me—featured the headline

"Cash tonics for health service".

Mr. Andrew Smith rose—

Mr. Lilley: The hon. Gentleman had his chance to talk about his local Health Service, and refused to do so.

The hon. Gentleman was followed by my hon. Friend the Member for Cambridgeshire, South-West (Sir A. Grant), who represents the other great university town, which I visited rather longer ago. My hon. Friend paid a generous tribute to my right hon. Friend the Chancellor. I thought that he was excessively modest, because he too is always eminently worth listening to. I found his report from Japan about the incentives being given to importers very interesting.

It may be no surprise to my hon. Friend, although it will be to many Opposition Members, that exports from this country to Japan have increased by some 30 per cent. over the past year—from a base that was not high enough, but a 30 per cent. growth rate is surely proof that competitiveness is to the advantage of British firms, and that they are exploiting it.

The hon. Member for Liverpool, Walton (Mr. Heffer) is not present, so I shall not reply to what he had to tell us.

My hon. Friend the Member for Richmond and Barnes (Mr. Hanley) was enthusiastic about the Budget, because he believed that it would put one category of people out of work: the tax consultants. I share his view that those gentlemen could turn their brains to more productive use after the Budget is implemented.

The hon. Member for Angus, East (Mr. Welsh) said that his part of the country needed investment. He will be pleased by the figures in the Red Book, which show that manufacturing investment in the coming year is expected to grow by 11·5 per cent. He will also be pleased at the proposals on the oil industry announced in the Budget. Measures were announced that affect the southern part of the North sea, but there was also one that did not receive so much publicity. It is about the disposal of oil licences throughout the North sea.

When I spoke last year in the Finance Bill debate, I said that we would look to see whether there were ways in which we could prevent capital gains tax from blocking rearrangements of licence interests, farm-ins and farm-outs and swaps of licences. After helpful discussions with the industry, we succeeded in doing so, and have come up with a proposal that we think will enable a proper market interest in offshore oil licences to take place. It will enable those who are best equipped and best financed, who have the best ideas and are most eager to explore and develop blocks, to farm them without a fiscal penalty. I hope that the hon. Gentleman and his hon. Friend who also spoke about the oil industry will welcome that.

My hon. Friends the Members for Dover (Mr. Shaw) and for Esher (Mr. Taylor) spoke about the business expansion scheme. They were anxious about schemes that are caught by shares being issued after Budget day. The new limit that we propose is a maximum of £500,000 per company. The press release published by the Inland Revenue on Budget day explained that this limit would apply only to shares issued after Budget day. This follows the normal practice for implementing changes to the business expansion scheme.

It has been put to us that the £500,000 limit could bear harshly on companies that issued a prospectus before Budget day but did not issue shares before the end of that day. We decided to make a small relaxation in the scheme to help such companies. Provided that a company has issued a prospectus before Budget day and issues the shares before the end of the present tax year, there will be a higher limit. This will be £1 million instead of £500,000. This doubling of the limit should help most companies in this position to raise more than their minimum targets set in the prospectus. It will prevent an excessive amount of money from being channelled artificially into the last of these larger schemes. I am sure that this change will be widely welcomed.

I make it clear that, if we think it necessary, we shall in future make changes to the BES scheme to apply to shares issued on Budget day as well as afterwards. This is in accordance with our general policy, where there would otherwise be scope for forestalling by doing business very quickly on Budget night.

This debate is about industry, which means that we are talking about the supply side of the British economy. There is no doubt that the supply side of the economy has been transformed over the past eight years. After coming bottom in the growth league of major European countries in the 1960s and 1970s, we have come top in the 1980s. Last year, we enjoyed more rapid growth than any other major industrialised country, including Japan.

In terms of competitiveness, we are on top of the world league, both in manufacturing industry and growth. As a result, the volume of British manufactured exports is up by over a quarter since 1978. Last year, manufactured exports rose by 8·5 per cent. [Interruption.] The Opposition will find a dark cloud in any silver lining. The reflationary fallacy has underlain much of the Opposition's thinking. They used to believe that the prime determinant of economic growth was the level of demand. They believed that demand could be manipulated only by increasing Government borrowing. They thought that, if economic growth was sluggish, it was merely a symptom of deficient demand. I am speaking of the bad old days when the Opposition learned their economics and they have learned nothing since.

That view was expressed by 364 economists seven years ago this month, in a famous letter to the Chancellor. The experience of the last seven years has proved them wrong, because they said that growth could not occur unless there was increased Government borrowing to stimulate demand. In the last six years, the economy has grown even though we have been reducing Government borrowing. This past year has put the kybosh on Opposition views. We have witnessed the most rapid growth in the British economy for 15 years, in a year when Government finances have finally moved from borrowing to repayment of debt.

The measures in the Budget that contribute to the supply side improvement of the economy include a whole range of matters, but one of the most important of them is clearly tax reform and tax reduction. It is impossible to distinguish the impact of past changes from the many other supply side changes that have contributed to the improvement of the economy. However, there is no doubt that the changes that we have made have proved that, on the whole, lower taxes tend to be followed by increased revenues.

For example, in 1984 my right hon. Friend the Chancellor announced a reform of corporation tax involving cutting the rate from 52 per cent. to 35 per cent. Since then, far from declining, the yield of corporation tax has more than doubled. Stamp duty on shares has been quartered and that on houses has been halved, yet their yield in the year now ending is estimated at £2·4 billion, as against £1 billion in 1984. The introduction of indexation and exempt allowances in 1982 reduced the effective rate of tax on capital gains, yet since that time the yield from capital gains tax has risen by more than two thirds in real terms.

There is every reason to suppose, in the light of that experience and in the light of the experience repeated several times by my right hon. and hon. Friends, that the cuts in the top rates of tax to the more bearable and acceptable level of 40 per cent. will be followed by an increase in tax revenues, as was the cut from 83 per cent. and 98 per cent. to 60 per cent. We can expect a renewed reinforcement of supply side measures that have reinvigorated the economy.

I want to announce one supply side measure that does not depend on taxation. Competitive and efficient markets rely on the free flow of information. Following the announcement in last year's Budget debate, a consultative exercise was carried out during 1987 on a number of propositions involving the disclosure of information about importers. The main proposal was that Customs and Excise should disclose by sale the names and addresses of importers listed against the commodity codes under which the products they import are classified. A majority of the comments were in favour of the proposals.

Following an interdepartmental review of the results of the consultative exercise, I announced in a written reply earlier today that the Government have decided to proceed with the proposal. A new provision in the Finance Bill will enable Customs and Excise to extract information from statutory declarations made by importers or their agents on import entries. Customs will provide marketing agents each month with the names and addresses of importers listed against each of the nine-digit commodity codes as published in the integrated tariff of the United Kingdom. There are 11,500 different codes in all. The provision of the information should help all firms to identify markets, so helping to improve the effectiveness of their marketing, market research and product development to the benefit of industry and consumer alike.

The charge to the marketing agents will be set at a level to cover customs' costs and the marketing agents will be free to publish the information in a form and at a price attractive to their customers. We hope to implement the arrangements from January 1989, subject to the satisfactory conclusion of contractual arrangements with the marketing agents and implementing the necessary changes to computer systems. The arrangements will be kept under review. Customs will continue the current arrangements known as suppressions, under which customs may, for example, combine information for two or more commodity codes when importers can show that the publication of a more detailed breakdown would enable more confidential information about their business activities to be identified, directly or by deduction. I hope that the House will agree that that should prove a useful measure.

I have illustrated the fact that this is a supply side Budget. And it is a Budget that will powerfully reinforce the measures that have revitalised our economy over the past eight years. That vitality is already bringing us prosperity, generating jobs and restoring national pride. Eighteen months ago exactly, the hon. Member for Dunfermline, East (Mr. Brown), now Labour's shadow Chief Secretary, told The Guardian:

"The Government simply cannot reduce unemployment by present economic policies."

Since then, unemployment has fallen by nearly three quarters of a million. That is our answer to Opposition Members.

Our policies are working. The people of this country know that they are working. We were re-elected in June to defend and extend the policies of success. That is what this Budget does, and I commend it to the House.

Debate adjourned. [Mr. Maclean.]

Debate to be resumed upon Monday next.

Opren (Settlement)

Motion made, and Question proposed, That this House do now adjourn. [Mr. Maclean.]

10 pm

Mr. Jack Ashley (Stoke-on-Trent, South): This debate is about Britain's greatest drug disaster. It is about the scandal of a huge United States pharmaceutical company coming to Britain and boasting of Opren, a new wonder drug to treat arthritis — with tragic results. It left a terrible trail of human destruction — adverse reactions were officially reported for 3,963 people, of whom 83 died. The true extent of human suffering is undoubtedly far higher. More than 7,000 people sought help from the Opren action group.

The agony, disfigurements and deaths are akin to a battlefield. They have been cynically and systematically played down by the company, yet some of them are horrific. They include rashes which blister and bleed, ulceration and haemorrhages of the stomach, bladder incontinence, liver jaundice, kidney damage, acute eye sensitivity, detached finger nails and toe nails, and skin photosensitivity. The widow of one man who died wrote:

"The drug caused his hair to fall out, his kidneys became infected, dried his toe nails and finger nails on both hands and feet, burst two toes on the left foot which never stopped discharging till his death . . . he couldn't even bear the weight of a sheet on his feet. It is only those of us who have witnessed the sufferings from this drug who can tell of the agonies it produces on the human body".

To the 1,300 British people who are claiming compensation for Opren suffering, the company has offered a derisory £2·75 million — an average of £1,800 per person. This breathtaking contempt for victims, insulting attitude and brass-necked insolence can be understood only by appreciating the background of the company and its development of the drug. I hope that every Member of the House of Commons and House of Lords — and every Minister — will take careful note of the following facts.

The company is distorting the truth. Honest reporting of adverse reactions is essential for drug safety, but Eli Lilly failed to report 26 United Kingdom deaths from Opren to the United States drug watchdog, the Food and Drug Administration, when it was seeking the American licence. It was lucky to get away with a fine of $25,000 for this serious offence.

The clincial trials, conducted before marketing, were hopelessly inadequate according to some experts. They were too small, conducted for too short a period, the participants were given too low a dose, and there were too few old people. The company also failed to act immediately when the potential dangers of the drug for old people were pointed out. It offered jobs — salary unspecified — to experts whose work revealing the dangers of Opren for old people had been ignored. Eli Lilly knew that their testimony would be damaging in court, as indeed it was. One of those experts, Dr. Hamdy, said in the television programme "World in Action" that even after he warned of the dangers for old people the company continued to recommend the original dosage. He said in "Panorama" that they refused to change because it was "commercially non-viable".

Putting profits before lives, inadequate research, cheating the record, misleading the people — this is the unacceptable face of the pharmaceutical industry, one which is damaging the good name of responsible and reputable firms and makes a mockery of Ministers who run a mile to avoid involvement.

British victims approached the company for compensation when the full and horrible effects of this drug were known. They were aware of ICI's fair-minded response after the Eraldin disaster, when that company set up a proper compensation scheme. They found out that Eli Lilly had paid £27 million to 103 United States victims. They were hoping for a fair deal, but they were disastrously disappointed. The derisory offer of some £2·275 million to 1,350 British sufferers shocked them, especially when compared with the United States payment. Many of them had not appreciated that we have an archaic legal system which imposes crippling shackles on any drug-damaged litigant who is not a millionaire.

The company exploited this system to the full. It imposed unbelievably harsh conditions on disabled people, many of them too old, bewildered and poor to fight. It bludgeoned them into submission — using the euphemism "acceptable" settlements — by the threat of court battles which the individuals could not afford but which this wealthy multinational could. The imposed settlement bound these disabled people with strict legal conditions, gagged them for life, and denied their solicitors freedom to act for other sufferers.

The reasons why the company got away with this were partly our antiquated legal system, but mainly the financial power of a selfish and rapacious company. It has behaved like a cruel tiger, toying with helpless people, knowing that they lacked the health and the money to fight. It has created an enormous well of frustration and bitterness in Britain by adding this financial insult to the original injury.

Fortunately, the victims had their champions. The main one has been the admirable Kathleen Grasham, whose mother died from Opren in tragic circumstances. She has been a skilful and persistent leader of the action group for more than five years. David Mason has added his considerable weight, intelligence and energy to the battle. I do not share the political views of the Daily Mail, but it has fought a vigorous, well-directed and sustained campaign on behalf of the victims. I pay my tribute to these campaigners for their distinguised efforts.

The question I want to put to the House tonight is: where do we go from here? This is the third parliamentary debate on Opren which I have initiated. I have been pressing the issue with debates, parliamentary questions and deputations to Ministers for more than five years. "Panorama" and "World in Action" have done splendid programmes. There has been vast press coverage. The damage to Eli Lilly is incalculable, especially from the television programmes. Yet when over 100 Members of this House, and the House of Lords, last week put a reasoned and moderate proposal to the United States chairman urging the setting up of a trust fund, it was turned down flat.

That contemptuous dismissal of a reasonable settlement, which would have avoided further legal wrangling, does not mean that Eli Lilly has won. The fight will certainly continue. New cases are being prepared, new initiatives are being launched, and the company must expect a renewed onslaught.

Even at this moment, the Department of Health and Social Security is investigating allegations against Eli Lilly of non-reporting of serious adverse reactions made by the telvision programme "World in Action". I might add, in parenthesis, that when the Under-Secretary of State for Health gave me this news, she said that she could give me no undertaking to let me know the outcome. If she thinks she can keep this kind of thing secret, and treat the House of Commons with contempt, she had better think again.

An international boycott of Eli Lilly's products has already been launched by Ralph Nader. The British Government have declined to act on this, but, in view of the company's rejection of the suggested trust fund, I would ask the Government to consider what helpful action they can take. They cannot simply wash their hands of the whole affair while British citizens are being discriminated against, especially as Opren was distributed by the NHS. I do not believe that they should sanction the provision of non-essential Eli Lilly drugs, knowing that if any new disaster should occur the British victims would almost certainly face the same harrowing ordeal as the Opren victims. Surely, other things being equal, an ICI drug is better than a Lilly one.

I know that, as a representative of the licensing authority, the Minister will claim to be part of the legal action. Nevertheless, Ministers wear many hats and there is no reason why Ministers should not act.

The Association of the British Phamaceutical Industry should also take a hand in this tragedy. It is being seriously damaged by the affair and ought to step in with some constructive suggestions.

Community health councils should put Opren on their agendas, and work with the Opren action group. There is always the risk of adverse reactions with every drug, and it is surely unwise to add the danger of inadequate compensation from using a Lilly drug if others are available.

Trade unions should also consider the very serious disadvantage to their members of using Eli Lilly drugs, and should ask for alternatives when available. In particular, those trade unions working in Lilly companies, which include Dista Products, should consider what action they can take.

The sooner Eli Lilly recognises that this issue will not go away, the better for all concerned. Drug accidents can happen to anyone while millions of prescriptions are given every year. The top priority is to avoid them, but, when they happen, people in Britain expect fair play. They will not tolerate unscrupulous disregard for people suffering so terribly as a result of Opren. As their collective concern and anger grow, so the prospects of fairness will improve. It is in the interests of the company, no less than of the victims, that even at this late hour a fair and honourable settlement is reached and a trust fund set up. The next step lies with the company, and, after that, with all of us.

10.13 pm

Mr. Michael McNair-Wilson (Newbury) rose—

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Sir Paul Dean): Does the hon. Gentleman have the agreement of the right hon. Gentleman and the Minister to intervene?

Mr. McNair-Wilson: I have not asked, Mr. Deputy Speaker, but I hope that I might be allowed one minute.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Mr. Michael McNair-Wilson.

Mr. McNair-Wilson: First, I congratulate and support the right hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, South (Mr. Ashley) on the speech that he has just made and on bringing to the attention of the House the important and deeply tragic situation facing Opren sufferers.

Secondly, I should like to ask my hon. Friend one question relating to the principle that the right hon. Gentleman has enunciated. It is a fact that many people become the victims of drug-related medical accidents, especially in the early years of a drug's introduction. I suggest that it is time that the Department of Health and Social Security brought the major drug companies together to create an effective, equitable and properly managed compensation scheme.

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Health and Social Security (Mrs. Edwina Currie): May I begin by extending to the right hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, South (Mr. Ashley) the usual courtesies on his success in the ballot. I am sure that he would agree that neither he nor I would ever treat this House, nor indeed each other, with contempt.

I also listened to the comments of my hon. Friend the Member for Newbury (Mr. McNair-Wilson). I refer him to a written question from the right hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, South to which my right hon. Friend the Minister for Health replied. The right hon. Gentleman asked

"the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will initiate discussions with the Association of British Pharmaceutical Industries regarding the establishment of a no-fault drug compensation scheme."

My right hon. Friend replied by saying:

"It must be for the pharmaceutical industry to decide whether it wishes to set up its own no-fault drug compensation scheme" — [Official Report, 8 March 1988; Vol. 129, c. 172.]

However, I have no doubt that the industry will have taken note of my hon. Friend's remarks.

This debate concerns the non-steroidal anti-inflammation drug benoxaprofen, Opren, and the settlement recently negotiated between the manufacturers of the drug Eli Lilly and the plaintiffs concerned in the current litigation. It follows, as the right hon. Gentleman said, an earlier Adjournment debate on Opren just eight months ago on 20 July 1987, to which I replied.

On that occasion, I outlined for the House a brief history of the drug to help place the subject of that particular debate in perspective. The history that I related then is clearly still relevant to today's debate but, in view of the comparatively short period since we last debated Opren, I will not prolong matters unnecessarily by repeating the bulk of what I said then. I will, however, repeat that both the Licensing Authority — that is, the United Kingdom Health Ministers — and the Committee on Safety of Medicines are co-defendants in the action with the manufacturers of the drug. In the light of all the evidence held and the advice of the Government lawyers and leading counsel, all claims of negligence against the Government defendants are and have been denied categorically. I said on that occasion that Ministers felt considerable sympathy for those who feel that they have suffered and for their relatives and I am content to repeat that now. The right hon. Gentleman and my hon. Friend the Member for Newbury will know that I mean it.

As I said towards the end of the previous debate on this subject, the right hon. Gentleman places me in a difficult position in answering this debate. My up-to-date legal advice is that it is still inappropriate for Ministers as co-defendants in this case to debate any of the issues involved, including the privately agreed settlement. Although in many cases the plaintiffs have, I understand, accepted the offer made by Lilly, there still remain cases before the courts in which members of the Licensing Authority—that is, Ministers—and the CSM are defendants.

The previous debate was conducted in the early hours of a Tuesday morning in July 1987 and the Hansard report of it was published on the morning of Wednesday 22 July. On that day, Mr. Justice Hirst gave a strong public warning about the propriety of a publicity campaign and called for due restraint. The right hon. Gentleman will know exactly what the judge said on that occasion as it was widely reported and I see no reaason to repeat it here. However, on 9 December 1987, the judge was able to announce details of a proposed settlement between Lilly and the plaintiffs. During that judgment he said:

"It may be that certain individuals will be disappointed with the way the proposals affect their own claim. In coming to a conclusion, they will all I am sure, with the benefit of legal advice, balance their prospects of success in pursuing a claim outside the settlement proposals against the risks involved in proceeding individually if unsuccessful at the end of the day.

Fairness and justice demand that each individual one of these plaintiffs should have the opportunity to consider the offer calmly on its merits, without being subjected to outside pressure of any kind, whether through national publicity or from private groups or individuals.

Last July I had occasion to give a warning as to the propriety of a campaign which was then afoot. Happily that campaign immediately died down, and this I am sure contributed to the successful progress of the settlement negotiations. I wish to stress that the case is still sub-judice, and so my July warning still applies. The success of negotiations of this kind greatly depends on continued confidentiality."

Subsequently, on 3 February 1988, Mr. Justice Hirst stated that approximately 1,104 Opren plaintiffs at that date had accepted the offer unconditionally; approximately 125 had accepted subject to arbitration, only a handful of those being non-qualifying plaintiffs; 43 had refused the offer; and approximately 72 had still not replied. There has been no official announcement since in court, but I understand that all but a handful have now replied. I also understand that arbitration is not yet complete.

I must stress that the settlement is the result of private negotiations between representatives of the plaintiffs concerned and the manufacturers of the drug. The Government defendants have not been involved in any way in those private discussions, nor in the negotiations on the terms of the settlement.

My right hon. Friend the Minister for Health met the right hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, South and a small group whom he led on 15 February 1988. Subsequently, my right hon. Friend the Minister for Health wrote to the right hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, South on 18 February and pointed out once again that it would be "wholly inappropriate"

for the Government

"to intervene in the settlement freely negotiated by solicitors representing the Plaintiffs."

I fully recognise the right hon. Gentleman's concern, and that of other hon. Members, but it remains wholly inappropriate for the Government to intervene.

The right hon. Gentleman has the right to call the debate and, Mr. Deputy Speaker, on two occasions recently, you have agreed that the subject should be debated. As always, the right hon. Gentleman has expressed his views with vigour and sincerity. As a former Minister, he knows exactly in what difficulty he places me in attempting to answer him tonight. I hope that he will understand and accept the points that I have made.

Let me finish by quoting once more from Mr. Justice Hirst's statement of 19 December. Perhaps this will also be a sufficient response to the point made by my hon. Friend the Member for Newbury. The judge said:

"once the Opren litigation is finally disposed of, those who have worked so hard on it will have, I feel sure, a great contribution to make in the future in finding solutions to the problems which have come to light in the handling and financing of litigation of this kind and on this scale under our present legal system".

On that basis, I wish to conclude my remarks.

Mr. Ashley: I am glad to have the opportunity to say a few further words. I have raised some important issues in the debate and the Minister, according to the notes that I have received, has made little effort to answer some of the profoundly important points that I have made—profoundly important to severely disabled people damaged by this ruthless company. It is wrong that she should come here and read a brief without making one essential point when thousands of British people are suffering. That was a disgraceful response to the debate.

I put to the Minister a clear and specific point that I raised which she either did not hear or follow. If she wants to listen, I repeat it. Can the Minister confirm that she wrote a letter to me on 1 February 1988 in which she said:

"Officials are currently investigating the allegations made in the recent 'World in Action' programme against Eli Lilly and will take account of documents sent with your letter. Once the investigation is complete the facts will be considered and, if warranted, appropriate action will be taken. I can give no undertakings to let you know the outcome".

I contend that is deeply insulting to the House of Commons. For a Minister to conduct an investigation into a matter of profound importance to hon. Members and then to tell the Member of Parliament who raised it that the House of Commons will not be told the outcome of those investigations is deeply insulting.

This is not a secret society; this is a democracy. The Minister is not playing fair with the victims of Opren by keeping secret this information. I will give her five minutes to respond to those points. The debate does not finish until 10.30 pm, so she has five minutes if she wants. I could speak for an hour, but I rushed my speech to give the Minister an opportunity to reply. The hon. Member for Newbury (Mr. McNair-Wilson) wanted to intervene, but I gabbled my speech so that we could get a decent answer. But what did we get? We got absolute rubbish from the Minister.

The problem is very grave and people are suffering appallingly. They need someone to fight for them. They should not have to rely on a voluntary group, a few Members of Parliament and a few campaigners to fight for their rights from the Government. The Government ought to step in and fight Eli Lilly, and say: "Be as fair to British citizens as you have been to American citizens."

Why is there a vast discrepancy between the treatment of one lot of victims and another? It is outrageous that the British Government should turn away and do nothing, while the American Government made damn sure that their people were looked after. No wonder we are becoming a second-rate country, with Ministers such as this one. The Minister now has five minutes to respond. Let us hear her answer.

Question put and agreed to.

Adjourned accordingly at twenty-five minutes past Ten o' clock.

House of Commons

Friday 18 March 1988

The House met at half-past Nine o'clock

PRAYERS

[MR. SPEAKER in the Chair]

PETITION

Prison Officers (Houses)

9.34 am

Mr. Roger Moate (Faversham): I should like to present to the House a petition from my constituent Mr. G. Badley, whose address is Her Majesty's Prison, Standford hill, Kent, where he is a prison officer, on behalf of a number of other members of Her Majesty's prison service from my constituency, especially the Isle of Sheppey.

Those prison officers, out of their wages, took steps to provide their own accommodation — they are home owners. They feel a sense of discrimination against them because they are now working alongside other officers who live in official quarters. Although they all receive the same pay and awards, the other officers are now being given incentives and opportunities by the prison department to buy their own homes at substantial discounts.

My constituents feel a sense of discrimination and wish to present a petition to the House:

"Wherefore your Petitioners pray that your Honourable House encourage the Home Secretary to provide all Prison Officers with equality in monetary rewards and remunerations as is consistent with natural justice.

And your Petitioners, as in duty bound, will ever pray etc."

To lie upon the Table.

Competition Policy

9.36 am

Mr. Michael Fallon (Darlington): I beg to move,

That this House recognises the part which competition policy plays in fostering choice, reducing prices and stimulating wealth creation.

I welcome the opportunity for a debate on competition policy. Straight away, I welcome the interest shown by my hon. Friends and especially by my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Corporate Affairs. I thank him not only for attending this debate, but also for ensuring that it is supplied with a plethora of documents. We not only have before us the White Paper; he has also managed to rush out documents on mergers policy and on restrictive trade practices in good time for our debate.

Those documents underline the Government's commitment to competition policy. That commitment was enshrined at the beginning of our period of office in the Competition Act 1980. I am especially glad to see that commitment flagged up in the lights as the first objective of our new, bold Department of Trade and Industry. That Department has said:

"We seek to produce a more competitive market by encouraging competition and tackling restrictive practices, cartels and monopolies."

Today we shall consider that pledge and measure the performance of my hon. Friend the Minister against it. We shall do so because competition is a national interest as well as being in the national interest. Competition provides choice, reduces prices, raises standards, stimulates wealth creation and enterprise, and therefore, fundamentally, creates jobs.

In nearly nine years of Conservative Government, we have made considerable progress towards a more competitive economy. A whole range of controls on prices, dividends, income and exchange of capital have been swept away. The DTI has been transformed from being the home of subsidy and sponsorship into its new role of stimulating enterprise and innovation. I especially welcome the White Paper's emphasis on the importance of open markets. The right to compete and the right of the consumer to benefit from that competition depend, in the last resort, on markets that are open to all customers and all practitioners, be they business men, traders or members of professions.

Let us consider whether markets are sufficiently open to the consumer. Is there really enough competition and choice for the customer in our daily lives? When I leave the House this afternoon, I shall drive north up the A1. The Consumers Association has told me that it has classified 28 places between London and Scotch Corner as family roadside restaurants. Of those, 16 are Little Chefs and eight are Happy Eaters. You may not be aware, Mr. Speaker, that both Little Chefs and Happy Eaters are owned by Trusthouse Forte. A single company owns and operates 24 of the 28 roadside restaurants available to a family driving north between London and Scotch Corner. I exclude pubs and hotels from that analysis. Is that really a sufficiently competitive framework? Is there enough choice and variety in price and quality for the consumer?

There are other examples. Increasingly, our high streets are dominated by four or five large conglomerates. British Shoe Corporation Holdings plc operates nine different footwear chains and controls 25 per cent. of the market. How many people realise that Woolworth, Comet, B and

[Mr. Michael Fallon]

Q and Superdrug are all the same company? How many people are aware that Dixons and Currys, which theoretically compete against each other in the electrical goods market, are in fact the same company?

Some three quarters of our public houses are not free; they are tied. Half of them are operated by just five brewers. The January edition of Which? found that the average price of lager in the public houses operated by the big five brewers varied by only 5p. The brewers control access of new entrants to the market place and they largely dominate the financing of those enterprises. There was an inquiry into that monopoly by the Monopolies and Mergers Commission more than 20 years ago, and another is being conducted at the moment.

Another example of this practice involves domestic expenditure on books. There is still a form of retail price maintenance in the form of a net book agreement which holds up prices and makes it more difficult for smaller bookshops to enter the bookselling business and to discount where they consider that to be in their interests. I have no doubt that, without the net book agreement, book prices would not be as high as they are. However, publishers will tell us, as they told the Financial Times a couple of weeks ago, that the net book agreement

"promotes an orderly and healthy trade."

The publishers would say that. However, they must tell us why book buying is one of the only items of consumer expenditure that has been relatively static throughout the 1980s, when every other item of consumer spending has increased in volume. A whole range of articles and consumer goods and services must be examined.

The growth of concentration in our high streets and the so-called march of the multiple stores may not be adverse developments. Over a period, the effects may be self-correcting. There will always be a place for the smaller store and the independent retailer who may take advantage of public disillusionment with the larger chain. Today I will try to argue that the growth in concentration in our high streets requires constant vigilance and effective machinery to control abuse. That illustrates the need for independent and objective agencies such as the Office of Fair Trading and the Monopolies Commission.

Is our machinery sufficiently effective? Are the Government doing enough in these areas where they have influence on the market-place? I first want to consider the effectiveness of the machinery. Does it take too long for potentially adverse, anti-competitive behaviour to be investigated? Are the inquiries undertaken by our independent agencies sufficiently specific or regular? Is it right to consider the brewers once every 20 years, given the huge changes that have taken place in that market? Are the powers available used fully? I hope that my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Corporate Affairs will answer some specific questions.

As I understand it, the Monopolies and Mergers Commission has powers to order divestment in areas where it believes that there is too much concentration. I do not recall those powers ever being used. Will my hon. Friend the Minister confirm that those powers still exist, and tell us whether they should be used more effectively?

We welcome the proposals in the Government's mergers document to speed up the various inquiries procedures and introduce a new system of voluntary pre-notification. That practice, which must be sensible, is quite common in many of our western industrial competitors.

The other key issue in the Government's mergers document relates to issues of public interest other than competition which our agencies should take into account. The paragraphs in the document covering those points deserve careful scrutiny by the House. Those issues are listed in chapter 2 as the effect on local employment, the effect on regional development, the level of research and development spent in a particular industrial sector, and the desirability or otherwise of foreign takeover.

Although those effects are listed, and although one of those effects may be adverse when it is considered, that does not necessarily mean that the decision is not best left to the market. As the White Paper explains, the effects may be purely localised and temporary. Even if a decision is not best left to the market, it does not follow that politicians are any better than the markets at assessing the full implications of those local, regional, research and development and international effects. I especially welcome the declaration in the mergers document that the Government are likely to intervene only in very exceptional cases.

I believe that the Government should have given two further commitments. They should have spelt out more clearly that, where they accept a role in mergers policy, they must take full responsibility for that. We cannot leave our independent agencies such as the OFT and the MMC to second-guess the public, political or national interest. It must be right that the independent agencies should keep rigidly and rigorously to the definition of competition that they are enjoined to explore and leave it to Ministers, where they wish to interfere, override or overrule, to justify that interference in the very exceptional cases by explaining to the House and to the public why they are interfering.

With regard to foreign takeovers, I would have liked to see a clearer statement of the Government's commitment to an open trading system. We must be in no doubt that if we continue, as we have done in recent years, to invent reasons why foreign companies cannot take over British ones, sooner or later other countries will invent reasons why our companies cannot take over or take a share in theirs. The freedom of companies from overseas to take an interest in companies here is the freedom to invest in our country and it is reciprocated by the freedom of our companies to invest abroad. The open trading system is premised on that.

Let us examine to what extent markets are already partitioned by Governments. I have already spoken about whether markets are sufficiently open to consumers and about what the Government can do to ensure that access is as open as possible. What about the Government's direct or indirect sponsorship of so many restrictive practices, cartelised agreements and trading arrangements?

A number of things in consumer life appear to be restricted — for example, credit cards. An inquiry is under way by the Monopolies and Mergers Commission into whether there is enough competition between Visa and Access, or between the bank cheque cards in which Barclaycard has such a large share. So we come back to the extent to which Government policy favours a semi-cartelised arrangement between our major clearing banks.

Then there is the lack of competition leading to relatively high prices of textiles and clothing — the Government underpin the multi-fibre arrangement negotiated on behalf of the Community. And why cannot a television viewer plan his TV viewing more than a day or so ahead without buying the Radio Times or TV Times, which enjoy a duopoly of publishing schedules? That duopoly in the broadcasting system is operated and enshrined by the Government, but we are planning to liberalise it.

I have already mentioned roadside catering, which relates to Government policy on licensing motorway service areas. It is not surprising that only half a dozen major companies are involved, given that sites remain in the ownership of the Government and can be rented only on 50-year leases.

I must not be too critical. As I said at the beginning, much has been achieved in establishing a more competitive economy by this Government. The privatisation programme has put an end to many former nationalised state monopolies. There is now competition in long-distance coach transport and between British Telecom and Mercury in telecommunications, and we are promised more of the same in the future. If I were not attached to the Department of Energy, I could do a better job of praising that Department's proposals for injecting real competition into electricity generation.

However, we have a considerable way to go. I want to take my hon. Friend the Minister on a tour of some of his neighbouring Departments. The DTI White Paper makes it clear that that Department has a role in promoting competition across all Whitehall Departments. Under my hon. Friend's Department, wages councils mean that small retailers must accept wage levels largely settled by the big multiples in the wages councils negotiating machinery. In the same Department's area of responsibility, the dock labour scheme prevents scheme ports in the north — in areas of high unemployment — from competing on equal terms with non-scheme ports in the south.

The Department of Transport still oversees a whole panoply of price controls and licenses in air transport, which is a ludicrously partitioned market in which the business man must pay high prices for the freedom to travel when he wants, and our constituents, going on holiday to the Mediterranean, must fly on a certain day and return on the same day a fortnight or three weeks later.

Some progress has been made in liberalising the air-fare structures in Europe. One of my favourite competition quotations dates from April 1986, when a British Airways spokesman, was reported "taken aback" when Air France reintroduced meals in tourist class on the London to Paris route. He said:

> "These things are usually discussed bilaterally to prevent one of us labouring under a competitive disadvantage."

We have moved on from that. British Airways is now a private company, as is the British Airports Authority. We must not underestimate the achievements of the "nouveau liberalisme" in France and its success in privatisation.

The Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food still supervises a largely wartime ethos of production controls, marketing boards, levies and quotas, and dictates what the consumer will pay in the shops, while, in the name of Europe, barring our constituents from choosing European produce. Why was it left to the Consumers' Association, rather than a Ministry of Food, to fight for five years for our right to choose pasteurised milk or unpasteurised cream from other member states of the Community?

The Department of Health and Social Security still maintains price regulation in pharmaceutical products. I had a letter yesterday from a company in Cornwall that is being taken to the High Court by Richardson Vick, which believes the company should be charging prices 30 per cent. higher for nasal sprays and inhalants. Is the purpose of the pharmaceutical price regulation scheme to prevent companies that wish to do so from cutting prices for consumers in the regions?

Finally, and I hope not too painfully, I wish to take my hon. Friend back to his Department to have a look across the wall that still seems to divide trade from industry — there is a case for fusion if ever there was one — and consider what arrangemeents, in the name of free trade, we still maintain against our own consumers. Let us consider, first, the arrangements for textiles and clothing — the multi-fibre arrangement, which was extended yet again in 1986. It was originally called a short-term arrangement when it was introduced in 1961, more than a quarter of a century ago, and it was clearly shown by the Silberston report to have kept prices for consumers higher than they need otherwise have been and to have done little to prevent the restructuring that would inevitably have taken place in that industry.

I want my hon. Friend to examine voluntary export restraints. How many are there? When I examined the sector three or four years ago, there seemed to be at least 10 unofficial agreements, blessed by the Government, but negotiated between importers and exporters to regulate the quantity of imports that the consumer might wish to enjoy. Such agreements, because they regulate the quantity, also regulate the price the consumers end up paying. They have been well described as invisible taxes.

How many voluntary export restraints does my hon. Friend know to be in existence in his Department, and what is being done to remove them? That is vital, because in our enthusiasm for the single European internal market, we must not forget the huge external market in world trade that we are committed to maintain under the general agreement on tariffs and trade. One can fully appreciate the importance of that agreement only when one considers the mess that we are in in the commodities that are outside it. One such area is agriculture, where we have yet even to control the subsidies that we devote to it let alone assess the damage that our system is doing to other agricultures and economies in less prosperous parts of the world.

The Uruguay round deserves a place in this debate and I look forward to my hon. Friend telling me what progress we are making in extending the terms of the general agreement on tariffs and trade to agriculture and services. I look forward to his reaffirmation of the commitment to a free and fair world trading system. It is axiomatic of our commitment to open markets that those markets must be open to all who seek to operate in them on an equal and fair basis. We welcome the steps being taken by the Government against abuse of the markets in the important areas of company law and financial services. The more we are committed to a free and fair market the greater is the obligation on us to police those markets and apply very tough penalties to those who abuse their access to them.

We must ensure that markets are open to all people who wish to play their part in them. That is why we particularly welcome the Green Paper on restrictive practices that was published last week by my hon. Friend. I see that it is the result of yet another review by Mr. Liesner, who seems to have been responsible for more reviews than Tom Lehrer. Nevertheless, we are indebted to Mr. Liesner. Last week an article about the Green Paper appeared in the Sunday Times and I have been deluged by letters from people highlighting the restrictive practices in the professions—letters about such things as a diploma from the Institute of Housing, people unable to get an Equity card or an Association of Cinematograph, Television and Allied Technicians card, and about some of the practices operated in the more well-known professions.

My hon. Friend has taken a bold and tough approach in declaring illegal all these restrictive practices unless their effects can be shown to be in the interests of competition. Of course he could have chosen the even bolder route advocated by Professor Hayek in "Law, Legislation and Liberty", that it might be easier and simpler to allow all restrictive practices to remain lawful, but simply to make them unenforceable in law, thus allowing them to wither away. The list of restrictive practices in annex D of this document is truly remarkable and certainly stunned me. I had no idea that so many restrictive practices still apply. I did not appreciate how many of these agreements relate to our professions.

No doubt restrictive practices in the professions have their defenders; we can see on the two Front Benches the two-counsel rule still operating. We need to be sure that those restrictive practices operate in the public interest. Of course there is a balance to be struck. Nobody facing an operation by a surgeon or seeking a survey for a potential house purchase would want his surgeon or surveyor to be anything other than properly qualified, but there are three important riders to that.

First, we must ensure that those qualifications do not unnecessarily restrict entry to a profession, particularly where entry is in the hands of a monopolistic qualifications body. Acting is not in the list in annex D, but perhaps it should be entered just below barristers. One cannot get an Equity card unless one works in the theatre and a person cannot work in the theatre unless he has an Equity card, and 95 per cent. of all vacancies in the acting profession specify membership of Equity.

Worse than that, the supply of Equity cards remains in the hands of Equity alone, which produces no figures about the extent to which it dishes them out to relatives and friends. That may account for the tired old faces and family retainers that we see on television. It blocks new talent. To appreciate that, one has only to look at the grip help by the ACTT, Equity and the National Union of Journalists on all parts of our television network.

Secondly, we must ensure when we look at restrictive practices in the professions that the qualifications demanded — important, of course, in the case of surgeons and surveyors — are not unnecessarily high. Good examples are some of the professions supplementary to medicine. We are told that in the Health Service there is an acute shortage of people such as chiropodists and occupational therapists. Under the Professions Supplementary to Medicine Act 1960, only state-trained chiropodists can officially work in the Health Service. There is a shortage of them in the Health Service, and there are waiting lists for treatment.

Mr. Doug Hoyle (Warrington, North): Is the hon. Gentleman seriously suggesting that we should put people's health at risk by taking on people who have taken correspondence courses? Does he not appreciate all the damage that is being done by untrained chiropodists, many of whose patients have to go to hospital to have the damage undone? Is he advocating that kind of thing?

Mr. Fallon: The hon. Gentleman must justify those allegations, but it is a fact that in the private sector the British Chiropody Association has trained many hundreds of fully qualified chiropodists. They are not allowed to treat NHS patients but, of course, many such patients waiting for treatment in the state sector go to them to by-pass the waiting lists.

The third important qualification on restrictive practices in the professions is that they should not involve the misuse of public money. Waiting time by solicitors adds to the legal aid bill. The restrictions on numbers of consultancy posts adds to expenditure and difficulties in running an efficient Health Service. There is much to be done about restrictive practices, and I look forward to my hon. Friend moving from his Green Paper and coming forward with legislation so that each of those practices can be tested and justified or scrapped as necessary.

Some of my hon. Friends want to participate in the debate. I hope that I have said enough to show that Conservative Members at least believe competition to be of the utmost importance to our economy. My hon. Friends in the Department of Trade and Industry are right to premise their competition on markets that are open to all consumers and practitioners.

There is no better text on which I can close than that provided by Arthur Shenfield in his Wincott memorial lecture some years ago, when he said:

> "Freedom to compete is the flywheel of the free economy, the very expression of its spirit, and both a cause and a result of its successful operation".

10.9 am

Mr. Malcolm Bruce (Gordon): I was interested, but not surprised, to see the motion on the Order Paper in the name of the hon. Member for Darlington (Mr. Fallon), but, having listened to him, I am intrigued by the selective nature of the examples that he used. I do not disagree with the thrust of the points that he raised, but I am intrigued by the points that he chose to avoid. As I develop my comments, the reason why he avoided those points will become apparent.

The main concern about competition policy has been the growth in recent years of large conglomerates which seek to dominate sectors of the market. On a number of occasions, that has brought Ministers to the House in circumstances which have been, at the very least, controversial. The Government's proposals for merger policy show a lack of urgency about curbing monopoly and promoting competition policy.

It is well known that before he goes to bed every night, the hon. Member for Darlington peruses the works of Adam Smith. It is perhaps worth paraphrasing Adam Smith, who wrote in an era when large economic concentrations were very rare, if not non-existent and said that, where two or three business men are gathered together, they are probably planning a cartel.

The idea that appears to emanate from the Government is that the markets are, by instinct and definition, free and that it is improper to suggest that the free operation of the market could lead to concentration of power, designed to protect operators in the market from its very effects.

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Corporate Affairs (Mr. Francis Maude): I hesitate to intervene so soon in the hon. Gentleman's speech, but he is entirely wrong. It is precisely because we accept that the free working of open markets can lead to concentrations of economic power that we stated, in our Green Paper on mergers policy, that that is our principal consideration when deciding whether to refer a proposed merger to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission for full investigation.

Of course concentrations of economic power can arise in a free market. That is why we need merger control procedures. The creation of cartels furthers people's interests. That is why there is restrictive trade practice law and why we have embarked on the most radical reform for the past 30 years.

Mr. Bruce: I realise that I am using a cliché when I say to the Minister that fine words butter no parsnips. He may be sincere in his intentions, but the Government's record does not stand up. If he tells us that everything will be different from now on, we will be pleasantly surprised.

Dr. John Reid (Motherwell, North): Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Bruce: I should like to get on, as I have only just started my argument.

The report on mergers policy appears to suggest that the best people to judge whether a merger should take place are the potential investors. Those investors will be interested in supporting a merger that is likely to secure monopoly power which will help to boost profitability. The annex to the document regarding post-merger performance analyses post-merger profitability. We need an analysis of what happens to consumer interest after merger. Such information will be much more revealing about the need to change the Government's thrust.

The Minister will know that those are not simply my views or those of my party. The Financial Times made the valid point that the Government appear to be more concerned with the speed with which references to the MMC are handled than with whether one receives the right answer. The Financial Times said:

"Speed is important, but the risk is that it will be achieved at the expense of quality in merger decision making."

After all, quality is important. The article proceeded to question the competence of the MMC and stated:

"There remains a question mark over this body's reliance on part-time, non-expert members."

The article also stated that the merger policy document did not refer to merger policy in the context of the European Community. The Community will be a single market within only four years. That point should have been taken into account when considering the British Airways takeover of British Caledonian.

Despite the fine words of the Minister and hon. Member for Darlington, the Government's record to date on competition policy is woefully inadequate. The Government have presided over a greater expansion of monopoly power than any Government in history.

The conspicuous omissions from the speech of the hon. Member for Darlington relate to the Government's privatisation policy. The Government have driven a coach and horses through any credible competition policy. British Telecom was privatised as a single monopoly unit. The idea that one sets up a regulator who manages a second competitor at his discretion is hardly the essence of free-working competitive markets.

Both the hon. Gentleman and the Government know that, and it helps to explain why the volume of complaints about British Telecom has increased in almost exact proportion to its profits. It is disgraceful that the management and efficiency of the operation have not substantially changed. Profitability has increased, but service has deteriorated and competition does not thrive.

Mr. John Marshall (Hendon, South) rose—

Mr. Bruce: The situation in this country is quite different from the situation in the United States, which I do not necessarily praise, but with which the Government draw a parallel, where there is real competition, diversity and choice. There is a real market in telecommunications, although not a perfect one.

Mr. Marshall: Does the hon. Gentleman agree that there is some competition between British Telecom and Mercury? Does he further agree that a nationalised Cable and Wireless would never have been licensed to compete with a nationalised British Telecom? Does he agree that competition is a function of privatisation and would never have occurred without it?

Mr. Bruce: I do not accept that that is definitively true. I accept that that is how competition has functioned under the present Government, but, if we analyse the share of the market and the choice available to people in most services, we see that that competition adds up to only a small duopoly and exists only in certain areas and sectors. It is a long way short of the kind of competition described by the hon. Member for Darlington.

British Telecom is perhaps the worst example, but those of us who worked on the Gas Bill and have followed the operation of British Gas since then notice that there is a monopoly of gas supply in the United Kingdom. Nothing has changed, although British Gas has been referred to the MMC, which we hope might ultimately reveal the extent to which it is using restrictive practices, by, for example, charging a 25 per cent. premium for gas to be used for combined heat and power. That is a constraint on the market and works against the efficiency and competitiveness of British industry and against the common sense of a balanced energy policy and efficient use of energy resources.

We now await the privatisation of electricity. The Secretary of State for Energy says that there will be a free market for coal-fired electricity, but a fixed market for other forms of electricity, notably nuclear power. That is a total manipulation of the market, rather than allowing genuine free choice and competition between different forms of supply. We are talking not about small corner-shop operations but about the massive components of the national economy, where the Government's competition policy has failed abysmally. Their policy may sound wonderful in theory, but it is distasteful in practice.

That brings me to the recent debacle which continues to rumble on—the British Airways takeover of British Caledonian. That raises a number of important questions. One wonders how the Government could concede that the takeover of Britain's second largest airline by Britain's largest airline was not anti-competitive. It was anti-competitive. A real mistake was made, and I regret the fact that at the time I did not oppose it forcefully. When the original privatisation of British Airways took place, routes should have been redistributed much more equally so as to give British Caledonian the opportunity to survive as an independent, second-force airline. Instead, there was the debacle of last year that led to its weakened position and to the takeover by British Airways.

When the takeover was referred as an agreed bid to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission, the MMC chose to negotiate with British Airways a quite different bid from the one that had been agreed with British Caledonian. It was done without consulting British Caledonian, which was shocked and stunned when the MMC report was published, recommending a bid remarkably different from the one that had been agreed at the outset.

Subsequently, British Caledonian took steps to find out whether it could get out of the agreed bid by bringing in alternative interests, notably Scandinavian Airlines Services. Many people feel that that bid could have gone ahead and could have been viable but for the fact that the Government, in their position of power, made it clear that they would oppose and frustrate it to the point where SAS felt obliged to withdraw. We shall never perhaps get to the bottom of it, but it leaves a particularly nasty taste in the mouth, especially since SAS is a European Community airline. It used exactly the same arguments as British Airways used about the need for international co-operation and mergers in order to operate in the international market place.

The final and interesting outcome of all that was that it took the European Community to do the job that the Monopolies and Mergers Commission should have done in the first place. In those circumstances, it is odd that the British Government should allow a mechanism to be applied whereby United Kingdom and European Community consumers have to be protected by an external agency because of the failure of their own mechanism to deal with the problem in the first place. Many of us are therefore entitled to question the Government's real commitment to competition policy.

Another aspect that has to be taken into account is the imbalance that there can be between large corporations and small corporations or companies, of which they are often the main customers. That argument has been rehearsed in this House many times, and I do not wish to dwell on it at length. However, it is well known that large companies exploit their dominance in the market place in a number of ways. They are slow payers to small businesses whose financial resources are weaker. If they wish, they can operate in the market place to see off a competitor.

Mergers are often dominated not by a desire for rationalisation or greater efficiency but by a desire to protect the bidder either from another bid, in order to build themselves up to a size where they canot be bought, or to ensure a strength in the market place which prevents others from entering it and which gives them a more comfortable and a quieter life.

That often happens when a small, regionally based company is being taken over by a natonal or an international conglomerate. There is evidence that companies that are being taken over are often more efficient than the company that is taking them over. They just happen to be smaller. In some cases they are very important to their own community, region or market place. It is regrettable that the Government's review of merger and competition policy does not take adequate account of that fact.

Although it is not directly relevant to this debate, the Pilkington episode is fairly instructive. A company that was rooted in a community in the north-west of England for which it was the town — "St. Helen's is Pilkington and Pilkington is St. Helen's" — was dramatically undervalued by the City of London because it was thought to be a provincially based organisation that did not merit the City's attention.

The outcome was satisfactory because the City of London, when it turned its attention to Pilkington, realised that it was the kind of group that ought to be more fully valued. The consequence was that the takeover bid was withdrawn. However, that episode shows that the motives of the bidder are usually to get something on the cheap, which is against both competition and regional interests.

Mr. Maude: Does the hon. Gentleman accept that in fostering the relationship that there must be between manufacturing companies and financial investors, the onus is on manufacturing companies to ensure a good flow of information so that investors know what is going on in the company? Does the hon. Gentleman accept that, as a result of the bid which was made for Pilkington and the splendid action that it fought in fighting off that bid, Pilkington emerged as a far stronger company? The hon. Gentleman referred to the evidence in one of the annexes to our Green Paper that showed that the performance of post-merger companies has not always lived up to the claims of the bidders. Did he also see the evidence that the threat of a takeover has frequently acted as a terrific spur to improved performance afterwards?

Mr. Bruce: I accept the Minister's points, in particular his first point about Pilkington's need to inform and the way that it reacted. However, I qualify my acceptance by saying that the City could do a great deal more to find out what is going on outside London and the south-east.

I am not arguing that there should be rigidity, which would prevent mergers and takeovers. I acknowledge that there are genuine economies of scale and genuine cases where mergers are desirable. The Government presume, however, that mergers are inherently desirable. The resistance to that presumption is not strong enough. We should be much more critical of the motives that lie behind mergers and takeovers. We should expose the competition issue much more forcefully than has been the case in the past. I fear that we have capitulated too often and too quickly, and that in so doing we have undermined both the regional and the competition interests.

Mr. Hoyle: Is it not true that Pilkington was getting on with the real job of selling glass? It was the world leader in the production of flat glass. It was putting its profits back into research and development so that it could remain a world leader, instead of appealing to the City sharks.

Mr. Bruce: That is a valid and important point. A company that pursues a particular policy can find that it is being raided by a creditor that simply wants to get at its cash or find an opportunity to asset strip. We have to provide a mechanism that will protect companies from such predatory approaches.

The presumption ought to be that while economies of scale can be justified, they are often oversold and over-valued. I repeat that the Government appear to be far too ready to agree that a deal is good because shareholders do well out of it. Of course shareholders will do well out of a concentration of economic power, or from the plundering of a company by another company, which can lead to the distribution of assets. But that is not the point. The Government's job is not to protect shareholders' interests; it is to protect consumers' interests and also regional interests.

The hon. Member for Darlington has wisely concentrated on aspects of competition policy in which he sees imperfections because of his own free-wheeling, free-market approach. Equally wisely, he has ignored the massive concentrations of economic power that have been built up under this Government in ways that have reduced competition and consumer choice. He and I could perhaps make common cause if he were to turn his attention to the Government's failure to ensure that the monopolies that they have privatised are genuinely open to proper transparency of accounts, proper choice and—dare I say it?—to even a great deal more regional strength rather than central, national strength. That would benefit the region that he represents and the region that I represent in a way that has not yet happened.

I take the view that competition policy is important and that the Government ought to wake up to the fact that they do not have a policy that really inspires confidence.

10.29 am

Mr. Michael Grylls (Surrey, North-West): My hon. Friend the Member for Darlington (Mr. Fallon) has done the House and the country a service in choosing this subject for debate. I cannot remember when it was last debated in the House. Indeed, I cannot remember it being debated in the House at all, which should shame us all, but better late than never. My hon. Friend produced a very good tour d'horizon of the width of competion policy——

Mr. Hoyle: Would it not have been better if the hon. Member for Surrey, North-West (Mr. Grylls) had been present a litle earlier to hear all that his hon. Friend said, rather than part of it?

Mr. Grylls: I have been here for the whole of my hon. Friend's speech, except for a brief moment when I disappeared from the Chamber for reasons that I shall leave entirely to his imagination. I have been present since the beginning of the debate. I would not have missed any of my hon. Friend's speech. That was not a very worthwhile intervention. It was not up to the usual standard of the hon. Member for Warrington, North (Mr. Hoyle), who is normally a very good debater in the House.

In 1983, the European year of small and medium-sized enterprises, a survey was undertaken of the climate in which such firms operated throughout the EEC. The chairman of the judging committee was an American called Mr. Vernon Weaver, formerly head of the American small business administration. I remember that, in his final judgment, he said, "The one thing that you people in Europe need is a really tough competition policy. In my view, you have not got it." During the past year — indeed, the past few months — we have seen a strong competition policy arise in the EEC, through the efforts of Commissioner Peter Sutherland in Brussels and a greater use of articles 85 and 86 of the treaty. We all welcome that.

The proper development of competition policy is an essential part of the working of the free enterprise system, and the capitalist system in general. Without it, the system is like a football match with no rules or referee. We must be careful to avoid overconcentration, which, in my judgment, we have seen in this country over the past 20 or 30 years. Even in the past year, it has begun to be realised that we must not proceed further in that direction.

The Government's initiative in setting up, under the former Secretary of State for Trade and Industry — now the Secretary of State for Transport — the Liesner review of competition policy is greatly to be welcomed. It is a very thorough review, and I have given oral and written evidence to it. Two papers have been produced — a Blue Paper and a Green Paper, although I do not think that there is any great significance in that.

We all feel very passionately that we need to avoid overconcentration, and to re-examine — not, perhaps, in too partisan a way — our policies on how to deal directly with mergers and monopolies. We want as free a market as possible. The hon. Member for Gordon (Mr. Bruce) made an onslaught on shareholders, but they do, after all, own the business. The hon. Gentleman is right to point out that the consumer interest and, from time to time, the national interest are involved, but surely we should remember the people who put their money into the business.

The hon. Member for Gordon may be surprised to learn that I lean to some extent in his direction in being very concerned about the spate of merger mania that has been a facet not only of recent history — although there have been big dramas and criminal proceedings recently — but of industrial life for the past two decades.

It is also essential to the proper working of the free enterprise system that there should be fair play in the market place, with no restrictive practices. As my hon. Friend the Member for Darlington pointed out, it is crucial to preserve access to the market. We talk of unemployment, and say that we desperately need the creation of new firms, new wealth and new jobs. But, if we want that — and we are pleased at the progress that has been made — we must have access to the market. It is no good allowing so much concentration. It is no good allowing anti-competitive practices to go relatively undercontrolled, and then to expect people to risk their money in the market place. Proper access is crucial to maintain innovation and general competitiveness in the enterprise system.

Those who are to the Left of me — and there are many of them — perceive a paradox. They ask, "Why do you intervene? You believe in a free market." We must accept that there is indeed a paradox. There must be a degree of control if we are to have a fair market place in which the free enterprise system can work. A free and fair market is not necessarily a paradox, but if it is I accept it — not that it really matters whether I accept it; it is much more important that all the industrialised countries accept it, along with the need for strong competition polices.

The most successful economies are those of the United States, Germany and Japan. Perhaps, at first, Germany and Japan acted for political reasons, having lost the war, and perhaps having become involved in it at least partly through the overconcentration in their industrial economies. When the war ended, they vowed never to allow that to happen again. It has always fascinated me that General MacArthur broke the industrial empires in Japan. They were too good, he said; they had to be broken down again. Now, those empires have begun to grow, in a huge sea of competitive small and medium-sized businesses. The Japanese are very conscious of the need not to allow overconcentration, and the same applies in West Germany, for similar historical reasons.

We should not worry about that paradox. We should accept it, and work with it.

Mr. Hoyle: Is the hon. Gentleman really saying that Japan is a free competitive society that allows goods to flow in freely, and faces competition from the rest of the world?

Mr. Grylls: No, I am talking about the internal Japanese market. The Japanese have been very determined to maintain a highly competitive market. I am not talking about overseas trade or imports into Japan, which, after all, is a sizeable economy of 120 million people—almost a continental-sized economy in its own right. But, within that economy, there is a determination to maintain competition. Part of the success of the big companies results from their going out and obtaining the most competitive tenders from their subcontractors. That is a fact of Japanese life. I do not wish to become involved in a discussion of whether there is open access to Japanese markets; that is an entirely different subject.

I welcome the Government's Green Paper on restrictive trade practices. It has generally been accepted that the system with which we have lived — the power of the Director General of Fair Trading — has been entirely inadequate. I am not a lawyer. Let us consider what happens in simple non-legalistic terms. Let us suppose that a large firm does something anti-competitive and damages a small firm. The small firm, if it is brave enough, reports it to the director general, who hauls in the large firm—this is a bit of a parody, but it is not far from the truth — wraps it over the knuckles and says, "You are a naughty boy. Do not do it again. You are damaging another company." The large firm promptly goes off and does the same thing again, and, this time, the smaller business might end up being destroyed.

That is not good enough. The powers are inadequate, and I welcome the suggestion in the Green Paper — which I hope will come to fruition—that private actions for exemplary damages should be allowed in such cases, and that class actions should also be allowed. Through such means, we shall hoist the signal that our anti-restrictive practices legislation will have real teeth. I do not wish to get involved in the professions because that is a different argument. However, for business it is crucial that there should be real teeth in our anti-restrictive practice legislation.

In the Green Paper we have moved ourselves much closer, quite rightly and naturally, to the legal position undertaken by the EEC in its competition policy. There was a famous case the other day of a firm in Gloucester, called Engineering and Chemical Supplies, which accused a firm in Belgium, called AKZO, of predatory pricing. The Gloucester firm took the Belgian firm to the Commission. It cost nothing and the firm did not have to pay expensive lawyers or risk breaking up its business because of legal costs. The matter was simply reported to the Commission, which undertook a dawn raid. That may alarm some of my colleagues who do not much like the idea of dawn raids. However, if wrongdoing takes place, sometimes that is the only way of obtaining evidence. The dawn raid on AKZO resulted in it being fined £6·5 million. That is not a rap over the knuckles. It is embarrassing for that firm to have to explain to its board of directors that it has been behaving in an anti-competitive way and that it has suffered a fine of that size.

If we can get some real teeth in our restrictive trade practices, we shall have moved a long way. The Government have been brave in doing that. It has long been a neglected area. As I said earlier, it is essential that that should go hand in glove with the expansion and increase in the enterprise climate.

I want to speak about the merger control policy announced in the Blue Paper. There is a lot of good stuff in it, but it could be strengthened in order to protect the small and medium-sized businesses rather more effectively. The merger control policy set out in the Blue Paper could be improved in four main respects in order to give greater recognition to the rights and interests of the small firm and it is vital that we should do that.

First, under section 84(1) of the Fair Trading Act 1973 the Monopolies and Mergers Commission, in determining the public interest, may consider a series of matters, in addition to competition. That list could be expanded to include other items. It could include the maintenance of a strong small and medium-sized enterprise sector so that that factor has to be taken into consideration. I believe that it was last year when we had the possibility of Plessey being taken over by GEC. That would have been the mega merger of all mega mergers. However, happily, that did not happen. When that merger was proposed the Small Business Bureau commissioned independent research to see the effect that that merger would have had on the independent suppliers to Plessey. The result would have been that about 180 small and medium-sized firms would have been severely damaged or even put out of business.

That sort of research had never been undertaken before. In other words, nobody had ever said, "A wants to join up with B and that may be fine. It may not be damaging to competition, but how would it damage other people?". As my hon. Friend the Minister knows, in the United States that is built into the law. It is one of the considerations—it may not be the overriding consideration—that has to be taken into account.

Alternatively, since the Department of Trade and Industry has said that public interest issues other than competition will be used sparingly in judging mergers, we might perhaps try to articulate the small business element in the assessment of the potential effect of a merger on competition. Perhaps we could stress the need to mention the position of small businesses in, for example, ease of entry to markets, advantages over competitors and the market position of buyers and suppliers in the relevant market.

The other route, which perhaps my hon. Friend the Minister will consider, is slightly new and different for this country. We could perhaps adopt the right of a private action following the United States Clayton Act model. That Act provides for treble damages for private parties, including competitors, suppliers or customers

"injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the anti-trust law."

it also allows a private party to take out an injunction against "threatened loss or damages by violation of the anti-trust laws."

I recognise that that would mean moving into a legalistic sphere. However, it offers the possibility of damages being claimed and of people being properly protected through the courts.

Another approach that I ask my hon. Friend the Minister to consider would be to accept the procedure of the proposed merger policy and simply press for a more explicit recognition of the rights of small and medium-sized firms to be considered as third parties. For example, the Blue Paper mentions the clearance of pre-notified proposed mergers. The interests of smaller firms could be considered under that. Secondly, the interests of small firms could be dealt with under the decision by the Secretary of State to impose binding undertakings in lieu of a Monopolies and Mergers Commission reference. Finally, the reference of proposed mergers to the MMC could include a reference to the needs of smaller businesses and any possible threat facing them.

In all three cases the Department of Trade and Industry has accepted the need to notify and consult interested parties, but we could have a more explicit recognition of the interests of small and medium-sized firms built into legislation. It would not be so revolutionary seen against what happens in other countries. In a sense, it would be a big step forward and a recognition of the fact that the wealth and jobs being created today are coming primarily from the independent smaller business sector and the expansion of medium-sized firms rather than from large firms. It would be a recognition of that in an important part of the law.

When we come to legislate under the monopolies and mergers changes in the Blue Paper, I hope that the Government will consider my suggestions in an entirely constructive way so that we can strengthen the working of our merger and monopolies laws, which I believe do not need major overhaul. The small additions mentioned in the Blue Paper and perhaps some of my comments would make things better.

I welcome the Government's dual approach: the changes in mergers policy and the excellent Green Paper on restrictive trade practices. If we bring about the changes, it will, as I said earlier, be the right step forward in obtaining a better competition policy, which is essential to the framework of a proper working of the enterprise culture, which I hope that we all desperately want to see succeed.

Mr. Frank Haynes (Ashfield): I was born in March 1926. That is a long while ago—62 years. From the day of my birth until now I have always believed that competition is the hallmark of the British people.

I listened carefully to the hon. Member for Darlington (Mr. Fallon), and I should like to take up one point. He said that he would be travelling back to Darlington this afternoon along the A1. He talked about the Little Chefs that he sees while travelling on the A1, and he talked about competition among restaurants. I suggest that he should be careful about competition between road hogs on the A1. That is competition but it is the wrong type of competition. I want to deal with the question of fair and unfair competition.

I can give many examples of competition being the hallmark of the British people. I could mention Doncaster Rovers. You, Mr. Deputy Speaker, will agree that they are a marvellous football team. They are two from the bottom of the third division. With real competition, they will stay in the third division, and not go down to the fourth division. That is competition, the hallmark of the British people and of British football.

Mr. Hoyle: Let us hear about Darlington.

Mr. Haynes: I shall not mention Darlington. I shall mention Nottingham Forest. Brian Clough is a real competitor. He has won everything except the FA cup, and he will win that this year. That is real competition. The Welsh will be on the grass tomorrow to win the triple crown. That is real competition. The British people are good at competition. There is no doubt about that.

Every hon. Member had to compete to get into this place, and the whole nation takes part in that competition. The hon. Member for Darlington was lucky in the ballot. I compliment him on the subject of the debate and I listened to him very carefully. The British cricket team, who are in New Zealand, have done marvellously over the years. Again, that is competition. When the competition to enter this place is finished, hon. Members have to compete to catch your eye, Mr. Deputy Speaker, to speak.

I shall move on to some of the subjects that we should be discussing in regard to competition that involves the British people. Under this Administration, millions of people have been put out of work. Competition is really getting in the way, because, in many cases, it is unfair. It is unfair in the industry in which I worked for 35 years before I came to the House. I know my onions where the mining industry is concerned. I shall come to that later, as I believe that there is totally unfair competition in that industry.

I do not think that many Conservative Members know what work is all about. They do not know about getting a job to be able to work and contribute to the success of the nation. Free worldwide trade has been mentioned. There are a number of factories in my constituency which produce hosiery and knitwear. Since 1979 that industry has been absolutely clobbered. The Government have allowed cheap imports to drop on our shores at the expense of our industries and have done very little about it.

I shall give the Minister for Trade his due. He has been to Europe and he has tried very hard. He has had some success, but he certainly has not had the success to which the British hosiery and knitwear trade is entitled.

Mergers have been mentioned, and the Minister was drawn to the Dispatch Box on the subject by the criticism from Opposition Members. When we talk about mergers, we are talking about big businesses getting together and creating massive organisations. My constituency has experienced that. It contains little businesses. The Prime Minister preaches at the Dispatch Box about helping small businesses, because that is where the jobs are. Big organisations are trying to move into my constituency.

[Mr. Haynes]

They are big, massive stores and they contribute to Conservative party funds, so I understand what is going on on the other side of the Chamber.

In my constituency the little businesses suffer. A massive company wants to plant one massive food store in my constituency, and there is an application for another, at the expense of the small businesses that have existed for many years. They are family businesses that have been passed from father to son. Now those small businesses that have been built up over many years are being crucified by the Government's merger policies which are creating massive monsters at the expense of ordinary people in the community.

It is all about money. The Government are money mad and they do not think about the living standards of ordinary folk and the importance of having a job in the first place. I had to get that off my chest in regard to big business.

There is more competition in the Department of Health and Social Security, which was mentioned by the hon. Member for Darlington. There is competition by people to get into the offices and get up to the counter to discover whether they will get any benefit because they have no work. That is competition for ordinary folk down on the ground floor. Sometimes people spend the whole morning in that office trying to get the benefit to which they are entitled. That is the unfair competition that I was talking about.

There is also unfair competition in the employment office. I remember when Lord Prior, as the Secretary of State for Employment, announced from the Dispatch Box the closure of employment offices where people could get jobs. He closed down many of those centres, and youngsters leaving school had to travel across my constituency to the employment office that was open. It was expensive for them to get there, unless they walked and wore out their shoe leather. I know what it is like to have holes in my shoes. I know what life and work are about, and I know the difficulties experienced by ordinary families. When I was a kid, my shoes were worn out and cardboard was put in them because we could not afford a new pair. People in poverty will return to those days unless the Government examine some of the policies that they are implementing.

Since 1979, Civil Service Ministers have come to the Dispatch Box bragging about reductions in the numbers of civil servants. But what happens in the community? Those civil servants serve the people. No wonder there are blooming great queues waiting at the counters for their benefit, because there has been a serious reduction in the numbers of civil servants.

I have a particular interest in it. The Government are not helping it. They are allowing the Americans, the Indians and the French to create unfair competition against Britain. So what has happened? We have lost star after star. Britain has produced the finest actors in the world.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes (Harrow, West): I know that the hon. Gentleman takes a close interest in the film industry. Has he read the press speculation about the effect on the film industry of the welcome tax reductions in the Budget?

Mr. Hoyle: None of those people has said that he wants those cuts anyway.

Mr. Haynes: I understand what my hon. Friend the Member for Warrington, North (Mr. Hoyle) says, but I understand also what the hon. Member for Harrow, West (Mr. Hughes) says. He seems to think that the actors will return in droves. There will be an odd one. I have noticed that Michael Caine has said that he is coming back, but he should never have gone in the first place.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: He has already come back.

Mr. Haynes: He comes back now and again. Far too many of those people have gone and this has happened for some time. We have lost those marvellous British actors to other countries through unfair competition.

There is another side to the story—the theatre. "The Phantom of the Opera" is showing in New York. It is a tremendous success, with British actors. It is British all the way through from start to finish. That is fair competition. The show is there to be seen by the whole of America. However, because of our Government's policy, there is unfairness towards our film industry.

The hon. Member for Darlington mentioned transport. He nips up and down the A1 in a car. Little does he realise that there are thousands of people in my constituency and others who depend on public services. Because of deregulation of the bus services, people no longer have a bus service. Deregulation has brought in the spivs. Many of those spivs now have to be told to take their buses off the roads because the vehicles are unsafe. The Government have created unfair competition. The result is that some people do not have the service which they used to have and to which they are entitled.

I shall refer to the mining industry but shall not speak for a long time.

The Parliamentary Secretary to the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (Mr. Donald Thompson): Hear, hear.

Mr. Haynes: If the Minister is disappointed, I can extend my comments. Is he encouraging me? The hon. Gentleman obviously likes what he is hearing. He should have a word with No. 10 so that some of these policies are changed in the interests of all the people and not operated just for a certain section.

The hon. Member for Harrow, West mentioned the Budget. It is in the interests of the rich and not those people in poverty in my constituency who have been struggling for a long time and who will struggle even more because of the Government's policies and especially their Budget.

There is no comparison between the mining industry and a factory shop floor. Things can change as the minutes and hours go by. A soft floor or bad roof in the mine can affect production at the coal face. Frequently, production stops. There is another result of the Government's policy of cuts. I remember the day when something went wrong underground and a spare part was needed. These parts used to be kept in the stores on the pit top but, because of the squeeze, the workers now have to go to another pit or to the area base to get them. While this is happening, there is no production at the coal face.

In many years gone by the shaft was used to get the coal out of the pit. There used to be two decks on the chair and three tubs on the bottom and three on the top, with three quarters of a tonne of coal in each. Over the years, we in Nottinghamshire have been the pioneers in the mining industry. We regularly met round the table to talk about how we could make progress here, there and all over the pit. One suggestion was that we should do away with having to load mine cars and should put them on the chair to be sent up the pit to the tippler, who would tip them over and send them back down the pit. The man on the job knows a bit more than the fellow who sits in this place or the fellow who sits in Hobart house or in the area office of British Coal. The bloke on the pit point knows what is needed.

Since MacGregor came, the consultations and negotiations have ended. There is no longer negotiation and consultation at pit level. Industrial relations have been destroyed. There used to be discussion resulting in changes in the interests of the industry. Output per man shift climbed like billy-o while I worked at the pit, but that has all changed because of the Government's policy.

Mr. John Marshall: The hon. Gentleman talks about productivity in the pits. Does he accept that since the miners' strike there has been a dramatic growth in productivity throughout the industry?

Mr. Haynes: There has always been growth in productivity in the mining industry. The hon. Gentleman has not looked at the history of the mining industry. I stand here as part of its history. Productivity has increased for years and it will increase even more in future.

Mr. Don Dixon (Jarrow): The hon. Member for Hendon, South (Mr. Marshall) has never even seen a pair of overalls.

Mr. Haynes: That is right. He has never had a tool in his hand——

Mr. Hoyle: I would not bet on it.

Mr. Haynes: I thought that the hon. Member for Hendon, South (Mr. Marshall) would enjoy that one.

Mr. Hoyle: I do not think that the hon. Member for Hendon, South will get up again.

Mr. Haynes: I do not think he will, either.

Progress has been made. Because of the new system, in addition to doing away with the mine cars, the cage has been converted to what we call a skip, which holds 14·5 tonnes of coal. That is a lot more than could be carried in six tubs.

Mr. Dixon: What is a skip?

Mr. Haynes: The chair is used to carry men and materials needed in the pit. The operator need only open the chair's floor and tip the coal out. The coal now travels from the coal face on conveyor belts all the way to the pit bottom into the skip, from which it is poured into the chair and then taken up the shaft. That is progress. It has helped to increase output per man shift. That progress will continue because we get the bright ideas from the laddies who work at the pit point on the coal face and in the distribution sector.

I am not saying that we do not have problems. There is one in particular. When we started to use conveyor belts, it meant that there was one main conveyor belt onto which all the coal faces tipped coal. If that conveyor belt went wrong, the whole pit went wrong because all the eggs were in one basket. We must get over that problem. We must carry with us the men who are doing the job in the pit. As one who worked in the pits for many years, I believe that those men do a marvellous job in the interests of our economy, but there is something I am coming to the unfair part—that those lads back in the pit do not like

My ex-mining colleagues and I will raise at every opportunity the question of unfair competition from America and Australia—[Interruption.] I do not know why the hon. Member for Hendon, South is laughing; this is a serious matter. For a day or two we have been talking about the problems in South Africa and the way the South Africans carry on. The South Africans run their pits by slave labour. How can we compete against that? That is totally unfair competition. The South Africans pay those who work in the pits next to nothing. The big white bosses hold big whips over the workers' backs. When I was a lad at the pit I had a whip held over my back. I have experienced everything.

Mr. Hoyle: Now you are a Whip yourself.

Mr. Haynes: I enjoyed that. We get some smart interventions on this side of the House; they are a bit dowdy on the Conservative Benches.

I was making a point about unfair competition. All that has got to change. Up in the coalfields we have all that coal beneath our feet. It is there, and it can be got, and it can be got cheaply, provided that the men who work it are given a fair chance. We shall have to come back to this subject at a later stage.

I realise that the coal will not last for ever——

Mr. Hoyle: I am listening with great interest because I know of my hon. Friend's expertise in the mining industry. Does he intend to deal also with the unfairness mentioned by the hon. Member for Gordon (Mr. Bruce) arising from the privatisation of electricity? The Government are talking about free competition for coal but not for nuclear power.

Mr. Haynes: Yes, I shall come to that later, but at the moment I am dealing with the unfair competition from America and France, but particularly from South Africa and Australia. I have mentioned the use of slave labour in South Africa. I am sure that the hon. Member for Darlington will agree that we cannot compete with that.

The Department of Energy appears regularly to say that we should be going for opencast coal. I live in a mining village. We have a pit just down the road called Annesley. We also have opencast mining just down the road; surface mining has taken place there for a long time. I bet Conservative Members do not live near opencast mines. It is murder; it really is. Some people have had to suffer the effects for 30 to 40 years and they have had a bellyfull. The youngsters of today are saying, "We are having no more of it."

British Coal wants to extend the surface mining nearer and nearer to people's properties, but those people have had enough of the dust and noise and everything else and they do not want anymore. I do not think that the Minister realises what he is actually saying when he suggests there should be more opencast mining. It is easy on paper to say, "We can increase coal output by extending surface coal working." But we must consider the suffering that it has caused for many, many years. We talk about pneumoconiosis in the pits, but some people have got pneumoconiosis by working near opencast mines when they should be breathing God's clean air.

The Under-Secretary of State for Health and Social Security makes me sick with some of the comments that she comes out with. She tells people what they should eat and she tells them that they should not smoke. I would argue for freedom of the individual to decide those things. Then she goes to the Tea Room to eat bacon and flipping beans. I ask you, Mr. Deputy Speaker. That is not fair at all; it is totally unfair. The hon. Lady is always yawping outside in front of the television cameras. If she spent more time looking at hospitals and the services that are not being provided instead of being stuck in front of a TV camera, we might get a better Health Service. But I am wandering from the debate, I am sorry, Mr. Deputy Speaker, but that is how I feel when I listen to the comments of Ministers who do not understand the problems of ordinary individuals.

I shall deal with the points made by my hon. Friend the Member for Warrington, North about unfair competition in the electricity industry. The Government have a majority of 101. On the very same day that they were bragging about the money that they have poured into people's pockets in the Budget we heard it announced that electricity prices were to increase by 10·7 per cent. in the south-east. That will leave people in debt, never mind putting more money in their pockets. That money will go, and more with it, because of the massive increase in electricity prices.

We should not have unfair competition from the nuclear industry. We must watch the nuclear industry very carefully. I am very concerned about what is happening. Conservative Members say, "You don't have to worry about safety. Everything's OK. There will be no problem." Then Chernobyl drops on our head and we are all affected by it—even thousands of miles away. We need only one mistake at one power station and every one of us is affected by it. It is no good the Government preaching to us that everything is OK. They used to tell us that in the pits, but things still went wrong; we saw bodies carried out and people lost limbs. Something has to happen before anyone moves. We must get away from that attitude and we must ensure that everything is really OK in the interests of the people. We should take a stern look at the nuclear industry. It creates unfair competition, and it does not give us a real chance. It is on that point that I finish.

Mr. Ian Taylor (Esher): I am delighted to follow the hon. Member for Ashfield (Mr. Haynes), who gave us a riveting display on a variety of issues. I am a great admirer of his knowledge of the coal industry, but I had not realised that he knew so much about Equity and the problems of the film industry, although it is clear from what we saw today that he has had some training as an actor. His knowledge of sporting events is clearly profound, and I am grateful for his advice on what I should put my money on in several of the competitions still to be played. But when he reached competition policy, the hon. Gentleman scored a long series of own goals. I hope that he will play for all the opponents of Doncaster before the end of the season if he wishes the club to stay in the third division.

I am delighted to be able to follow the lead given by my hon. Friend the Member for Darlington (Mr. Fallon) who gave a comprehensive review of the moves forward in competition policy. I apologise in advance for the fact that I shall not be present when my hon. Friend winds up the debate because I have to speak at a conference in Ashford in Kent at lunchtime. It is sponsored by the Hansard Society—that is probably appropriate—and Eurotunnel, which is relevant to some of the remarks that I shall make.

First, however, I congratulate my hon. Friend. I have always admired the way in which he courageously speaks up for competition against too many Government handouts. He sits for a northern seat and his success in being re-elected convincingly at the last election shows that many people in the north respond favourably to opportunities and incentives given by proper competition and economic development rather than the constant threat of the distortion of the market by over-generous state handouts.

Mr. Hoyle: Does the hon. Gentleman think that Nissan would have located in the north-east without generous Government handouts?

Mr. Taylor: That encouragement for Nissan to locate there is causing embarrassment to several British car companies because of Nissan's levels of productivity. Nissan's presence will encourage other companies in the British car industry to perform better.

My hon. Friend the Member for Darlington has a connection with the Department of Energy. I should like to congratulate him and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Energy on the courageous view that they took of the privatisation of the electricity industry. Contrary to Labour Members, I regard it as being something for which the British consumer will be thankful. It shows that we have learnt the lessons of some of the mistakes that we made in the privatisation of British Telecom.

There is no doubt that Britain responds to and needs competition. Competition leads to massive benefits for the economy and the consumer. There are the further benefits of industry being able to lower its prices, thus benefiting other industries and the consumer.

The comments of the hon. Member for Ashfield prompt me to remark that one of the saddest aspects of the continuing battle between the South of Scotland electricity board and British Coal is that the concentration has been on the possibility that certain jobs might be lost in the industry — despite the fact that the coal that it is producing is not of a competitive quality—rather than the benefits of the creation of many more new jobs in Scotland if there were to be a reduction in the price of electricity to other industries. Conservative Members are prepared to think positively in the interests of people in the regions and Scotland. I hope that common sense will prevail and that the SSEB will be able to carry through its proposals and bring down prices, to the benefit of Scottish companies.

One of the objectives of competition policy is the protection of the consumer. In principle, that is the only reason why Governments should intervene. Protection of the consumer is a justifiable case for Government action. In that context, I warmly welcome the two recent Government papers on merger policy and the review of restrictive trade practices policy; they make very important contributions to the debate.

The review of restrictive practices policy, which is a comprehensive document, touches on the matter with which I want to deal—the implications of competition and restrictive practices within the European Community.

The proposals in the document, in moving towards an effects-based form of legislation, are falling more into line with the EC's proposals.

It is important to remember why such harmonisation is important. Page 7 of the paper says:

"For example, an agreement between two or more UK parties may affect trade between Member States because it makes it more difficult for competing manufacturers from other Member States to sell into the UK market. Furthermore, the need for UK companies to take account of EC competition law has grown as business has become increasingly international."

I would be the first to admit, and agree with the Government, that EC law does not constitute a complete instrument for effective and comprehensive control of restrictive practices in the United Kingdom. We therefore need complementary United Kingdom legislation.

What is vital, however, is that, in this and other vital sectors, we ensure the development of the European Community so that we can influence the proposed framework of laws and take domestic action to ensure that British industry is assisted or at least not disadvantaged.

In effect, by 1992, the European Community will be the new domestic market. Concepts that have existed to date have assumed that the British Isles was the domestic market, but that will no longer be the case. Commissioner Peter Sutherland of the European Commission has been instrumental in drawing that issue to the attention of a wider public audience.

Proposals are being brought forward that are of immense importance. In summary, nearly all mergers, takeovers or joint ventures that have a combined annual turnover of £690 million — about 1 billion ecu — must automatically notify a Commission merger control unit before going ahead with a deal. That figure refers to world rather than Community sales of companies. It applies to anyone acquiring operations within the EEC, even if the bidder is not European. So long as the deal has an impact inside the European Community, it is potentially covered — a concept that also exists in other parts of Community competition policy.

The exceptions to that rule are where the company being taken over has annual sales of less than 50 million ecu or where more than three quarters of the merged group's turnover is in only one member state. This clause was slipped in to counteract fears that the Commission was trying to override powers of national takeover authorities.

Financial services companies will have different criteria, and banks and financial institutions are covered if their combined assets are more than 10 billion ecu. Insurance companies are caught when their joint premium income is more than 1 billion ecu.

The European Commission estimates that, overall, between 100 and 150 deals will have to be notified annually, of which it would change or block perhaps two or three. As William Dawkins of the Financial Times has said, if this continues, most of the larger British companies will have to pay increasing regard to how and on what terms the European Commission should intervene.

The internal market comprises 320 million people. That provides industry with a target of 80 million more customers than the United States, and it is three times the size of the market in Japan. It gives an idea of the scope and potential that is possible as long as we ensure that rules to protect the consumer in that market are logical and effective.

It is reckoned that up to one tenth of the joint GDP of the European Community is wasted because of lack of proper internal market regulations. There have been many obstacles to competition, and until 1987 there were 70 different customs forms and up to 35 were required at some border posts. Imagine the difficulties for anyone even bothering to trade if they did not have to, when faced with such bureaucratic nonsense. At least, on 1 January 1988, those many documents were replaced by a two-page single administrative document, which is a much simpler document and which will assist communications within the European Community. In 1992, there should be no forms at all.

Some of the implications of the internal market will be dramatic. We perhaps need to prepare ourselves by thinking them through. My hon. Friend the Member for Darlington mentioned the professions. The professions, who almost invented the words "restrictive practices", will need to think carefully about how they will react to the probable changes in European Community legislation.

In theory, it will be possible for anyone to contract with an accounting company in any of the other 11 member countries or to ask for quotations from an insurance company in, say, Madrid or Rome rather than London. That will call into question more rapidly than anything else the need for equalised qualifications in the 12 countries for entry into the professions and what the internal rules and standards should be. The effect will be dramatic, especially in the means of entry to a profession and the extent to which the professions — the legal profession is the most obvious example — still maintain separate areas of activity.

Another area that will be transformed by the internal market is transport. That aspect is vital to the effective supply of services to consumers. At present, it is estimated that transport costs account for 7 per cent. of the cost of goods traded internally in the Common Market. I congratulate the Government on the leading role that they have played in reducing the cartel in the air transport industry for the benefit of the many people who travel for business or pleasure within the European Community.

In the past few days, however, I have been saddened at the news that the European Community Transport Ministers have failed to make progress in liberalising the road haulage industry, apparently because of West German objections. I was delighted to hear that the British Government had refused to agree the proposals on the table because they did not go far enough. That shows the extent to which we have become leaders in Community thinking and likely to influence the speed and direction of its development.

Another aspect of the way in which the internal market will open a range of opportunities to the consumer, as well as potential difficulties for companies if they do not react quickly, is the fact that a product legally sold in one country will be entitled to be sold in all 12 countries without the need for further testing. There may be dangers in that, and we must be on our guard, but we have time to ensure that sufficient safeguards are built in. Companies must bear in mind that we are likely to be advancing in that way, and they must take the correct measures to ensure that they are capable of competing in those circumstances.

Before 1992, there will be a rush to effect takeovers within the Community. The British press tends to highlight British bids for American companies — it seems to be regarded as the natural order that the Anglo-Saxon world should stick together, and that aspect tends to be regarded as the most important — but I predict that slowly, or perhaps even dramatically, attention will shift to takeovers within the Community.

At the moment, there is an interesting takeover battle in which the Italian Carlo De Benedetti is trying to take over the Société Générale de Belgique to turn it into an effective European financial institution. The United Kingdom newspaper industry is attempting to take over French newspapers such as Les Echos. Dixon's has made a bid for a large Spanish electrical retailer chain so as to establish a good position ready for the opening of the internal market.

Other countries will seek to buy into this country. At present, Britain is basking in glory. When I lived in Paris in 1975-76, it was almost embarrassing to be British. The hon. Member for Sedgefield (Mr. Blair) smiles — his memories of the Labour Government are probably as embarrassing as mine. When I discussed matters with French politicians, they expressed sympathy for me because, although I was living in Paris, I was still paying taxes in Britain and the British disease was leading this country to rack and ruin.

All that has changed. Today, we are at the top of the growth tables and the French Government, despite a Socialist President, are rapidly pursuing all the sensible economic policies which the British Government have shown to be effective since 1979. Privatisation policies in France are modelled on the British example, and French merchant bankers come to London to see how it is done. French economic policy is very much modelled on the Thatcher revolution.

The situation was very different when the French Socialists first came to power in 1980. They began with a burst of Wilsonism and vast public expenditure, with the usual results.

Mr. Robert N. Wareing (Liverpool, West Derby): The hon. Gentleman seems unaware of the French constitutional situation. In the past two or three years, the French Government has been in the hands of Chirac — a devotee of Thatcherism — so it is not a Socialist Government. The hon. Gentleman should be aware of that principle of cohabitation, although it is likely to end with the French presidential election in May.

Mr. Taylor: I am grateful to the hon. Gentleman for confirming what I have said. When the French Government came to power in 1980 there was not only a Socialist President — Mr. Mitterrand is still a Socialist President — but a Socialist Prime Minister, who led the country to near rack and ruin by following exactly the policies that the British Labour Government followed between 1976 and 1979.

Mr. Chris Butler (Warrington, South): History is not my best subject, but did not the French Socialist Government have to turn back on their tracks and begin denationalisation before Chirac came to power?

Mr. Taylor rose

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Harold Walker): Order. We are getting further and further away from the motion before the House. Perhaps we could direct the debate a little more towards the terms of the motion.

Mr. Taylor: I am always grateful for your guidance, Mr. Deputy Speaker. I shall leave the final points of French political life in the safe hands of a non-Socialist Prime Minister pursuing policies which I am sure will be as successful in France as they have been in this country.

The main thrust of my case is that competition policy must be seen in a European context. The legislative proposals and papers put forward by the Department of Trade and Industry make a welcome reference to this. There are bound to be difficulties, as there always are when different countries and cultures come together, and there will be a settling down period.

When I spoke to the managing director of a Franco-British car company the other day, he commented that, after the takeover of his company, a senior manager had come over here because he was worried about a local difficulty in Scotland. The French could not understand why the problem had not been solved immediately by sending in the priest. That is not the usual British way to solve a factory dispute in Scotland, although from what I have seen of the Ford situation in Dundee the priest may be the unions' last resort after the mess they have made of the opportunity to create new jobs in that area.

It is sad indeed that this country still has people who, like the leaders of those unions, do not understand that companies such as Ford no longer need to have plants in areas such as Dundee but can move anywhere in the European Community. That is a lesson that we must all learn. Competition opens up great opportunities, but if we refuse to respond to the incentives that it provides we will be caused an immense amount of heartache. That is what the people of Dundee will suffer unless the unions come to their senses.

To assist the development of competition, we must prepare for the internal market. Recently, the chairman of the CBI Europe committee, Mr. John Raisman, made some valid points about what British companies should do to prepare for 1992, and they deserve a wider audience. He suggests that companies should review and consider the following:

> "First how their business is organised in Europe, including the staffing and location of their corporate Headquarters;
> Second their distribution and transportation arrangements;
> Third the number, size and location of their manufacturing plants, warehouses and depots;
> Fourth the scope for standardising their product range and its implications for production, design, packaging, sales promotion and advertising;
> Fifth their marketing networks and sales offices;
> Sixth their R & D and capital investment programmes, bearing in mind the opportunities for European collaboration;
> Seventh their provisions for information technology, where at least some rationalisation and simplification should be possible;
> Eighth the scope for joint ventures, mergers, acquisitions and cross border alliances"

I have already referred to such scope in this debate.

> "Finally they must review the recruitment, training and development of staff, with particular emphasis on language ability."

British industry still has room for improvement. The Red Book has shown that productivity is growing fast, but our productivity rate is still one third lower than that of our principal competitors. Private sector spending on R and D and training is still too low. There are also regional imbalances in the attitude of many companies towards the opportunities provided by the European Community.

The Government have made dramatic strides in the way in which they have rethought their attitude to competition. Their proposals contained in the documents on mergers and restrictive practices are extremely welcome. British industry is awakening to the opportunities provided. Consumers are becoming much more vociferous about what they consider to be their rights and opportunities.

In 1992 we will have a market of 320 million people —it will be our domestic market. We would be unwise if we did not grasp the opportunity presented to us to ensure that the development of the Community market is sympathetic to British attitudes and legislation, and that British companies triumph.

11.42 am

Mr. Tony Blair (Sedgefield): First, I should like to congratulate the hon. Member for Darlington (Mr. Fallon) for choosing competition policy as a subject for debate. The hon. Member for Darlington is somewhat unusual in that, whereas many Conservative Members wear the garb of Thatcherism as a temporary expedient, he believes in it.

I believe that the hon. Gentleman's speech demonstrated the essential weakness of the Thatcher philosophy. He informed the House, in terms that I fully endorse, that many of our high street stores are dominated by large conglomerates. He spoke of the electrical goods industry and how companies such as Dixons and Currys dominate that market. He spoke about tied pubs and the small variations in the price of, for example, lager. He spoke of the large industrial conglomerates operating in large sections of the market and about the books industry and how the price of books has remained static for the past few years. The hon. Gentleman illustrated, by a range of examples, how big business dominates the market and how competition is often squeezed out as a result. However, it is the free market that he endorses and, in some respects, worships, that has led to the abuse of power and monopoly.

The hon. Gentleman must accept the central argument that it is only if Government are prepared to intervene on behalf of the broader community that we can act to ensure that the market responds to the interests of the people. Their interests and the interests of the market are not always the same—a free market is not necessarily a fair one.

I summarise my argument under four headings. First, a deregulated market is not the same as a competitive one. A tough regulatory regime lies at the heart of a competitive market that responds to the interests of consumer. Secondly, we do not assume, unlike the Government, that the interests of the private sector and the interests of the public always and naturally coincide. That is especially so with regard to monopolies and mergers. In that respect, we believe that there should be a broader view of what constitutes the public interest. That should take account of the competitive effects of potential mergers, but also take account of wider considerations.

Thirdly, a competition policy must be buttressed by effective rights granted to consumers. As my hon. Friend the Member for Ashfield (Mr. Haynes) has said, there are many ways of making industry responsive to the consumer rather than simply relying on a competition policy. A panoply of consumer rights are required when one considers the large, private sector monopolies that have been created by the Government, for example British Gas and British Telecom or when consumers are adversely affected by the restrictive practices of particular trades.

Fourthly, the Office of Fair Trading, or whatever new regulatory body is introduced by the Government, must, if it is to perform its new role of seeking out restrictive practices, have adequate staff and resources to accomplish that task. It should be free to take an active role to seek out anti-competitive practices rather than simply reacting to complaints made to it.

Over the past few years mergers have occurred in a greater volume than at any time since the war. In 1983 spending on mergers was some £2·7 billion a year; in 1984 it rose to £5·9 billion; and in 1987 almost £15 billion was spent on merger activity. That merger phenomenon has occurred especially in this country, although it has been repeated in the United States.

Present Government policy is to refer mergers primarily on competitive grounds. That doctrine was established first by the right hon. Member for Chingford (Mr. Tebbit) and endorsed in the recent White Paper published by the DTI. In fact, under 5 per cent. of qualifying mergers are referred to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission.

Recently the Government published their paper on mergers policy. I believe that there is an interesting contrast between that paper and the paper on restrictive trade practices, though the author, Mr. Leisner, was the same. Although the restrictive trades practices paper is written with genuine fervour and sincerity, it strikes me that the mergers policy paper is more an illustration of Government ideology than a rigorous analysis of the problems of mergers.

As a spur to competition the mergers policy paper is quite pathetic. Indeed, I was surprised that the hon. Member for Darlington did not pick up on that more forcibly, but he did hint at it. It is not that the document's proposals are not necessarily bad if they are correctly administered—and that is an important point. However, what are the proposals? They include an attempt to reduce the delays in procedures through the Office of Fair Trading and the Monopolies and Mergers Commission and that attempt is perfectly understandable and good —the pre-notification procedure and the OFT's ability to secure undertakings as opposed to a full reference to the MMC. Those aims are not necessarily bad. However, we must notice that their effect is not to hinder mergers or acquisitions or to protect competition, but to facilitate mergers.

The only proposals that the merger policy document offers are those which make mergers easier. They do not obstruct mergers. That is not always necessarily bad and some mergers are obviously necessary. However, it is interesting that a document stimulated by a concern that merger activity was having adverse effects on the economy should result in a document which takes as its principle the Government dogma that the free market should be allowed to facilitate mergers in an easier way.

Mr. Maude: The hon. Gentleman makes the mistaken assumption that all mergers are bad for competition. That is patently not the case. He believes that if we are concerned about competition we should inhibit all merger activity. We are aiming through the proposals to focus merger control activity on cases where competition is the major issue. We believe that that is the right approach. The idea that all merger activity is somehow malign is manifestly absurd.

Mr. Blair: With very great respect, I thought that I had prefaced my comments by saying precisely the opposite to that. I accept fully that not all mergers are bad. Of course some mergers are perfectly rational in industrial terms and some serve the wider interests of the economy. However, the converse is obviously not true that all mergers are always good for the economy. Therefore, if we accept that — which I assume that we do — it is bizarre that a mergers policy document should produce proposals whose only impact is to facilitate mergers rather than to obstruct them.

The central weaknesses of the mergers document are best illustrated in the paragraphs to which the hon. Member for Darlington referred. The particular paragraph relates to public interest issues other than competition. We believe that competition is an important aspect of mergers policy, but wider account should be taken of public interest than exists in present policy. The pargraph states:

"Many of those submitting views to the review have mentioned a range of issues, other than those concerning competition, which they believe would justify intervention by the Government. Some of the issues most commonly mentioned are the effects on employment, on regional economic development, and on research and development spending by companies; the consequences of high leverage bids; and foreign takeovers (including reciprocity)."

The next part is interesting as it reveals the Government's view. Throughout this document, as opposed to others, the Government's view is constantly tendered. I wonder whether that hides a rather greater scepticism about Government ideology on the author's part than is manifest by Ministers. The document continues:

"The Government's view is that none of the matters mentioned above"— employment, regional policy and so on—

"is one where the public interest typically diverges from the interest of private sector decision-makers, although it is recognised that in exceptional cases it may do so. Normally, therefore, the decision should be left to the market."

That is quite bizarre. It is nonsense to claim that private sector decision-makers, when deciding whether to merge or to acquire another company, take account of employment, regional economic development or some broader notion of research and development spending by companies. I do not blame them for not taking account of that. A company's purpose is to obey the interests of its shareholders and to take commercial decisions in the normal way. The Government must take account of employment, regional policy and broader questions of industrial policy. It is ridiculous to assume that in a merger acquisition the private sector will operate in the interests of the wider economy on matters such as employment and regional policy. I am not saying that they will not sometimes coincide. However, it would be wrong to suggest that private companies go about their business worried about the effects on regional policy.

There can be no better example of that than the recent bid by Barker and Dobson for the Dee Corporation. Ultimately that bid was warded off. Barker and Dobson made a bid for the Dee Corporation with a high leverage bid. However, people would have been affected thoughout the country and particularly in the north, Scotland and Yorkshire where there are high areas of unemployment. People there were very worried that the sale of Gateway Superstores—a part of the deal—would result in the loss of jobs. It is absurd to assume that such a bid will take account of regional or social policy issues and to assume that the interests of the work force are necessarily those of the acquiring company. One of the weaknesses of our merger and acquisition policy is that we give plenty of say to the shareholders but none to the work force, who surely have as much interest as the shareholders in what happens. Ultimately they produce the wealth that the shareholders can distribute.

Mr. Ian Taylor: A thought has struck me in this connection. Given that the shareholders rejected the bid from Barker and Dobson, they must have taken into account the interests of the workers and the regional distribution of the Dee Corporation's activities.

Mr. Blair: I do not think that that follows, although the hon. Gentleman may be right. I think the shareholders were taking into account the dodgy nature of the way in which the bid was mounted and financed.

The only point I am seeking to make is not that firms never take account of social, economic or employment issues—of course they do—but that one cannot run a merger policy on the basis that private sector interests and broader public interests in employment and social issues will be the same. They will not; they will often conflict. So I am arguing for a broader doctrine of public interest that takes account of factors wider than mere competition.

A good case could be made for a broader public interest definition for high leverage bids. I have corresponded with the Minister about the Barker and Dobson bid for the Dee Corporation, and the way in which it was financed. When an acquisition is financed by a system of loans that requires selling off a large part of the assets of the company being acquired, as a means of paying back the loan to acquire the company, serious questions about the broader public interest are raised. The necessity of selling off parts of the business to repay the loan has nothing to do with the broader public interest; it has to do with the need to pay off the loan that was raised to acquire the company. This is an area in which the public interest needs to be defined more broadly than in terms of simple competition.

I turn now to one of the most interesting parts of the Government document, which justifies my criticism of it. It is clear that the effect of acquisitions and mergers on the new companies that are the products of such moves is at best of doubtful benefit, and at worst damaging or deleterious. The CBI report of last year on "The City and Industry", in many ways an inadequate document, says of this topic:

"while acquisitions may have created wealth for shareholders they are clearly not a prerequisite for industrial success, since contested takeover bids are virtually unknown in West Germany and Japan."

Even more interestingly, annex E of the White Paper, which the hon. Member for Gordon (Mr. Bruce) mentioned, comes to the extraordinary conclusion that post-merger performance rarely lives up to the promises made by the acquiring company at the time of merger. Far from private sector mergers having a beneficial impact on companies — never mind the broader economy — the impact is, if anything, the other way round. Annex E states:

"Evidence on post-merger performance . . . supports the earlier findings of disappointing or inconclusive performance.

Indeed, the consistency of the results of the various studies and the wide range of approaches used tends to reduce the force of the methodological limitations and to increase the robustness of the findings."

If ever a case were needed for maintaining that a broader concept of public interest was required, here it is: the Government report says that post-merger performance does not live up to the promises made at the time of merger.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: Does the hon. Gentleman agree that evidence also points to the regrettable fact that mergers seem to have no mechanism for being unravelled or resolved when they fail to live up to expectations or worse, such as in the case of Guinness or, conceivably, British Airways, where promises were made to shareholders and were then sharply and fundamentally broken? Do we not need powers that will sort out things like that?

Mr. Blair: That is correct, and I intended to raise that matter later in my speech.

It is extremely difficult to say that one should have a very narrow concept of public interest that virtually equates to competition when looking at merger policy. The conclusions that seem to flow from an analysis of present merger policy are first, that it is right to include a broader public interest concept in mergers. We shall not lose efficiency by doing so. Indeed, there may be a gain. I support what the hon. Member for Surrey, North-West (Mr. Grylls) said about small and medium firms.

Secondly, when there is a hostile bid, there is a case for saying that the acquiring company should show positive benefits before the merger is allowed to proceed. That seems to flow from the fact that post-merger performance has been extremely disappointing. Thirdly, there should be some right or say for information, advice or assistance so that employees who find themselves treated like chattels in a merger or acquisition, and who have no powers or rights in the situation, can be protected.

Fourthly, there should be much stricter control of nominee companies and an earlier declaration of the stakes, which would be not at 5 per cent. but at more like 2 per cent. Finally, there is a good case for the Office of Fair Trading publishing, in the case of large mergers and acquisitions, some sort of post-merger analysis of exactly how much that merger or acquisition has led to competitive benefits. As an adjunct to that, it may well be an idea when some of these large mergers or acquisitions take place for some of the major companies such as Hanson or BTR Industries to publish separate accounts for the subsidiaries that they have acquired. We might then be able to see exactly what has happened in such companies after acquisition or merger.

On the strength of this paper on merger policy the Government are lementably failing to live up to their own rhetoric about competition.

I admit that a different situation obtains when one looks at the review of restrictive trade practices policy in the Green Paper. Strangely, once again that was written under the chairmanship of Mr. Liesner. That paper seems to run in a different direction from the other one. Whereas the other one appears to rely excessively on Government dogma about the private sector, this one recognises that a regime of tough regulation is required to enforce competition. That was borne out by the 1979 review of the last Labour Government which lay on the shelf for many years before the Government got round to updating it.

I endorse many of the proposals in the paper. I endorse the move from a legal form-based test of whether a practice is in restraint of trade to an effects-based test. That seems right. I also welcome the general prohibition on anti-competition agreements rather than the present requirement of registration and the stronger powers of enforcement in the new Office of Fair Trading. I also welcome the fact that if the proposals in the Green Paper are carried through, third parties can sue. I assume that that means consumers as well as competitors.

I should like to put a few questions to the Minister about the Green Paper, and my first question is about exemptions. Will the proposed legislation cover all professions and sectors so that each profession or sector has to argue each exemption on its merits, or will there still be exemptions for entire sectors? Will that continue to be permitted or will the profession or sector have to argue each case afresh? There is no reason whatever for any professional sector or service to be outside the remit of the restrictive practices law.

Secondly, the Green Paper takes as its starting point article 85 of the treaty of Rome. That has the great advantage of regarding as a trade restraint both agreements and concerted practices, which is not the case under the present legislation. When interpreting and defining concerted practices, shall we follow the wide definition used by the European Court and the European Commission, which will catch those matters which fall short of agreement, but which operate on a nod and wink? For example, I have always been suspicious of some of the activities of large petrol companies and of the way in which they raise prices together. When such a practice occurs over a number of years, there may not be agreement to collude, but, none the less, the effect of the practice is anti-competitive. Will the new definition be as broad in its ambit as the European Court has defined article 85?

Thirdly, under the Government's proposals, the Office of Fair Trading will have a radically enhanced role as a regulatory body. I am told that, at the press conference for the launch of the Green Paper, it was stated that no extra resources or personnel would be given to the Office of Fair Trading. There is no way that that office can take upon itself the increased burdens of an effects-based system, under which it will be entitled and obliged to take a much more active role without having the proper teeth and resources to carry it out. It would be foolish and a false economy, if they were not provided.

Fourthly, I should like to ask the Minister about class actions. Many people have been appalled by the recent Opren drug case, in which many people suffered great damage, and the amount of compensation handed out, but that is only one facet of a range of difficulties facing consumers. Often, individual consumers lose only £500 or £1,000, yet, overall, many millions of pounds may be lost. If consumers have to sue individually, they are placed in extreme difficulty. The Opposition support the ability of consumers to take class actions to enforce their rights as a group against companies that have engaged in restrictive practices to the detriment of consumers.

Finally, I wish to comment on the European internal market. This morning the Department of Trade and Industry launched its campaign for the internal market and the Minister kindly provided me with a copy of his Department's press release. There is a great difference between that and the pre-publicity provided by the Government and embassies abroad in preparation for this morning's press conference. Hon. Members will recall that a feature of the Government's inner-city campaign was the breakfasts with business people around the country. Originally, the campaign launched this morning was to be fuelled by what the Government calls

"19 high-powered breakfasts around Britain."

The British embassy in Brussels put out a press release which I have rightly described as eccentric in its terms. The headline states:

"Breakfast launch—Britain in Europe's single market".

It continues by saying that

"the most tasty stage of the campaign will begin on 18 April with a breakfast."

At last, the breakfast motif appears to be on the wane, as this morning's press release did not mention breakfast. It has been retitled as a conference. I do not know whether the business men who go from one breakfast to another under the Department of Enterprise's scheme will not now be fed, but I am glad to see that the Government are treating the internal market a little more seriously in embassies overseas.

The internal market poses questions of very great importance in relation to competition policy in Europe. During the last few years there has been an accelerating wave of mergers and acquisitions. In the last two years there have been 68 Euro-mergers, including $7 billion worth of Euro takeovers last year. British acquisitions on the continent are higher now than British acquisitions in America, and this year they are about 40 per cent. up on last year. A tough regulatory regime will be required by the European Community if we are to guard the public interest against this wave of mergers.

Another major danger of the internal market is that it could be dominated by big business interests, to the detriment of smaller and medium-sized firms. The internal market will introduce a range of changes to our trading system. We have not even begun to face up to the risks as well as to what people call the opportunities of the internal market that will be provided over the next few years.

The big European conglomerates have already formed themselves into a European round table of the 25 major industrial giants, including several of our own. They are monitoring every change that goes through the EEC. Many companies and financial institutions — for example, Barclays bank—have their own special unit to monitor the changes that will result from the internal market. They will be very well placed not merely to accommodate the internal market but to dominate it, unless our Government have a proper industrial policy to ensure that British industry is adequately geared up to face the competition. It will take much more than breakfasts and brochures to ensure that Britain is able to compete in the internal market.

This Government are caught between their hands-off, non-interventionist and "free means deregulated" ideology and the reality that without an active, interventionist Government the free market — so-called—often leads to monopoly and to lack of competition, which is adverse to the broader interests of the economy. We have to look only at what has happened to British Telecom and British Gas, and at BP pursuing Britoil and British Airways pursuing British Caledonian, to realise that simply to put such organisations into the private sector does not make them competitive or free, or make that freedom work in the interests of the broader economy. Only by a mixture of a tough regulatory regime and rights for consumers shall we be able to protect the public against the abuse of power and the economy against stagnation and inefficiency. But that task is infinitely better suited to the Labour party than it is to this Government.

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Corporate Affairs (Mr. Francis Maude): In the time-honoured fashion, I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Darlington (Mr. Fallon) on being the first in the ballot for private Members' motions. I congratulate him also on his great wisdom in choosing competition policy as the subject of this debate. My hon. Friend the Member for Surrey, North-West (Mr. Grylls) made the point that it is some time since we have had such a debate. Some say that it has been far to long. I am grateful for this timely opportunity to air the issue. I am only sorry that, although a number of my hon. Friends have been present and keen to take part in the debate, the Opposition Benches, despite the Labour party's professed interest in competition policy, have not been over-populated.

Mr. Blair: I must correct the Minister. There have been several Members on the Opposition Benches. Furthermore, the Conservative Back Benches are hardly over-populated.

Mr. Maude: My mathematics may be inaccurate, but I have counted only one Labour Back Bencher. As the hon. Gentleman knows, Whips are not Back Benchers.

Be that as it may, interest in this debate has been considerably greater on this side of the House. It represents an underlying political reality: that the Government understand about competitive markets and are interested in them. Throughout the debate, the Labour party, and the hon. Member for Gordon (Mr. Bruce), have sought to criticise, on competition grounds, certain aspects of our policy. In fact they are not criticising on the competition grounds at all. They are criticising on other grounds.

I apologise for my absence for half an hour in the middle of the morning. As the hon. Member for Sedgefield (Mr. Blair) rightly says, I was away helping to launch the Department's campaign on the single European market.

The Labour party is in danger of becoming obsessed with breakfasts. I think that it says a little about the modern Labour party that its members simply do not understand that business men today lead extremely busy lives. The one time of day when it is possible to get them together to put a message across is breakfast time. I am sorry if that offends the hon. Member for Sedgefield. I do not wish to deny him his fun; he does not have a lot of fun as a member of the Labour party at the moment, and I do not begrudge it him, as long as he does not suggest that what we are doing in our campaign is anything but extremely serious.

The hon. Gentleman is right to say that the competitive impact of the single European market is enormous. The effect on business if business is competitive will be beneficial, but the effect on uncompetitive businesses — not only in Britain but throughout the Community — will be harmful. I believe that we are absolutely right, in the interests of promoting competition, to take the step of alerting businesses the length and breadth of the country to the implications of the single European market, and I was grateful to my hon. Friend the Member for Esher (Mr. Taylor), who devoted a good deal of his speech to its importance.

My hon. Friend the Member for Darlington, in the course of his enlivening and thought-provoking speech, took us on a tour of Whitehall. He rightly reminded us of the extent to which uncompetitive practices remain, and of how much needs to be done. I do not think that he needs to be persuaded of our desire and will to tackle anti-competitive practices. I must remind him, however, that if he had tried to take us on that tour of Whitehall 10 years ago, we would not have got very far, because of the thicket of regulation and control in which years of corporatism and collectivism had enmeshed us.

The dramatic growth of the British economy over the past seven years, described by the Japanese ambassador recently as the British economic miracle, bears witness to the liberating, enlivening and invigorating effect of removing regulations and controls, and promoting competition. Talk of the British economic miracle has replaced talk of the British sickness, and what a healthy sign that is. All of us find the hon. Gentleman's tour of Whitehall much less embrangled with regulations and controls than it was, but there is still more to be done.

My hon. Friend talked a little about the multi-fibre arrangement. He will know that the arrangement was renewed in 1986, and that that renewal provided for further liberalisation. We supported it as the best deal available. The GATT contracting parties had committed themselves to examining how textiles and clothing could be returned to strengthened GATT rules.

As we specifically stated in our January White Paper, we see open international markets as essential, and will work through the Community to reinforce the GATT system. Our objectives in the Uruguay round include—I quote from the White Paper—

"a lasting solution to the problems of excessive protection and subsidies in agriculture"

"the liberalisation of services."

My hon. Friend also talked about voluntary restraint agreements. He made the error—if I may respectfully point it out to him—of talking about voluntary restraint agreements within my Department. I have to tell him that there are none; the voluntary restraint agreements exist between industries. We take the view that voluntary restraint agreements are for industries to consider for themselves. We keep an eye on what is going on, and I can tell my hon. Friend that Government pressure has resulted in the termination of no fewer than a dozen such arrangements. I hope that he regards that as a promising development.

Mr. Fallon: First, I withdraw any allegation that my hon. Friend's Department is responsible for, or has been fostering, such agreements. However, he has now told the House, which I do not think any of his predecessors have, that his Department keeps an eye on what is going on, and, indeed, that there is some sort of list and that some have been removed. It would be helpful to those of us who follow trade matters if some sort of list could be published in the Official Report.

Secondly, will my hon. Friend respond to my suggestion that there should be more of a balance sheet approach to each individual restraint?

Mr. Maude: My hon. Friend's second suggestion is absolutely right. It is essential to take the balance sheet approach and see what the benefits or otherwise might be. On his first suggestion, if he tables a question to me, no doubt I shall consider how to answer it.

In any arrangement of that sort, there is always a difficulty that the interests of producers are focused and well articulated, but the interests of consumers, who may sometimes suffer as a result, are not being articulated. None of us have consumers coming along to our constituency surgeries saying, "Why should I have to pay 10 per cent. more for my clothes as a result of the multi-fibre arrangement?" That does not happen. However, if there is any suggestion of removing that arrangement, people from the local textile manufacturers certainly come to one's surgery.

Mr. Hoyle: Quite right too.

Mr. Maude: I do not even have to go to my surgery to hear that; I can hear it from across the Chamber now.

It is difficult to take a balance sheet approach such as that suggested by my hon. Friend the Member for Darlington, simply because producer interests are highly articulated and well focused, but consumer interests are, by their very nature, diffuse.

Mr. Hoyle: Does the Minister not realise that the producer is also a consumer and that utterly to destroy the British textile industry, which would be the net result of abandoning the multi-fibre arrangement, would mean that many people would be out of work and could not be consumers at all?

Mr. Maude: That is precisely the type of point that weighs on the minds of Governments when they consider arrangements. I am simply making the general point that the voice of the consumer is not always clearly articulated. That is why we are grateful for the work done by bodies such as the National Consumer Council and the Consumers Association. They articulate precisely the sort of concerns to which I am referring.

My hon. Friend the Member for Darlington referred to the net book agreement. I was grateful to him for doing so. The presumption we are making is that agreements that have been considered under existing legislation will be subject to the new restrictive trade practices legislation, although there may need to be transitional arrangements. Agreements will need to be considered against the new criteria for exemption, and if they do not meet those criteria they will become prohibited. However, we will need to think about the position of agreements such as the net book agreement, which are also subject to resale prices legislation.

In his tour of Whitehall, my hon. Friend the Member for Darlington referred to wages councils and the dock labour scheme. I know that he has a long-standing interest in the dock labour scheme and I do not think that I can usefully add to what my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Employment told him in a debate earlier this month.

On wages councils, my hon. Friend will know that two years ago the Wages Act 1986 made some important changes which reduced the coverage of wages councils, took all workers under the age of 21 out of the scope of the councils and limited their role to the fixing of one hourly rate and one overtime rate. Again, I hope that my hon. Friend finds that an encouraging sign.

[Mr. Maude]

As I have said, debating competition policy now is timely. The Government have just published two papers, one on mergers policy and one on restrictive trade practices policy. I should like to look at what lies behind that, but first I shall say something about competition policy more generally, about the other elements of competition law and the other ways in which the Government can and do promote competition.

I shall start by saying why competition policy is so important. My hon. Friend the Member for Darlington clearly sums up the reasons for that in his motion. It refers to the part which competition policy plays in fostering choice, reducing prices and stimulating wealth creation. Choice for consumers means that firms do not have a captive market, but must work to make sales by offering goods and services which their customers want, and by developing new goods and services.

Firms have to compete on price, which means that they must be as efficient as possible and pass on the benefits of that efficiency if they are to survive. That increases the production of wealth, by ensuring that resources are allocated and used most efficiently, while the capital markets ensure that under-used resources are reallocated through the process of takeover and merger.

It is in free and open markets that competition flourishes. That is why one of the DTI's key objectives is "To produce a more competitive market by encouraging competition and tackling restrictive practices, cartels and monopolies".

There are two ways in which this can be done. In those where the Government have direct control, we ensure that, wherever possible, the market is opened up to competition, despite what has been said by the hon. Member for Gordon and others.

For example, we have introduced competition into the telecommunications market, which was previously a statutory monopoly. Mercury has been licensed as a competitor to British Telecom, and two new competing cellular radio systems have been licensed. That has meant that from only 20,000 mobile telephones in the United Kingdom in 1981, the market has grown to more than 260,000, and that is a very good sign.

The telecommunications equipment market has also been liberalised, so that, instead of having to rent a telephone from British Telecom customers can go out and buy one over the counter.

Reference has also been made to British Gas. As is well understood, British Gas is a natural monopoly. In those circumstances, it needs to be, and is subjected to, a rigorous system of regulation. I should like to point out to those who say that such a monopoly automatically leads to worse services and more complaints that the Gas Consumer Council, in its recent report, made it clear that the number of complaints has fallen since privatisation.

In transport, coach and bus service licensing have been abolished, allowing the growth of new services at lower cost.

We have worked to liberalise air transport, not only domestically, but in Europe. Again, that has lowered costs and improved services.

Market principles have increasingly been applied to public procurement, with greater use of competitive tendering for construction projects; and we are proposing that local authorities should be required to put a range of services out to competitive tender. As Opposition Members claim to be interested in competition policy and to believe in the benefits of competition, it is extraordinary that those provisions for competitive tendering for local government services have been fought so savagely.

Those are just a few examples of the way in which the promotion of competition is central to the Government's approach. However, in most cases, the best way to bring about free competition is for Government to keep out of the way. That is why an important part of my Department's work and my responsibilities is to reduce the burdens which Government regulation places on business.

If markets are to be kept open, Government must be prepared to intervene where the market is, for one reason or another, not functioning properly. Many business men recognise the need to remain fit and competitive, and to respond to competition positively by producing better products at lower prices.

However, at the same time there is always the temptation to look for the easy way out by seeking to stifle competition or to exploit the lack of it. That is not a new phenomenon. The hon. Member for Gordon paraphrased a quotation from Adam Smith. I would not say that Adam Smith is my usual bedtime reading, but a dose of Adam Smith every now and again does no one any harm. Over 200 years ago, Adam Smith said:

"people of the same trade seldom meet together even for merriment and diversion, but the conversation ends in the conspiracy against the public or in some contrivance to raise prices."

The Government must therefore be prepared to act as the grit in the oyster and to open markets to competition and ensure that they stay open. That is the purpose of competition law.

There are three main elements to our competition law. First, there is the law on restrictive trade practices, dealing with cartels or agreements between firms limiting competition. Secondly, there is control on mergers between firms. Thirdly, there are the powers to deal with monopolies or other anti-competitive practices. The first two have been subject to a review. The results of which we have just published.

The need to subject cartels to scrutiny against public interest criteria has long been recognised. The legislation which started with the Restrictive Trade Practices Act 1956, and led to the Restrictive Trade Practices Act 1976, did this by requiring the registration of agreements containing restrictions relating to the supply of goods and, later, services.

Those agreements were then referred to the Restrictive Practices Court and had to be defended as being in the public interest, or they were struck down. In this way, a great number of agreements were brought to an end, and the legislation was very successful in tackling the overt cartels that were a major feature of British industry after the last world war.

The Act is less well adapted to tackling covert cartels, because of the inadequacy of the investigatory powers and the lack of effective penalties. Furthermore, by concentrating on the form of agreements — I was grateful for the support of the hon. Member for Sedgefield — it enables some anti-competitive agreements to escape by skilful drafting while imposing the burden of registration on many hundreds of insignificant agreements.

I should like to deal with the third of the questions that the hon. Member for Sedgefield raised when he talked about the resources of the Office of Fair Trading. Managing the present system, with its onerous burden of registration of agreements, is already resource-intensive at the Office of Fair Trading, so resources will be released from that rather tiresome part of the present system and will be freed for use in the more pro-active form of activity which will supplant it.

Even where significant agreements are registered, it can take many years for them to be brought to court or for the restrictions to be voluntarily abandoned and, in the meantime, those agreements can be operated with impunity. We therefore propose a different approach to prohibit agreements that have anti-competitive effects.

By concentrating on the effects of agreements in this way, the form of the legislation will be brought into line with its purpose, which is to keep market's competitive. This should ensure that innocuous agreements will fall outside the scope of the legislation, while genuinely anti-competitive agreements—whatever form they take—are caught.

The new authority that will administer the legislation will be based on the existing Office of Fair Trading. It will also have stronger powers of investigation, including powers of entry and search. I do not expect provision of those powers of entry and search to be uncontroversial. There will be those who say that this is an intrusion into liberty, and they will have an argument to make, but we believe that it is justified. If we are effectively to tackle cartels — covert and overt — we need to have those powers.

There will be heavy fines—up to 10 per cent. of a firm's turnover—for breach of the prohibition. As a further deterrent, there will also be a right of private action for those who have suffered loss as a result of agreements. There will be powers to grant exemptions from the prohibition, against criteria which will be spelled out in the legislation.

This approach, as has been pointed out, is in line with that in the relevant European Community Law, article 85 of the treaty of Rome. We have done this because it is a tried and tested approach, and one which exists in other countries as well as in the Community.

The parallel with EC law should help United Kingdom firms by avoiding the need to deal with two sets of laws operating on quite different principles, and is fully in line with the impending completion of the single European market. The approach will reduce the regulatory burden on business by taking many insignificant agreements outside the scope of the legislation.

Much attention has been focused on the effect of the legislation on the professions. In the media, some have presented it as being no more than an attack on the privileges of the professions. That is a misleading view. I am interested to hear that my hon. Friend the Member for Darlington has received many responses from members of the public about the effect of anti-competitive practices in the professions, and I am sure that that will continue.

As a barrister married to an architect, I feel keenly that the effect on the professions is important. The hon. Member for Sedgefield, another member of the bar, has been selfless in promoting the cause. To concentrate on the effects on the professions, however, is to exaggerate the significance of the proposals for the professions and to risks obscuring their importance for all other sectors of the economy. The hon. Member for Sedgefield asked me specifically whether professions would be able to seek further blanket exemptions. The answer is no. Each profession would need to justify each individual practice and gain an exemption for that practice. We shall see an end to blanket exemptions whereby the whole of one profession can do anything it likes without having any of its practices subjected to competition scrutiny.

There are a great many exemptions from the existing Restrictive Trade Practices Act. What we have said is that none of the exemptions will be automatically carried over into the new year. It is right that, when one introduces a new law that works on very different principles from the old one, one should reconsider whether the way in which the legislation bites, or fails to bite, on particular sectors is still appropriate. The professions will be treated in exactly the same way as other sectors.

It is true that when services were first brought within the scope of the legislation in 1976, there was concern that the professions would find it difficult to carry on their traditional functions if they were not exempt, but attitudes have changed since then. It is now generally accepted that, while professionals are expected to have particularly high standards of expertise, conduct and integrity, they are in business like anybody else, and there is no inconsistency between the two propositions.

That is borne out by the many changes in professional restrictions since 1976, which also belie the notion that the Government have hitherto been afraid to tackle the professions. Ask solicitors who have lost their monopoly of conveyancing and who have ended restrictions on advertising and charges; opticians, who lost their monopoly of supplying spectacles; or all the other professions whose charging or advertising rules have been relaxed—accountants, vets and dentists.

Many of those changes came about following reports by the Monopolies and Mergers Commission or the Director General of Fair Trading. The process is continuing. Only last month, the director general referred to the MMC the advertising restrictions of consulting engineers and osteopaths. Many professionals would also tell us that the changes have not lead to a great decline in professional standards, as many predicted they would. Instead, they have resulted in lower charges and a better service for clients.

That makes it entirely natural that the professions should be subject to the same regime as other commercial activities, and means that, in practice, professions may not have all that much to fear, as some of the worst restrictions have already gone. If they can defend the remaining restrictions against the criteria in the legislation, that is all well and good. If they cannot, it is no longer clear why they should be a special case.

The changes that we propose to the system of merger control are less far reaching, and that has provoked some discussion this morning. That is because we think that the basic legislation and policy governing references to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission are about right and have worked rather well.

The main, though not exclusive, consideration in deciding whether to refer mergers to the MMC will continue to be their potential effect on competition; that is in line with our view that markets are best left to function freely. That includes the market for shares in companies, which ensures that assets are acquired by those who will use them most productively, and provides, through the threat of takeover, a spur to efficient and enterprising management.

A number of points have been raised about the issue of merger control, which I acknowledge causes interest, and sometimes anxiety, among hon. Members and people outside. The hon. Member for Sedgefield referred to leverage bids, specifically the Barker and Dobson bid for the Dee Corporation. Quite fairly, he said that, in the outcome, the bid was rejected by the shareholders, who were concerned about the performance of the company before merger and what its performance might be after merger. The best control on leverage bids is shareholders taking a sensible decision on what they think the prospects are for those assets before and after merger.

The hon. Member for Sedgefield made much of employment considerations and the regional dimension. His view—I am glad that he dealt with this matter at length, because it highlighted the fundamental difference between the Labour and Conservative parties—is that employment and the generation of economic growth in regions can be enhanced and protected only by Government. We believe that employment is best promoted by businesses being competitive and being able to provide goods or services that customers want. A relatively open system that enables mergers to take place without undue fetters, and provides the spur of threat of takeover, promotes competitive businesses. That is good for competition, employment and the regions.

Mr. Blair: To correct the Minister—he is in an absolutist mood this morning—I said not that the Government are the only guarantee of social or regional policy but that one cannot assume—as the Government do—explicitly that the interests of the private sector always coincide with the broader interests of the public.

Mr. Maude: I have never suggested that that is the case. The principal consideration that may make the public interest diverge from the private interest of those involved is where competition is reduced as a result of a merger.

Mr. Blair: I shall restate this issue, specifically to highlight the differences between the parties. Are there circumstances in which the Minister can envisage his Department intervening in a merger or acquisition in which there are serious or adverse employment consequences?

Mr. Maude: In setting out our policy, we specifically made it clear that in certain circumstances we would take that view. I reassert that our basic position is that the usual criterion for reference is the effect of a proposed merger on competition. I make no apology for that, because I believe firmly that the best interests of the regions and of employment are promoted by free competition and by competitive businesses providing what customers want.

The hon. Member for Sedgefield mentioned reversing the burden of proof. This matter amplifies the hon. Gentleman's general theme that merger activity is intrinsically malign—that one should have to prove that a merger is good rather than assume that people taking decisions about whether to sell their shareholdings are best able to decide. I reject the hon. Gentleman's argument, because I believe that it should be our job not to put unnecessary hurdles in the way of mergers in which it cannot be said that there is a specific adverse public interest. I do not apologise for our proposal to leave the burden of proof where it lies.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: Will the Minister acknowledge that shareholders are more than happy to go ahead with mergers that will give them a capital gain regardless of whether it is good for competition or whether the merger has been secured by telling people—such as those in Scotland involved in the Guinness case—a pack of lies, which they cheerfully accept that their new directors can repudiate? Is that not why we need an independent Government-backed agency to show that shareholders do not always act in the interests of the consumer or competition?

Mr. Maude: I was making the point—plainly, I was not making it clearly enough—that where the effect of a merger is to reduce competition we have no hesitation in using the Government agency, or the independent agency of the MMC, to examine the actual effects and, in proper cases, to prevent a merger taking place. It is precisely because we recognise that it may be in the private interests of shareholders to agree to a merger which reduces competition that the process of control must be retained and enhanced in the way that we suggest.

The hon. Member for Gordon quoted a passage in the Financial Times saying that we had concentrated too much on the speed of merger control procedures and not enough on the substance. Speed is of fundamental importance because the slower the procedures, the more difficult it is to use them effectively when they are needed. We believe that they are especially needed when competition is an issue.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To achieve that speeding up, will the Government consider strengthening the MMC, given the questions about its current dependence on part-time advisers?

Mr. Maude: In our Blue Paper we make a number of suggestions as to ways in which the working of the MMC can be enhanced. It does a thoroughly good job and represents a wide range of experienced people. I stress that it has full-time professional advisers. Members of the commission, however, are part-time. In our view, that is important because they should bring to the job of assessing the economic effects of monopolies and mergers their current day-to-day experience of what is happening in business and other areas. It is therefore important to retain that aspect. We also make suggestions for improvement to the processes of scrutiny of newspaper mergers. These are clearly set out in the Blue Paper but have not received any special mention today.

Having dealt briefly with mergers and restrictive trade practices, I shall deal perhaps even more briefly with the other main provision of competition law, covering monopolies and anti-competitive practices. We already have comprehensive powers to deal with behaviour by firms designed to exploit a monopoly position or to distort the market. Under the provisions of the Fair Trading Act, the Director General of Fair Trading can refer suspected monopoly situations to the MMC for investigation. If the MMC finds that there is a monopoly which has adverse effects on the public interest, undertakings can be accepted about the monopoly's future behaviour—backed up by order—making powers, including divestment of assets.

The Competition Act 1980 fills a gap in the previous legislation by enabling the Director General of Fair Trading to investigate anti-competitive practices by individual firms. If such practices are found and the parties are unwilling to give undertakings about future behaviour, the practices can be referred to the MMC for full investigation. Again, if the MMC finds the practices contrary to the public interest, there are order-making powers to deal with the situation. We do not intend to change the basic approach of the provisions, but we shall consider their operation in the light of the new restrictive trade practices legislation to see whether they can be made more effective.

My hon. Friend the Member for Darlington asked whether an order had ever been made to break up a monopoly, following an investigation. Powers are available to do that in all cases in which the MMC finds that a monopoly is contrary to the public interest, but such a step would plainly involve serious disruption and could be justified only in extreme cases for which no other effective remedy could be found. The MMC has never recommended divestment, no doubt for those reasons; and in the absence of such a recommendation from the MMC, Ministers would need to consider very carefully before deciding on such a course of action. I assure my hon. Friend that both we and the MMC are conscious that such powers do exist, and are prepared to contemplate their use in appropriate cases.

I am grateful to my hon. Friend for enabling me to issue what should be a salutary reminder to those who may be tempted to abuse monopoly power — that we have provisions to deal with such abuse which are as comprehensive and tough as we could wish, and which we are not afraid to use.

Monopolly references often attract less attention than mergers. Unlike merger references, they are not subject to any absolute time limit. A merger reference may be extended only once, by three months, whereas a monopoly reference may be extended without a statutory limit, subject to the Secretary of State's approval. In the past, that difference has been reflected in the priorities of the MMC. Partly as a result of that, and partly because of the elaboration of procedures over the years, inquiries have, in general, taken two years and sometimes more.

I am glad to say that the trend to shorter time scales for merger reports is also being reflected in monopoly references, and that in recent cases nine months has been specified. That is a considerable advance for which the MMC deserves great credit, but I hope that, in due course, it will be possible to reduce that even further, perhaps to six months in many cases. However, more complex issues are bound to remain for which a longer time scale is essential if a comprehensive report is to be produced.

An important factor in achieving such reductions will be the timely submission of evidence to the commission. Often, the MMC has to wait months for evidence from parties who naturally have no interest in a speedy conclusion to the inquiry. Plainly, parties have the right to be heard. It is unreasonable, however, that monopolists who might be exploiting their customers may, by procrastinating, be able to put off the day of reckoning, and thus extend the exploitation.

The MMC has therefore started setting much stricter timetables for the receipt of evidence and documents from the main parties, and indeed all other parties. To hold parties to this stricter timetable, it may need to consider making use of its statutory powers to require the submission of evidence and documents. Parties will have to get used to keeping to this strict timetable. That is essential if reports are to be produced in the much shorter time scales to which I have referred.

Even among the general welcome that has been given to our proposals on mergers and restrictive trade practices, one or two cynics have suggested that our commitment to competition is all rhetoric, and will not be put into practice. The hon. Member for Sedgefield, although I do not like to say unkind things about him, was among those cynics. He said that it was all fine, tough talk, but where was the tough action?

I hope that I have shown the House how our belief in competition is reflected in our deeds as well as our words. With the improvements that I have outlined, United Kingdom competition law will be brought up to date, and we are determined that it will be used to the full to bring about, and to maintain, open and competitive markets. At the same time, the Government will continue to promote competition through their other policies, in all areas of the economy.

I have no doubt that, by continuing to promote competition and competitive businesses, we shall continue to see the spectacular economic growth that has put Britain, once again, at the top of the economic growth league table.

Mr. Doug Hoyle (Warrington, North): First, I congratulate the hon. Member for Darlington (Mr. Fallon) on providing us with this opportunity to debate competition policy. He must be becoming weary of Members offering their congratulations, but, having said that, I do not believe that he was in his usual sparkling form this morning. He was rather more muted than I thought he might have been. I do not know why, and he passed over certain areas very quickly.

When we talk about competition, I never understand why we do not consider agriculture. I accept that the hon. Gentleman mentioned it, but this Government, in common with all their predecessors, have carried on featherbedding farmers. The Prime Minister, as though she were an avenging dragon, regularly states what she will do at the EEC, how she will reform its budget and how she will get rid of the wasteful subsidies on food. She then comes back pretending that the team has won although they conceded so many own goals that matters remain as they were and we carry on propping up inefficient farmers.

In some future agriculture or competition debate, we should spend some time considering food and how to benefit consumers. When we refer to the EEC as a market for free competition we should realise that agriculture must be reformed. Reform would benefit tremendously consumers in this country and consumers throughout the EEC.

The hon. Member for Darlington could have referred to petrol retailers; my hon. Friend the Member for Sedgefield (Mr. Blair) referred to that in passing. The huge oil companies are using their monopoly to put a squeeze on the small independent retailers. In the end, the small independents will be squeezed out, and competition will be removed.

I am very worried about the fact that the Government are obsessed with competition and the free market. That obsession has led to short-termism and the lack of a long-term vision. If we pursue the Government's path without considering what could happen in the manufacturing and other sectors, I believe that the Government will create a society of ice-cream vendors and hamburger sales people. I do not know whether those are monopolies, but they appear to be two growth industries.

As we have examined competition this morning, no reference was made to what has happened to the manufacturing industry. The deficit on trade in goods rose to £10 billion last year. We are always hearing about the previous Labour Government, but in 1979 there was a surplus of £2 billion and import penetration was far less than it is now.

We cannot pursue the present path if we want manufacturing industry to exist in future. I have said frequently that there is no way in which manufacturing industry will ever employ as many people in future as it has in the past. Nevertheless, we need a strong manufacturing base as a wealth creator, particularly as the buttress of North sea oil, which the Government have had since they came to office, begins to run out. We must consider that point.

Equally, we are faring badly in relation to research and development as a result of short-termism. Yet research and development are the seedcorn. In comparison with other countries such as West Germany, Japan and the United States, we fare badly in that area. The Government should consider that point as well.

We should also consider training. We are not spending enough on training, nor are we training the right kind of people. Even with such high unemployment, there are still skill shortages, particularly in information technology and in the new technologies that will be important in the future. We should be training people to prepare them adequately for a changing society. We must look forward and prepare ourselves for the future. We are falling behind other countries in that respect.

I do not believe that privatisation has been a success. No one can pretend that we receive a better service from British Telecom because it has been privatised, or that British Gas is more responsive. The consumer organisations looking after those industries should have more teeth. The Minister did not refer to that. He said only that British Gas was receiving fewer complaints than before. Perhaps people are fed up with complaining, particularly about British Telecom. The same applies to——

Mr. Maude: The hon. Gentleman has talked about competition in the gas and telecommunications industries. When the Bills privatising those industries went through Parliament, did he press for them to be broken up into smaller units?

Mr. Hoyle: I pressed for them to be kept in public ownership—[HON. MEMBERS: "Monopolies!"] They were, but they were more responsive in the public sector. Now that they are private monopolies, those who look after consumer interests should have more teeth — more powers.

The hon. Member for Darlington talked about energy and the privatisation of electricity. I hope he will see to it that the consumers' interest is better represented in that area than it is in relation to gas now. The Government have failed on that point. They pay lip service to consumers, but rely, in this as in so many other things, on the workings of the free market — and that is the problem.

Mergers and takeovers have been the growth industry of recent years. The Government have been extremely complacent about the boom in takeovers, as though, if the free market is allowed to work, benefits will flow to consumers, people employed in industries and the nation. All that is asked of the economy is competition.

There may be a difference of opinion between the Minister and Sir Gordon Borrie, the Director General of Fair Trading, who said:

"Although I hold strongly to the view that competition should be the main consideration in merger policy and that references to the MMC should therefore usually be in cases where competition would significantly be damaged . . . I certainly do not take the view that where competition is not affected everything can be left to 'market forces'. I do not have the complete faith in the 'invisible hand' of Adam Smith as the regulator of our economic and social affairs. I often ask who it is who drives these market forces and the answer—shareholders, institutional or otherwise, and a myriad of financial advisers and experts—does not encourage me to believe that their decisions whether to buy or sell particular shares at a particular price will necessarily bring about the most efficient deployment and development of the assets which those shares represent. If this is heresy to those who believe in efficient financial markets, then I stand a heretic —or at least a sceptic."

The Director General is right. One cannot leave it to the free market economy always to bring about the desired results.

The hon. Member for Gordon (Mr. Bruce) referred to Pilkington. It is a regional company, based in the north-west, and highly successful. It is one of our few world leaders, being the world leader in flat glass. It achieved that position because it was prepared to invest money in the company rather than paying it out to shareholders. It invested in new machinery and the modernisation of its plant. Every year, it puts a large proportion of profits back into research and development. Then it found itself faced with a takeover bid from BTR Industries, which is an asset-stripper. One of the first things that BTR would have done, was cut research and development.

The Government were quite prepared to leave it to the free market. The takeover was avoided only because of a concerted campaign in the north-west, particularly by the local council and by the employees of the company. At that stage BTR withdrew.

Mr. John Marshall: Does the hon. Gentleman not agree that BTR gave way because Pilkington's institutional shareholders made it clear that they would not accept the bid?

Mr. Hoyle: Pilkington's shareholders were roused by the outcry about what would happen if that successful company was taken over. They came to life only at the last minute. The company could easily have been taken over, and we would have seen the break-up of one of our few world leaders.

I shall now turn to a matter, which may give the hon. Member for Hendon, South (Mr. Marshall) another chance to speak about the institutional shareholders. A more recent takover involved Birmid Qualcast. That involved companies in the north-west and a large company in Warrington. The hon. Member for Warrington, South (Mr. Butler) is in the Chamber and it is in his constituency that the New World company is situated. By the narrowest of margins, Birmid Qualcast avoided being taken over by a large cement company that may or may not have had the expertise to run it.

Birmid Qualcast did what the Government had urged companies to do—it diversified from foundries and built up a high reputation for consumer durables. It took on foreign competition and defeated it. New World gas cookers are made in Warrington and employ some of my constituents and some of the constituents of the hon. Member for Warrington, South. It reorganised and is now a leader in its field. That company could have been taken over. Would that have been of benefit to the nation?

In looking at such matters, we must consider not only free competition but the national interest. The hon. Member for Gordon spoke about the takeover of Guinness by Distillers. All the promises that were given then were broken. Promises were given that the head office of the company would be in Scotland and that someone from Scotland would be the chairman of the board. Those promises were broken and we had the unsavoury spectacle of what happened in relation to that takeover bid and of people appearing in court. They made very easy pickings from the takeover. There is something wrong in allowing mergers that are so structured to go forward.

My hon. Friend the Member for Sedgefield was quite right when he said that in looking at mergers we ought to take into account the consequences for employment. We should take note of the views of those who work in the companies. If we can take into account the views of shareholders, large institutions and pension funds, why should we not take account of the views of those who produce the wealth of the company? Many employees give a lifetime to a company and can be faced with a takeover that can suddenly lead to them being thrown out of work, particularly if an asset stripper moves in. All the work of those people comes to naught and they and their families are put out of work.

There ought to be a provision that, in takeover bids, the views of the employees should be heard, and it should be explained to them what their future will be if the takeover goes ahead. We cannot rely only on competition to represent the interests of the consumer or the employee. As my hon. Friend the Member for Ashfield (Mr. Haynes) said when discussing the mining industry, many consequences flow from paying attention only to competition. There are consequences for the regions, and things cannot be left to market forces.

It is thought that, if we allow free competition, companies will come to the regions, but they will not. With the opening of the Channel tunnel more and more companies will be dragged further south. That will lead to impoverishment of the regions. I know that there is a debate to follow this one and I do not want to take up too much time debating the north-west. I found it difficult to decide in which debate to participate. I want the views of the north-west to be heard shortly.

We are not simply concerned with a free market, but with the quality of life of our people. It is a matter of the life and vitality of the regions and of bringing hope and vision. It is about preparing for the future. We are relying on short-termism and allowing mergers to proceed. Unlike other countries, we are neglecting the industries of the future. We are not spending enough money on research and development in the public and private sectors. When we remove the amount that we spend on defence from the total amount that we spend on research and development, we compare badly with many other countries.

We are cutting education and training. We are not preparing for the future by training the highly qualified and professional force that we need if we are to compete in the world markets and in Europe. We cannot compete if we look to the short term rather than the long term. The Government are concerned with the short term, and prosperity. They are not looking far enough ahead to have a vision of what tomorrow will be like. North sea oil is running out and I fear that the consequences of the Government's short-termism and their reliance on the free market will cost the British people dear in the future.

Mr John Marshall (Hendon, South): I should like first to congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Darlington (Mr. Fallon) on his success in the ballot and on choosing this subject. Several hon. Members wish to speak in this and the following debate, so I shall be brief.

I listened with interest when the hon. Member for Warrington, North (Mr. Hoyle) said that the Government were obsessed with short-term economic thinking, competition and the free market. Those factors have led to the longest period of sustained economic growth since the war, and to a faster growth in employment in the United Kingdom than in any other European Community country since 1983.

Mr. Hoyle: Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Marshall: No, I shall not give way, as the hon. Gentleman spoke at some length. He emphasised the need to go on to the debate about the north-west. I shall ration myself to a 10-minute speech and hope that other hon. Members will do so too.

The hon. Gentleman and other hon. Members referred to the impact of privatisation on competition. When the hon. Gentleman suggested that he should prefer British Telecom to be in the public sector, he is saying that a public monopoly would be better than competition between two private suppliers of telephone services. I do not believe him, and the British people will not believe him either.

The competition from Mercury will do a great deal to improve the standards set out by British Telecom. British Telecom, British Gas and, in future, the electricity industry will be subject to much more rigorous pricing rules than apply to any nationalised industry. They are subject to a statutory rule that the rate of increase of their prices must be less than the rate of inflation. When have any Government imposed a similar obligation on a nationalised industry? The answer is never.

I accept that the transfer from the public to the private sector does not change overnight the ethos of these companies. Those who have been cocooned for generations in the subsidies and the protectionism of the public sector take time to react to the more competitive environment that they find in the private sector. But they will react, and the service to the consumer will be very much better.

I congratulate the Government on the success of their competition policy. My hon. Friend the Minister did not, however, refer to the Building Societies Act 1986, which has led to greater competition between banks and building societies. The banks now open on Saturdays, a practice that they had discontinued for many years. In my constituency one can even find a bank open on Sunday.

When people speak about big bang, they talk as though it were a bonanza for the stock exchange. However, big bang created a stock exchange that is internationally competitive. My hon. Friend the Member for Harrow, East (Mr. Dykes) and I have an interest to declare. We are members of the international stock exchange. The stock exchange is now a much more efficient collector of taxes for the Government. It operates a service that is cheap to the consumer. No international restraint is placed upon it. It is much easier for firms to set up in London than it is in Japan and elsewhere. The London stock exchange welcomes international investment. Its service to the consumer is first-rate. The amount of money going to the Government in stamp duty on many institutional contracts is twice the amount of commission that goes to the stockbrokers.

As for the Government's attitude to monopolies and mergers and restrictive practices, historically we have always been very successful in controlling restrictive practices, but we have been slightly less successful in dealing with monopolies and mergers. Indeed, if my right hon. Friend the Member for Old Bexley and Sidcup (Mr. Heath) were here, we could congratulate him on his 1964 Act. It was one of the most successful measures that has ever been introduced for controlling restrictive practices. I am proud that it was a Conservative Government who legislated on restrictive practices. It was also a Conservative Government who legislated on restrictive trade practices under Lord Thorneycroft in the 1950s.

The work of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission has not been completely successful. On a number of occasions, the results of the commission's inquiries have been anything but perfect. On one occasion the commission inquired into a highly geared bid—that by Elders for Allied Lyons. Its advice to the Government was that the bid was all right because the banks were willing to provide the money: that if the banks were willing to accept the high level of gearing, it was acceptable to the commission.

Those who remember the events of 1973, 1974 and 1975 will not accept the view that, because the banks are willing to do something, it ought to be acceptable to the country at large. All too often, banks are carried away by their enthusiasm for a project and lend more money than is warranted. My concern about highly geared bids is that companies will be set up and borrow so much that they then refuse to invest as they should in capital expenditure and product innovation.

The Government say in their document that the chief reason for referring mergers to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission is competition. I accept that view, but we must look beyond such bids to the wider public interest and to what some people call Hansonisation, under which companies are taken over, a short-term approach then being adopted by the predator. If companies are taken over in that way, their future development programmes are forgotten.

Since 1979, the economy has been very successful. There is no doubt that the major reason for that is the willingness of the Government to take on the vested interests of privilege throughout the economy.

I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Darlington on selecting the subject for debate, and the Government on the steps that they have already taken. I wish them well for the steps that they will continue to take. In tackling the privileges of the professions and others, they are fighting for the whole nation, and will ensure the future prosperity of all the people. They will also ensure that the consumer gets a fair deal from the economy at large.

Mr. James Arbuthnot (Wanstead and Woodford): I should like to consider two aspects of competition policy. The first arises out of my experience as a local councillor, and the second out of my experience as a barrister practising at the Chancery Bar.

Before I came to the House, I was a councillor in the royal borough of Kensington and Chelsea. I was chairman of the works committee, which is in charge of rubbish collection. It is not a romantic job, but someone has to do it, and for some reason it had to be me. I should like to tell the House the story of the rubbish collections in Kensington and Chelsea.

For many years, the borough was divided into two parts—what could loosely be described as old Chelsea, and the rest Kensington. The dustmen covering the two areas belonged to two different unions, and had two completely different sets of working practices. In old Chelsea—if I may put it bluntly—they were terrible. In Kensington, they were rather better.

Then the Government came to power. Managers were encouraged to manage. People were encouraged to think, for the first time for decades, of working in a spirit of enterprise and competition.

In old Chelsea, we were receiving complaints about the dustmen. They were not just from the public, although we were getting 40 of those a week; we were also receiving complaints from the dustmen's wives. They said that their husbands were getting home from work too early. They were not getting home at about 4 pm, when most dustmen tend to get home; or at 2 pm; or at midday. They were getting home before their children went out to school in the mornings. Most of them had second jobs. Many had third jobs, and one was on the dole as well.

We did a study, and were advised that the rubbish being collected with 12 dustcarts in old Chelsea could be collected with six. We told the old Chelsea dustmen that that was going to happen. They were not happy. They said that, if we insisted, they would go on strike. We did, and they did. We made the lot redundant, and brought in Grand Metropolitan. What had been collected with 12 dustcarts was collected by Grand Metropolitan, not with 12, or with six, but with three, for half the price. The complaints were down from 40 a week to four a week.

That came about only because of the new wind of competition and enterprise introduced by the present Government, which for the first time encouraged local authorities to go out to private tender. But that is only half the story. Having achieved that success with old Chelsea, we then turned our eyes towards Kensington.

I remind the House that the Kensington dustmen were the good guys, without the restrictive practices of old Chelsea. Before we had time to go out to tender, the Kensington dustmen came to us. They said, "We will do the job that we were doing before, but we will do it better. It will cost you £1 million a year less, you will have fewer dustmen, and you will pay them a little more." We accepted the offer. The savings of £1 million brought in a further £3 million of Government block grant, a total of £4 million, which is what the entire dustbin collection service was costing us in the first place. I like to think of Kensington and Chelsea having an entirely free refuse collecting service.

Now, a direct labour force does the work in the north of the borough of Kensington and Chelsea, while a contractor does it in the south. Whenever the contractor says, "We want to increase the price", the council can say, "But the direct labour force is longing to take it over." As a result, the contractor has been known to put the price not up, but down. Whenever the direct labour force says that it wants to increase its pay or bring in some new demarcation, it is possible to say that the contractors are longing to take over the job. That is pure competition. We were accused of playing one side off against the other and, with no shame at all, we admitted that we were entirely guilty, and what benefits that has brought to the ratepayers, dustmen and residents of Kensington and Chelsea.

The second area to which I wish to refer relates to my experience as a barrister. I welcome the Green paper on restrictive trade practices. As a practising barrister, for me to argue that the Bar should be exempt from the new wind of competition would be special pleading. In any event, I have no wish to do so because if the Bar cannot survive competition, it does not deserve protection.

There are certainly restrictive practices indulged in by the Bar which certainly ought to go. For example, it is unjustifiable to insist that only those with university degrees should be allowed to go to the Bar. Some of the best barristers in the country have no degree and I suggest that that ought to be allowed to continue. Another restrictive practice is the imposition by the powers that be of a certain method of charging fees.

Fees, under the present regime, have to be the same whether the barrister wins or loses the case. The contingency fee basis, whereby a barrister bases all or part of his fee on the percentage of the amount, if any, that is won in litigation is illegal. It is all right in America, but it is illegal here. The reason is said to be that a barrister would have too close a personal interest in the outcome of a case and that, as a result, he might mislead the court for motives of personal gain. In passing, I should say that it does not seem to have that effect in the United States. It seems rather odd that our barristers might be considered more likely to mislead the court than American barristers.

That matter should be thrown open to the cleansing winds of competition and freedom. My reason for saying that is that the legal aid scheme is not now working very well. Many people, possibly most people, come just above the limit for legal aid. The effect of that is that British justice is denied to them. The only people who can at present make use of the legal system in this country are the very rich or the very poor and that must be wrong.

The answer cannot be to pour taxpayers' money into the legal aid fund, because the Government have not achieved the thriving economy that we now enjoy by giving in to every demand for taxpayers' money as it arises. The answer must be to release the money that is already available, namely the funds in dispute in the case itself. The litigant, who is now prevented by cost from going to law, is also prohibited from going to a barrister and saying, "If we lose you get nothing but if we win you get a third, a quarter or whatever of the amount we win." Why is he prohibited? With the contingency fee basis both he and the barrister are potentially better off and the case is properly tested in court. However, without it they both lose and perhaps the potential defendant has been unjustly enriched.

As my hon. Friend the Member for Darlington (Mr. Fallon) said, there is a balance to be struck. For example, there is an area of concern where a relatively uneducated person goes to a lawyer and is advised, perhaps wrongly, by that lawyer that his chances of success are low so that the lawyer could take on the case only for a high percentage of the money at stake. There needs to be protection against that potential abuse. However, to say that that is a reason for making the contingency fee basis illegal is to throw out the baby with the bath water.

I welcome the Green Paper on restrictive trade practices, in particular in so far as it applies to my profession. Are we barristers so timorous that we are unable to compete with any competition that might arise? I hardly think so. We are well able to look after ourselves, and those that are not should leave the Bar. The only protections that should remain are those that protect not the profession but the public. Some of the present practices are not in the public interest.

1.30 pm

Mr. Hugh Dykes (Harrow, East): I am grateful for the remarks of my hon. Friend the Member for Wanstead and Woodford (Mr. Arbuthnot) and particularly his last point, which shows, above all, the great seriousness of the Government in inculcating a new policy of competition and how bad it would have looked had competition applied to industry but not to the professions. The Government are to be congratulated on that.

I apologise to Hansard for speaking so fast, but I have to get in five quick points. I have to fulfil a moral obligation to you, Madam Deputy Speaker, by being very brief to allow other hon. Members to speak. I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Darlington (Mr. Fallon) on launching this debate. We are campaigners in the cause of Europe Together. He rightly referred to the exigencies of European competition, and I utterly agree with him. I hope that the Government will allow their competition policy to fuse with and merge into a Europewide competition policy in future, particularly when the internal market begins, with, to some extent the Government acting as an agent, as they do for imports policy, with the Commission taking the lead on foreign trade.

None the less, the Government have put their own inputs into this matter because they have honed up their own competition policy in the first place. I know that my hon. Friend the Minister has already spoken, but I hope that, in future, Government spokesmen will take on board the vital need to get a national and Europewide trade marks policy and origin marks policy right. I regard any compulsion for trademarks to be used as a restraint on trade as does the European court. Therefore, I hope that the Government will accept the idea of an EECwide trade mark and origin mark, and not necessarily for that to be compulsory, although that would not be reprehensible in the same way. National trade marks would limit trade if they were compulsory; therefore, they should be voluntary but not deprive the consumer of the chance of knowing the origin of a product or where it has been produced. They should have that legal right.

[Mr. Hugh Dykes]

I look forward to the internal market for all sorts of reasons which I do not have time to describe, but one of the key reasons is the abolition of the scandal of duty-free trade. This is one great scandal where, to use the economists' jargon, "supernormal profits" are made on ferry boats and at airports. I believe that duty-free should be completely abolished in 1992 in favour of a genuine Europe-wide market. The Government must be aware of the enormous campaign whereby all the vested interests will argue that duty-free trade should be retained for alcoholic drinks, tobacco and so on. I hope that the Government and other member states will be robust in resisting those blandishments.

Like other hon. Members, I feel that there has to be a balance, and I warmly congratulate the Government on emphasising the primacy of competition policy which will open up all sorts of fields to new competition. My hon. Friend the Member for Darlington mentioned France. I have to reply with that wise utterance by Voltaire in "Candide":

"Superstition sets the world in flames; philosophy quenches them."

Although the main motive of privatisation has been to create a new private army of shareholders, which I am, of course, very enthusiastic about, the other reasons, such as increasing competition and consumer service, are emphasised. However, in reality, they are less likely to be apparent; therefore the Government have to be vigilant. As I said two weeks ago, I would have hesitated before privatising the electricity industry in the form that has been announced. Although in France there is enthusiasm for privatisation, the current Government in Paris knows when to stop and when to exercise restraint.

My hon. Friend the Member for Hendon, South (Mr. Marshall) mentioned the stock exchange. I agree with him although there are aspects of the big bang which were adverse to the customer, which I would describe if I had time. Another interest of mine is as a non-executive director within Dixon's Group plc. Although I did not hear his remarks, I believe that my hon. Friend said something about competition between its segments. There is ferocious competition between Curry's and Dixon's, as there is between other retailers.

Those connected with retailing in Britain can be justly proud of the efficiency of British retailers, which has been an object lesson to many manufacturers. With both domestic products and imports the increased power of retailers to purchase on a larger scale has enabled the consumer to be well served in terms of low prices and quality, and I hope that that will continue.

I warmly support the direction of Government policy and look forward to the continuation of their review of competition policy. None the less, I hope that the Government will be aware of other considerations. Sometimes, even a quasi-monopoly can help the customer, but it depends on each case. If only time allowed, I could go into the many examples. We have seen that the Government have a comprehensive policy. Labour has none, as was shown by the long-winded clichés of the hon. Member for Warrington, North (Mr. Hoyle).

Mr. Rogert G. Hughes (Harrow, West): I am grateful to my neighbour and hon. Friend the Member for Harrow, East (Mr. Dykes) for speaking so quickly and briefly to allow the second debate to start.

In congratulating my hon. Friend the Member for Darlington (Mr. Fallon) on introducing the debate, I well remember, during what might be called his dress rehearsal for taking his seat as hon. Member for Darlington, the stark comparison between him and the alliance candidate. By showing the clarity of his political vision, my hon. Friend did a great service to his party and to the nation. Once again, after the formation of the new party, the Social and Liberal Democrats, my hon. Friend has done that service. I recommend that people read my hon. Friend's comments and compare them with the balanced speech made by the hon. Member for Gordon (Mr. Bruce). I say "balanced" because the hon. Gentleman seems to take both sides of the argument and to reach no particular conclusion on policies. There was no policy content in his speech.

I shall restrict my comments to one matter on which the debate has hardly touched — the health services. We must not be frightened of talking about competition in the health services. As a number of hon. Members have graphically illustrated, competition has worked to the advantage of the consumer in many directions. A monopoly results in queues, and that is a familiar story for the National Health Service under any Government. A monopoly results in restriction of choice, as has happened in the NHS. We are always told that there must be limits on competition and that sometimes a monopoly works to our advantage. Those who are for a monopoly must prove why it works to the nation's advantage The health services are too important not to allow the market to operate, and the provision of spectacles provides proof.

Before I became an hon. Member, and before there was deregulation in the provision of spectacles, the Opposition and the industry made a great deal of fuss. There were scare stories about people not being able to afford glasses and being charged a fortune for eye tests. Those arguments are repeated now that there will be, in theory, a charge for eye tests. I believe that the competition which already exists will lead to the major manufacturers and those who are slugging it out in the marketplace giving free eye tests and that people will be more likely to go to a professional to find out whether there is anything wrong with their eyes or whether they have any of the other diseases that can be discovered following an ophthalmic test.

Last November's White Paper on primary health care promised an increase in the proportion of the doctors' remuneration represented by capitation fees, promised to give consumers more information about doctors and services so that they could make an informed choice, and said that restraints on advertising might be removed. I do not want to hear that advertising restraints may be removed. I want to hear that they will be removed.

There are huge discrepancies between the quality of primary health care in different parts of my constituency. Some surgeries and group practices provide many services such as minor operations and what some of them call MOT tests — a form of preventive medicine. Those surgeries employ nurses, and send people out on call at any time of night without employing locums. They provide a variety of services that should attract anyone to register with their doctors. In other parts of my constituency, there are general practitioners who simply do not come up to standard. Their record on visiting patients in an emergency is not good.

In reality people have no choice. They cannot choose between a general practitioner providing the range of services that I described and a general practitioner whose services are restricted, because the family practitioner committee restricts the number of people who can set themselves up as GPs. Just the other night, the Harold Macmillan health centre in West Harrow was opened. I am proud to have in my constituency a health centre named after that distinguished former Prime Minister.

That health centre is run by a group of doctors who provide excellent services. They provide a surgery which is a pleasure to visit, with new magazines—that makes a change from most doctors' surgeries—brightly lit rooms and good facilities. The doctors are also providing their patients with a prospectus to ensure that they know what the surgery can provide.

I want those benefits to spread; I want to see them everywhere. I firmly believe that if we have competition between general practitioners—if they tell their patients what they can provide—the market will come up with more general practitioners and good quality practices. In health, as in so many other activities, competition can provide a better service for the people of this country.

1.41 pm

Mr. Fallon: I thank my hon. Friends who have participated in the debate, as well as Opposition Members, not forgetting the hon. Member for Ashfield, (Mr. Haynes). We have had a wide-ranging debate and between us I think that we have covered all aspects of competition policy. To safeguard the time remaining to my hon. Friend the Member for Cheadle (Mr. Day), I shall not reply to the individual points made—nor will undertake to write to my hon. Friends. But all of us interested in competition policy will study carefully what has been said in this important and interesting debate.

Question put and agreed to.

Resolved,

That this House recognises the part which competition policy plays in fostering choice, reducing prices and stimulating wealth creation.

North-West

1.42 pm

Mr. Stephen Day (Cheadle): I beg to move,

That this House welcomes the rapid improvement and growth of the economy in the North West and recognises the attractions of the area to potential private investment, believing that those who seek to project an image of the region as being depressed and deprived not only misrepresent the truth, but do great harm to the North West's attempts to attract such new investment.

I, too, shall be brief because I know that other hon. Members wish to take part in the debate. Having said that, I felt it right to bring to the attention of the House the improvements in the economy of the north-west and the good things that are happening in that part of the country. It is right to give hon. Members the opportunity to express their views on this important area of our country and our economy.

I want to make it clear at the outset that parts of the north-west region still suffer the effects of what was the recession. I have no doubt that unemployment and employment figures vary across the region, and that in parts of our cities and towns decay is still real and evident. However, what I know equally to be the truth about the north-west is that the image of decay and decline purveyed with such relish by many is not the real image of the north-west in the late 1980s.

Let us turn our attention to industry. Is it not time that hon. Members — particularly those who represent the area — and the media, stopped speaking and writing about and lovingly photographing the shells of the north-west's industrial past? Is it not time that we began to speak of the new, modernised, streamlined, efficient and entrepreneurial north-west? The evidence that I shall present to the House will show not that the phoenix is simply rising from the ashes of the north-west but that it has risen.

It is no accident that the region has been marked out as the growth area of the country over the next few years. No greater example of the new spirit of the north-west can be found than that of Trafford Park. Hon. Members will forgive me if I remind them that Trafford Park was one of five new urban development corporations that were announced in 1986. I do not propose to list the names of companies—many of which are international companies —that have moved into Trafford Park, but I should tell hon. Members that the Trafford Park area comprises 3,000 acres, that 600 companies are operating there employing over 24,000 people and that 200 companies have moved in over the past few years.

That is evidence of companies moving to the north-west from elsewhere. There is no greater proof of confidence in the north-west than when people from outside are willing to put their money on the line in the area.

That measure of confidence was greatly reflected by a recent announcement of a proposed new Trident business park at Manchester airport. Construction will begin on 1 April 1988. There will be 80,000 sq ft of letting space, and private money will be involved. It is the biggest speculative investment in the north-west for years, and it will cost about £10 million. It is interesting that a southern-based property company has come up to the north-west and said, "Yes, this is where the future is; that is where it is worth putting our money and this is where the economy is expanding."

[Mr. Stephen Day]

Salford Quays is another marvellous example of private investment. An investment of £150 million by private enterprise has transformed the area, which previously was derelict and commercially had nothing going for it, into a major development. Some £25 million of public money has been spent on improving the docks area, canals, roads and the local environment, and a major hotel has been attracted to the region.

The Government spent £6 million to reclaim derelict land at Wavertree technology park. In total, Wavertree technology park comprises 60 acres. By the end of this month, 30 companies will have moved on to the park, and 800 jobs have been created there.

Those are examples of private investment being encouraged by prudently spent public money. They have attracted vastly greater percentages of private rather than public investment.

The idea is often put about — with regard to the north as well as the north-west — that existing industry has disappeared, fled the region or been destroyed. That is a nonsensical idea. The list of modern, high-tech companies, many of which are household names, that have remained successfully in the north-west through the recession is too long to recite in full.

Even more significant are the new companies, many of which I know personally, that have set up in the region within the past five years. They are trading and expanding successfully in the area. I shall give one or two examples. At the smaller end of the spectrum is a company called JEL, which has recently been associated with a larger conglomerate. However, 10 years ago that company did not exist. It now employs 150 people and has a projected expansion of 30 per cent. this year. Its turnover in 1987 was £6 million, but this year it is projected that it will be £9 million and that by 1991 it will be £20 million. It has just won a major contract for a shopping mall in Scotland. Another company of which I am aware in the north-west has recently won a contract that is worth £13 million from eastern Europe, which is welcome.

With regard to major employers that have been in the region a long time and are doing well, there is the example of Ferranti Ltd. Its turnover in 1987 was £629 million, and in the north-west the company employs about 6,300 people. More than 25 per cent. of the company's employees are based in the north-west and 30 per cent. of its business is in exports.

The north-west is doing a great deal for this country's export drive. British Aerospace employs 6,500 people in the north-west with a turnover in that region alone of £145,400,000, and is a major contributor to the economy not just of the north-west but of the whole country.

What is the north-west doing for exports and what is the evidence that industry is alive and well there? I could give many examples, but I will give just one which shines out brightly. The North West Pharmaceutical Group, a conglomerate of nine companies, in the past 12 months has invested capital expenditure of £64 million in its operation. It has put £57 million into the local economy through the services and materials that it purchases. United Kingdom sales are £1,290 billion and exports £2,499 billion. That is a tremendous contribution from a conglomerate based throughout the north-west.

There is no better barometer of the north-west economy and no greater testimony to its future than the commercial success of Manchester airport, which is now the largest airport outside London and the third largest in the United Kingdom. Quite apart from passenger transport, the most important aspect of its trading is its record in commercial traffic. In 1975, 37,360 tonnes of commercial traffic was shipped through Manchester. By 1980, reflecting the recession that had begun some years earlier, the total was down to 27,659 tonnes. By 1986, it was 42,449 tonnes—way above pre-recession levels. There has been a 32 per cent. increase in freight and mail services out of Manchester, and the airport must be confident indeed of the future of the north-west as it believes that the trend will continue.

Mr. Tony Lloyd (Stretford): Given the importance of the airport for this region, will the hon. Gentleman impress on the Minister the stupidity of preventing American carriers from using Manchester airport rather than opening it up to the advantages already enjoyed by the south-east?

Mr. Day: The hon. Gentleman must not pre-empt me. I shall be coming to that in a moment.

The airport, on its own initiative, is developing a brand new cargo centre which will be the first of its kind in this country. It will bring together in one place the airlines, the bonding warehouses, Customs and Excise, freight agents, forwarders, brokers, transporters and everyone else. It is a unique development and a testimony to the confidence of Manchester airport in the economy of the north-west.

If Manchester airport needs anything, it needs recognition of its full international status, especially from the Civil Aviation Authority. We need more scheduled flights and fewer night charters. The demand and the potential are there, but we need less bias towards Heathrow and Gatwick by the Civil Aviation Authority.

The trend of unemployment in the north-west is significantly down. Since March 1986, there has been a fall of 74,121 in the number of unemployed.

If we consider the number of new jobs that are being created, the three areas that are doing exceedingly well are the west midlands, Wales and the north-west. February's figures show that there has been a fall in unemployment throughout the country, but apart from the south-east no area has shown such a significant fall in unemployment as the north-west. Those figures relate not to a region in decay, but to a region in a transitional period of vast expansion.

Mr. Tony Lloyd rose——

Mr. Day: I hope that the hon. Gentleman will forgive me if I carry on. I am sure that he will have an opportunity to speak.

We should also note the extent of the Government's financial commitment to the north-west. Labour Members often accuse the Government of failing to invest in the infrastructure. The north-west's infrastructure has enjoyed massive investment. We have one of the most superb road networks in the country, which is the envy of other regions. Significant improvements are being made to the M6 and M62 in the north-west, representing a Government investment of £34 million. The completion of the outer ring road to the east of Manchester at a cost of £160 million was recently announced. Improvements have been made to local access to the national road network. The Manchester-Salford inner ring road is to go ahead and the Government have given a grant of 50 per cent. towards its completion. British Rail is spending £12·5 million on the Windsor link to connect north and south Manchester. All those schemes demonstrate that not only the Government, but private industry and British Rail are investing money in a region that they believe is expanding and where they believe that money will be wisely spent. Such investment demonstrates the turnround in the north-west's fortunes and there is no greater evidence to support it.

The north-west, with its airport, rail links, motorways and the facilities such as the fast-developing business parks, has a superb infrastructure. Manchester is the second financial centre in the land — the Manchester stock exchange is second only to London. Some 40 commercial and industrial banks are operating out of Manchester.

It is no accident that such expansion is taking place. Private money is being invested in the area because the success of the north-west is recognised. It is time for those of us who represent the north-west to proclaim that new expansion. Those who constantly point to the empty mills of yesteryear do no service to those who once worked in them. No amount of wringing of hands or crocodile tears will bring those mills back into life.

The only hope for those still unemployed and for those areas not yet sharing in the prosperity of the majority is for the success of the north-west to be encouraged and for enterprise, private investment to be encouraged. That is how the prosperity of the many will become the prosperity of all.

The constant representation of a recession-bound, socially-deprived north-west creates the image of a derelict, defeated, demoralised area — nothing could be further from the truth. I appeal to all hon. Members who represent the north-west, whatever their politics, to join together to encourage business to invest in the north-west. We should tell businesses that we have the facilities, that they should join those who are already making a success in the region and that we shall welcome them with open arms.

I do not believe for one minute that the north-south divide, as presented, exists. There is supposed to be a mythical line that goes from the Wash to the Severn. Below that line there is prosperity, full employment and happiness. Above it there is unemployment, despair and poverty. It does not work like that.

I will not be content until we assess the situation in a proper perspective. Those divisions that exist occur throughout the country. However, the majority are prosperous and commercially successful. We can only achieve such a change in recognition if we are prepared to stand up and trumpet the achievements of the north-west. That is the way to make the north-west the power-house and generator of the British economy once again. That is what it was and what it is becoming once more. I will do all that I can to present the achievements of the north-west in the House and elsewhere. I hope that other hon. Members from the north-west will join me in that.

Several Hon. Members rose——

Madam Deputy Speaker (Miss Betty Boothroyd): Order. I appeal for short speeches so that all hon. Members who want to speak may do so before the debate ends.

1.59 pm

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The only point of agreement between the hon. Member for Cheadle (Mr. Day) and myself is that he has done a service to the north-west by choosing this subject for debate, even if the motion that he has tacked on to the debate is completely unrealistic and unrepresentative of the truth. I am afraid that the hon. Gentleman is a victim of the hype that the Government are presenting to the country. Obviously Opposition Members must concede that the Conservative party is very strong in the relatively prosperous south-east and is desperate to build up the case that some economic transformation is taking place elsewhere in the country. However, the reality is entirely different.

Over the eight or nine years that the Government have been in power, the north-west has lost more than 350,000 manufacturing jobs. That represents nearly one third of the manufacturing work force. Therefore, the Government's record is one of almost systematic atrocity against my region. That makes me extremely bitter, because I come from the region and I care very deeply for it. The way in which Government policies have been inflicted on manufacturing industry and their impact on my constituents can only be described as criminal insanity. The hon. Member for Cheadle should consider the 350,000 jobs that have been lost in the region.

I appreciate that the Government are trying to play a clever trick. They now contend that unemployment is a thing of the past. They seem to admit that they got things wrong in their first two terms in office, but now everything has been transformed. The hon. Member for Cheadle quoted the mythical unemployment statistics and the Government's claim that unemployment is coming down in the north-west.

The hon. Member for Cheadle is wrong. The Government's figures, published in the Official Report, show that last year the level of employment in the north-west declined by 3,000. I hope that the hon. Member for Cheadle will accept that that is not a recipe for reducing unemployment. The Government have fiddled the unemployment figures. They have driven people off the register — [Interruption.] If the Minister wants to intervene, will he tell me why last year in the north-west we lost 3,000 jobs, not just in manufacturing, but in all industries?

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Corporate Affairs (Mr. Francis Maude): Unemployment has been falling now in every part of the country for a year and a half. That fall is now sharper in the regions than in the supposedly prosperous south-east.

Mr. Lloyd: I am extremely grateful for that intervention, as the Minister has revealed the real problem. The Government either simply do not understand their own figures or have become the victims of their own propaganda.

The Government's official figures of the level of employment in my region show that there was a decline of 3,000 last year. That does not lead to a decrease in unemployment. It may lead to a decrease in the figures that the Government portray, and it may do many other things, but there has been no reduction in the level of unemployment.

The Minister obviously does not realise that the people in my region understand the reality of unemployment.

[Mr. Lloyd]

They also understand what it is like, even when they are in employment, to live on levels of pay that in many cases are below the Council of Europe's decency threshold.

In the north-west, one third of the work force are paid less than the Council of Europe's decency threshold. That is a tremendous indictment of the Government and society. It is also an indictment of the wage levels in the south-east, the richest part of the country. I say that with no sense of hostility towards the south-east. The sad truth is that the north-west is increasingly lagging behind. The south-east is disappearing out of sight with respect to wage levels.

That is profoundly disturbing to those of us who have the long-term interests of the north-west at heart. If that widening of the gap continues, the region will become part of a kind of economic colonialism in which we simply exist on the economic margins of the dominant region.

Perhaps the most worrying trends are shown, not in the Government's fiddled figures, but in reports by independent outside experts. A recent study by the department of land economy at Cambridge university suggested that, over the next 10 years, during which about 900,000 jobs will be created, all of them in the service sector, about half the new jobs will go to the south-east. The north-west does not stand a chance of getting an even share of that increase.

The figures for investment in manufacturing industry are also frightening. Nationally, levels of investment are still below those of 1979, which is an indictment of the Government's crass incompetence when responding to the needs of manufacturing industry. In the long term, it is worrying that new investment does not go into the regions outside the south-east. The 30 per cent. of businesses registered in the south-east manage to capture about 60 per cent. of all the funds available for venture capital for the regions. That shows a massive mis-cueing of venture capital investment.

Contrary to what the hon. Member for Cheadle said, investment for the future is taking place not in the north-west but in the south-east. In 1986, it was revealed that London and the south-east held more than two thirds of all invested pension funds, and the north-west as little as 7 per cent. The hon. Member for Cheadle should be worried that major capital investment in the country is going not to the north-west but to the south-east.

The figures for research and development are the most frightening of all. The north-west's share of DTI support for research and development was as low as 11 per cent. in the 18 months to September 1987, whereas the south-east received half of such support.

Mr. Day: But good things are going on in the north-west. Why do Opposition Members give the impression that they have nothing to describe about the north-west except things that are not as good there as elsewhere? There may be some, but that does not mean that the north-west does not have good things with which to attract people and thus reverse the position.

Mr. Lloyd: That is a point worth responding to, and the answer to it is simple. There is much that is good in the north-west—mainly its people, of whom I am proud. I am a little biased, but I regard it as the best region in the country, and my family and I live there. I am not trying to sell it short. Some good things are in my constituency —Trafford Park, which the hon. Member for Cheadle mentioned, is mainly there. It provides employment for some, but we would be negligent and derelict in our duty if we did not recognise the long-term problems and the incompetence of a Government who fail to deal with those problems and with the fact that the north-west is increasingly becoming a branch-plant economy, which depends at second hand on the successful south-east. If that trend continues it poses major threats to the economic viability of the region and to its employment and social structures.

We are being denuded of the economic resources that are necessary to control our destiny. The fact that the south-east has more than half the DTI assistance for research and development shows how dangerous it is to concentrate our resources in one region, which is already the most affluent and assisted. The Government thereby compound the problems of regional imbalance that already exist. We recognise that there are advantages in the north-west's industrial structure and skills, but we cannot live on those unless we invest in their future. We are not seeing that from the Government.

The hon. Member for Cheadle quite rigntly mentioned the role of Manchester airport. That airport is important for the regeneration of the region. As I have said, the Government are not prepared to allow fair access into Manchester airport by American carriers. As a south-eastern Government, that makes sense from their point of view because of the south-eastern airlines system that they have developed over the years. It makes no sense to me as a northerner to be told that I can fly from Manchester to London and pick up flights there. I am not a Londoner and do not live in the south of England, and my demand that the Government act fairly towards Manchester, the north-west and, indeed, the whole of the north of Britain is quite legitimate.

Another issue is the Channel tunnel. We have been pressing for some time for proper investment in British Rail freight services to our region. We were originally told that no public money would be invested in the Channel tunnel. Now we are told by the Government that the only public money to be invested will be on the strip that links Dover and the access to the tunnel to London. Nothing will be forthcoming to open up the north of England.

It is disgraceful for the Government to behave in that way, but they do it because they are responding to their south-eastern audience. No doubt the few Conservative Members who represent northern constituencies will be able to put up some propaganda barrage to hold the line.

The Government have given up on the north of England as a whole, and have certainly given up on the north-west. As long as there are amiable stooges on the Conservative Benches who represent those outposts and who are prepared to put down silly motions such as this congratulating the Government and trying to build up a case that all is well, the Government will be allowed to get away with systematic disinvestment in our regions.

Rather than putting down such motions, I hope that Conservative Members will join me in putting consistent pressure on the Government. They should say that even they, as Conservative Back Benchers, are not prepared to accept systematic disinvestment, indifference and ignorance by the Government. They should demand adequate public investment and recognition of the need for that investment into industry and into the skills of our people in order to make sure that we have the same access to future prosperity as that which is seemingly being planned for the south-east.

In the debate, we have heard about the low-paid, that third of people in the north-west who are low-paid by international standards. The Government must accept that the Budget does nothing for that group, but give massive rewards to those who are already well off. If they do not accept that, their total incomprehension about the real scale of social deprivation in and between the regions will be quite evident.

2.17 pm

Mr. Michael Jopling (Westmorland and Lonsdale): Because of the shortage of time, I do not have an opportunity to reply in full to the hon. Member for Stretford (Mr. Lloyd). He said that he did not want to talk down the north-west. Thank heavens that we do not have to rely on publicists such as the hon. Gentleman to extol the virtues and achievements of the north-west.

I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Cheadle (Mr. Day) on his wisdom in choosing this subject for debate and on his excellent speech. I am glad to have the chance to talk about another part of the north-west—Cumbria—which I have represented in the House for a long time. We have a heartening picture of progress and prosperity. I am delighted to see that since the February 1986 peak, when unemployment in Cumbria reached over 24,000, the level has fallen and the latest figures for January show that it has dropped to under 20,000. That means that almost one in five of the unemployed has found work. That is very good progress but there is still a long way to go because the figure is still too high. We must all work on that problem.

Cumbria has a mixed economy of industry, agriculture and tourism. Industry in the area is greatly helped by the partnership between the Government and private initiative. The hon. Member for Stretford said that the Government have given up in the north-west. He should visit parts of Cumbria where the Government's activities are crucial to the economy of the area. He should visit vickers submarine construction operation in Barrow, which is crucial to that town and has been supported stalwartly by my hon. Friend the Member for Barrow and Furness (Mr. Franks).

The hon. Gentleman should go to see the massive investment programme at Sellafield, further up the coast, with its nuclear reprocessing development. I am delighted at the way in which the management at Sellafield has opened the plant to visitors. It has made it much more open so that people can go and learn about it, rather than relying on silly scare stories. We should congratulate Mr. Christopher Harding, the new Chairman of British Nuclear Fuels, on what he has done.

Apart from the industrial areas, there is a huge interior in Cumbria. Local enterprise and self-help have created many jobs. I applaud particularly the creation of the Cumbria rural enterprise agency, based in Kendal, and recently extended to Penrith and Appleby. My hon. Friend the Member for Penrith and The Border (Mr. Maclean) recently opened the Appleby office. The scheme will shortly extend to Alston and Keswick. In its first year, the agency had 240 clients and created 40 new businesses. Another 20 businesses will follow shortly. That is an excellent local initiative.

The agency has done a great deal in other ways. For example, many hon. Members will remember the old railway centre of Tebay. One can see it as one goes north on the M6 through the dramatic gorge before one climbs over Shap fell. It used to be an important railway junction on the north-south line and there was a branch line across the Pennines to Darlington. In its heyday, Tebay employed 177 people on the railway. The station is now shut and many fewer people are employed on the railway. However, the M6 has come; most of my colleagues will have driven on that famous road. A motorway services area has been developed due to the efforts of a relatively small group of local business men. A new hotel has been built with a major heavy transport facility in the village.

The provision of those facilities has meant that, together with the 17 people employed on motorway maintenance by Cumbria county council, exactly the same number of people are now employed on the motorway as used to be employed on the railway. That shows what can be done by initiative and self-help. It is a wonderful story which shows how a motorway in a rural area can create a corridor of employment and prosperity.

Agriculture is one of the main industries of the area. Many people in agriculture will have welcomed the Budget. The reduced level of income tax will be well received, but the change of the base for calculating capital gains tax from 1965 to 1982 may be more important. It will be much easier for a young man to inherit the family farm from his father, and I very much welcome that change.

There is a growing interest in forestry in the north of England, particularly in Cumbria. We must not impair that. The Chancellor of the Exchequer was right to make the change in the taxation arrangements for forestry, but none of us can offer a judgment on the changes until the level of the new planting grants is revealed next week. There is a potential difficulty for people with young plantations, because they have no money coming in and will not be allowed to offset the costs of managing those trees.

Tourism is an essential part of Cumbria's economy. It employs 25,000 people, representing 13 per cent. of Cumbria's work force. In 1986, almost 3·25 million visitors spent 11·8 million nights and £20 million in the area.

The great attractions of the Lake District are becoming much better known. It is an undisputed gourmet centre, although I can only describe the food as having been terrible 25 years ago. There has been a massive development of hotels, largely by private enterprise. There has also been the development of time share, a wonderful arrangement. It can be found in the Langdales in Langdale valley, in a proposed £20 million complex at Windermere marina, and at Backbarrow. My hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Employment is visiting Backbarrow today.

There has also been a massive growth in opportunities to visit houses of great historic interest and a great expansion of museums. There is a great deal for visitors to do and to see. These developments have been created largely by private enterprise, together with pump-priming help from Government agencies. The message from Cumbria is that the economy is doing well. I hope that the Government will continue to support it.

2.21 pm

Mr. Chris Butler (Warrington, South): Once again I rise to report a booming economy in Warrington. Its success reflects the growing economic confidence of the north-west. It is significant that the Swedish company Ikea chose Warrington out of the whole of the United Kingdom as the place for its first store. When it opened, there were queues stretching back to the motorway. I am very glad that the store has been successful. It reflects the success of both Warrington and the north-west.

There are impediments to that success, and it may come as no surprise to Opposition Members that I associate them with Socialism. One of those impediments is the national dock labour scheme. I have a port in my consituency, the Manchester ship canal. I am sorry that the national dock labour scheme is still in existence, because it has played a very important part in transferring a great deal of the employment in the ports to the east coast. I wish that it could be wound up. I hope that the Government will look again at that scheme.

Another impediment to the success of the north-west is the seemingly rabid desire of Socialism to spend other people's money. Cheshire, which is run by an alliance between the Labour party and whatever the Liberal party calls itself now, has just imposed a 9·9 per cent. rates burden on ordinary people and businesses. There was no need for that swingeing increase, given the very generous rate support grant settlement this year. That increase has been reflected in the Socialist borough of Warrington, which has slapped on a 10 per cent. rates increase. Mike Davis, the finance director of Greenall Whitley, spoke for many businesses in the north-west when he said:

"We are all fairly aghast by the rate increase. The Council is doing nothing to get a grip on their spending . . . If our profits are depressed it means less for our investment programme and that affects jobs."

Local Socialists in Warrington have been complaining about the state of the National Health Service in Warrington. It has some problems over its expenditure programme, but it is hypocritical of the Socialists to complain about the state of the NHS in Warrington after having imposed an additional £60,000 rates burden on the Warrington health authority area.

Roll on the uniform business rate. It will bring immense benefits to the north-west. It is a great shame that Opposition Members oppose it. It will involve the transfer of £700 million to the north. The Manchester chamber of commerce and industry has said:

"The probability of rate reductions for most enterprises in the Merseyside area when UBR is in force was reported to be already producing inquiries from potential developers."

That makes an excellent case for the UBR.

In the north-west, the success of the nuclear industry is critical to the whole economy. In my constituency, I am surrounded by a constellation of the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority, the National Nuclear Corporation and British Nuclear Fuels plc. The National Nuclear Corporation is already in the private sector, and has played a full and successful part in the development of Heysham 2 and Torness. I hope that, post-privatisation, it will move to ever more successful heights when it deals with clients other than a monopoly.

There are other impediments to the economy of the north-west. One of them I again associate with Socialism —its policies towards the nuclear industry, which cast a pall on investment in the area. Last year, BNFL invested £638 million in this country, 90 per cent. of it with British firms; 46 per cent. was with firms in the north-west, including nuclear-free zones. They do not turn away the business that they receive from BNFL. Warrington, North, which is represented by a Labour Member, received the benefit of £77 million. I received only £500,000 in Warrington, South. I make no complaint about that, but I do complain about the hypocrisy and irresponsibility of Opposition Members when they seek to destroy the benefit of the largesse that we receive from the nuclear industry in the north-west.

2.26 pm

Mr. Geoffrey Dickens (Littleborough and Saddleworth): Like my hon. Friends, I feel very sad when I hear the Opposition running down the north-west. I feel that my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister was right when she said that we must focus our attention more on success than on failure.

Over the years, the north-west has achieved great strengths for this country. In the industrial times before the great recession, it was producing our wealth. Sadly, through bad taxation, our entrepreneurs, inventors and risk-takers — in other words, the job providers — were driven out of the north-west and abroad, because they were having to surrender 98p in the pound on their investments, which was stupid. Now, with the new Budget, we see many of those people coming back, and bringing jobs back to the north-west.

My constituency runs around the outside of Oldham and Rochdale. Companies are flocking towards those areas to set up their regional, and sometimes national, headquarters. We are doing all that we can to encourage that. There is much going for the people of the north-west. They are independent folk, who like to work hard for a good day's pay. It is a wonderful labour market: it has shown that in the past, and it is showing it now. If any company is thinking about where to relocate, the north-west is the place to do it.

The area also has the most beautiful surrounding countryside in which anyone could wish to live. Housing is relatively cheap, but sound and solid, and recreation is very good. In fact, this is one of the major tourist areas of the United Kingdom.

But it is the brain power of the north-west that will pull us through. That is why the Education Reform Bill, again launched by the present Government, is helping the schools to match the skills that industry now requires. Members of the CBI came to the House a few weeks ago and talked to north-west Members. They said that their order books were bulging. If ever they needed something, it was the skills of the work force to match the job vacancies that they were creating.

This sounds to me like a success story; it does not sound like failure. All the talk of the north-south divide is nonsense. The north-west will overtake the south before long. Already, massive contracts from the Channel tunnel are coming up into the north-west. Sizewell B contracts are pouring in. It is success all the way. And the reason for that is the people — those fierce, independent border folk between Lancashire and Yorkshire. They are a very good labour force for someone to take on.

I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Cheadle (Mr. Day) on allowing us to debate the motion, however short the time. However, it aggravates me, too, when I find that some hon. Members are intent on running down the north-west. Conservative Members like to talk about achievements.

It was the Prime Minister who, when the Government came to power, said that industry had to learn to produce goods that people want to buy and of the right quality. They have to be delivered on time, sold at competitive prices and have a good after-sales service. One gets that in the north-west, and that is why the north-west will be successful. It is why, almost daily, I am welcoming companies into my constituency. I do everything I possibly can to help them come. I meet their chairmen in the midlands or the south, I bring them to lunch in the House of Commons and I do everything possible to solicit work for the north-west.

It being half-past Two o'clock, the debate stood adjourned.

Royal National Orthopaedic Hospital

Motion made, and Question proposed, That this House do now adjourn.—[Mr. Lennox-Boyd.]

2.30 pm

Mr. Hugh Dykes (Harrow, East): I am grateful to Mr. Speaker and to you, Madam Deputy Speaker, for giving me the opportunity of raising the vital matter of the future of the royal national orthopaedic hospital in Stanmore. I thank my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for coming to reply to the debate.

The phraseology on the Order Paper has had to meet with the wishes of the Table Office. The appropriate adjective would be "threatened" closure rather than "proposed" closure because I should make it clear that there is no formal proposal for closure of the hospital. However, it is not possible to use the word "threatened" in this context with the approval of the Table Office.

My hon. Friend the Under-Secretary will be well aware of the tremendous anxieties that exist and the enormous worry about the future of the hospital, which is one of the most illustrious medical institutions in the country. It is a famous hospital in national and world terms where fantastic work has been done to help disabled and injured people over many years. As I have said, my hon. Friend will know the history of this illustrious institution so I shall not go into detail now.

I have been worried since 1984 when I first raised the subject on an Adjournment debate. Even then, the anxiety had been gnawing away at all those concerned with and worried about the future of the famous hospital for over a year. With the uncertainty dragging on since 1983, I am sure it is possible to imagine how worried people have become and what effect that has had on staff morale.

So many people have been involved and if I had time I could pay tribute to a long list of tremendous supporters of our local and national campaign. The community health council is, at this very moment, drafting another letter to the divisional general manager at the Middlesex hospital about the proposal to close the accident and emergency unit. I know that there was a meeting of the Bloomsbury district health authority on Wednesday this week and perhaps my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary will refer to that.

The anxiety was beginning to come to a head again at the end of January last year when I once again wrote to Mr. Speaker pleading with him for permission to raise this matter on the Adjournment either through the ballot or through his selection. In my letter to him dated 26 January 1987 I said:

"The waiting list on 31 December 1982 was 1,248. At the present time it exceeds 2,100 patients in spite of a 15 per cent. improvement of turnover as a result of better management of the beds by the consultants and administration. The present bed state at Stanmore has been reduced from approximately 300 to 210 beds."

To some extent there has been a slight alleviation of the problems. However, the acute problem of that reduction in capacity remains. I pay tribute to the enormous work done by the special charity called ASPIRE which has raised money for projects in the hospitals and is currently raising some more money for a specific project. If I had time to read out the list of patrons, apart from myself, people would be aware that it is a fabulous list. It consists of people such as Frankie Howerd, Lulu, Warren Mitchell, distinguished Members of Parliament, Baroness Seear,

[Mr. Hugh Dykes]

Lord Ennals, Willie Carson and John Conteh. That shows that throughout the world that institution is held dear for good and cogent reasons — not just for reasons of sentimentality, but because it has done a fantastic job over the years. The staff have a traditional dedication to service and quality that needs to be preserved and expanded.

In September of last year my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary referred to this matter in a letter to then shadow spokesman for health, the hon. Member for Peckham (Ms. Harman), who is not in the House today, and there is no particular reason why she should be. My hon. Friend said:

"It may help if I describe the present position with regard to the Hospital. Discussions have taken place between Bloomsbury Health Authority . . . and North East Thames Regional Health Authority about the future role and the location of the Hospital. Underpinning these discussions has been the agreed principle that the RNOH would keep both its identity and its post-graduate status, whatever was decided."

Later in that same letter she said

"I appreciate the concern that the current uncertainty may be arousing. Please be assured that there are no plans to close the RNOH."

The central purpose of today's debate is for my hon. Friend to enunciate that conclusive reassurance that the hospital is safe in her hands and in the hands of the DHSS and will be preserved for the future and expanded.

I pay tribute to the unanimous support from Harrow council and other local bodies and individuals.

On 23 September 1987, the council passed a resolution that:

"This Harrow council supports the excellent medical provisions of the Royal National Orthopaedic Hospital, Stanmore, and in particular the Accident and Emergency Unit. We urge the Bloomsbury Health Authority to maintain all its provisions on the Stanmore site and to resist its Working Party's suggestions of any possible closures or transfers to other sites."

On 14 October, when our national petition for the RNOH was gathering about 70,000 signatures — the present figure is approaching 100,000 signatures — a massive public meeting was held at the hospital which passed the following resolution:

"This public meeting declares its strong and determined commitment to campaign to keep the Royal National Orthopaedic Hospital in Stanmore. It calls upon the Bloomsbury Health Authority, the North East Thames Regional Health Authority and the DHSS to recognise that the only acceptable option for the future of the Hospital is its continuation in Stanmore."

That illustrates once again the massive, incontrovertible strength of local public feeling and international support. We have received letters from as far afield as Australia and elsewhere.

One is bound to feel sympathy for the Bloomsbury health authority. In a sense the hospital should not have been put into Bloomsbury. It is an anomaly, because of the original link with the town hospital and so on — we know the background only too well. I have enormous sympathy for Bloomsbury's financial crisis. It is just about the most important DHA in the country with enormous burdens and obligations, yet we know that it is strapped for cash.

I believe that nationally, and in regard to Bloomsbury, the Government must provide emergency financial assistance and proper funding for the NHS, which I do not believe is unlimited because of a so-called and illusory unlimited demand. I believe that the demand is limited and tangible and that a modest amount of money is needed to put the NHS back on a footing whereby most of the closed wards would be reopened and the staff and nurses paid properly. I suppose that the amount of money needed over the next year or so, coincidentally, is about the same amount of money as the Government have given back in higher rate tax remissions in the latest Budget.

The underprovision for inflation is a serious problem for Bloomsbury. Once again I express my anxiety about that and my sympathy for Bloomsbury. However, I do not want the serious acute problems of Bloomsbury DHA to be visited upon the RNOH. That would be most unfair. The problem has become worse and Bloomsbury, lacking about £5 million or £6 million, faces a grossly acute crisis this very week. It does not know quite what to do and is milling around waiting for suggestions. I do not criticise those running Bloomsbury, unless they attack the RNOH, as I believe that that should be dealt with in a separate way which I shall try to explain later.

In mid-November I wrote to my hon. Friend the Minister for Social Security and the Disabled, and invited him to visit the hospital. As chairman of the Stanmore Hospital Action Committee I wrote him a letter saying:

"I am writing to request that you pay a visit to the Royal National Orthopaedic Hospital Stanmore in the very near future. This excellent national institution is under the threat of closure but fighting very hard to survive. There has not been a Ministerial visit for four years now and I know that the management and staff would welcome the chance to show you round their excellent facilities. I would by very grateful if you would consider such a visit soon".

With great courtesy, the Under-Secretary of State for Health and Social Security, my hon. Friend the Member for Derbyshire, South (Mrs. Currie) replied on behalf of the Minister. Her reply contained a paragraph that provided some reassurance about the threat of closure, but referred to the question of location.

The future location is now the determining and emergent key to this whole conundrum. If Enfield has now been rejected—for very good reasons—as an alternative, and if relocation at Northwick Park hospital is unrealistic for all sorts of complicated reasons, which I cannot discuss because time is short, the essential point is that the DHSS now has the opportunity, formally, publicly and fully to abandon any lingering doubts and anxieties about threatened closure and to reassure us conclusively and finally that the RNOH is safe for the future.

However, doubts still remain. On 18 January, in another letter to my hon. Friend the Minister for Social Security and the Disabled, I said:

"The Regional Health Authority is now returning to Bloomsbury District Health Authority with its responses to the Bloomsbury Members' recommendation that the Hospital remains in Stanmore. These continued delays in consultations back and forth, whilst parts of the hospital remain under-resourced and partly closed with staff shortages, mean that its future viability is always under pressure.

In addition, the DHA Managers have returned to the idea of closing the Accident and Emergency Unit".

Once again, I hope that those reassurances are a result of this week's decisions. Staff attrition, loss of morale and erosion of confidence have become a scandal in recent years. It is time for the DHSS to show that it has a full psychological and financial commitment to the hospital.

All the people on the RNOH action committee have done excellent work. I have been merely its chairman, which has been a great honour and privilege. The committee's dynamic secretary Mrs. Lydia Correa, in particular, and her colleagues have continued their magnificent work for more than a year through a tremendous campaign on the streets of the locality. There have been letters, press conferences, television appearances and all sorts of meetings to emphasise that we are committed and realistic.

We are not talking about enormous amounts of money. Future RNOH budgets could be rather modest at the margin if proper decisions are made about buildings and there is the necessary investment in new equipment. As chairman of the league of friends of the hospital I know that not only do we rely on public money but charitable effort is committed to supporting the hospital through additional, marginal private efforts and initiatives that make it a much more civilised and human environment.

If only the time were not ticking away so rapidly, I could refer in detail to the many meetings and decisions of our action committee. At the end of January, the committee sent an official letter to the leader of Harrow council — I pay tribute to its leader and all the councillors for their support—referring to the dilemma of Bloomsbury. We asked whether it was right that the hospital should remain within the North East Thames regional health authority or whether it should be located within the North West Thames regional health authority. We asked whether it was right to consider other options, such as setting up a special health authority or including the hospital within the Harrow district health authority, although it is a teaching hospital, provided the local DHA had the extra funding necessary to meet the budget.

The position of the local unit general manager and her colleagues in the hospital has been of interest. One can understand their dilemma as they are caught, like salami in the middle of the sandwich, between Bloomsbury's financial problems and the staff shortages while expressing great sympathy. Although I do not have time to go into the details, I shall refer to a circular letter that the unit general manager sent on 29 January 1988 which referred to the future of the orthopaedic service and the report to the health authority on the outcome of public consultations.

The agonising debate has continued, but the sword of Damocles still hangs over the hospital. That is unacceptable in terms of not only staff morale, which is important, but patients' welfare, which is equally important. Since the staff have responsibility for looking after the patients, I have expressed it in that order.

I am grateful to my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Health and Social Security for again writing to me on 10 February. The concluding paragraph of her letter said:

> "The day-to-day management of the Hospital is a matter for the Bloomsbury Health Authority, but I hope that our public commitment to the RNOH provides some reassurance to staff at the Hospital."

Phrases such as "some reassurance" causes anxiety. We want 110 per cent. reassurance. I think that my hon. Friend the Minister understands why I put it in those terms. I did so not only for obvious reasons, as the local Member, but as one who, over many years, has been deeply committed to the future success of this famous national teaching institution.

In the last month, the action committee referred again to the effect of its continuing campaign in imparting knowledge and information about the absolute necessity for the survival of the RNOH to all concerned. I pay tribute to the media for all they have done in this matter. The campaign continues.

Despite the decisions made by Bloomsbury at its agonising meeting this week, question marks remain over the future of the hospital. As I said, the options for relocation seem to be closed in practical terms. Therefore, the hospital must surely remain in Stanmore and it must not be underfunded, underinvested or understaffed. We must bear in mind that the hospital is slightly remote and that it is difficult for staff to get there because of transport problems such as the lack of buses.

I hope that my hon. Friend the Minister will seize this opportunity. She has that look on her face and I am beginning to feel optimistic that she will now reassure not only me, but the public and the many supporters of the RNOH both in Stanmore and elsewhere that the hospital will not only survive but expand.

2.45 pm

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Health and Social Security (Mrs. Edwina Currie): Having read the history of the marvellous institution that we are debating, I feel honoured to participate and I am delighted to congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Harrow, East (Mr. Dykes) on winning the ballot and raising this subject. My hon. Friend has taken every opportunity to express his interest in the hospital to Ministers, both past and present. The files are full of his representations, not only on behalf of his constituents but on behalf of mine, and on behalf of disabled people everywhere. Let me put on record our appreciation of his courtesy and his careful marshalling of the facts, which is of great assistance to Ministers in making decisions on difficult matters.

My hon. Friend has been associated with the Royal National Orthopaedic hospital not only as the local Member of Parliament concerned with its activities at Stanmore but as a former governor and as chairman of its League of Friends. We should also acknowledge the interest of other hon. Members on both sides of the House from whom we have received many representations on the matter. I pay tribute to all of them for representing their views to us and showing such compassion for the disabled people needing the services of the hospital.

I appreciate that the continuing uncertainty over the future of the RNOH is unfortunate. The concern will, I am afraid, remain until the matter is resolved. In that sense, I owe my hon. Friend an apology. It is now five years since the Le Quesne report was published, but I am sorry to have to tell my hon. Friend that I cannot guarantee that firm decisions will be made quickly.

As my hon. Friend said, the Bloomsbury health authority met on 16 March and decided to take no action on the immediate temporary closure of the accident and emergency department, so that is still open. Consultation is still in progress on the possible permanent closure of the accident and emergency department and it will be some months before that issue is resolved. The North East Thames regional health authority is meeting on 28 March. It agreed in January that further examination of alternative sites, including Northwick Park hospital in Harrow, should take place before any major capital investment was made in redevelopment at Stanmore.

[Mrs. Edwina Currie]

Whichever way the North East Thames regional health authority decides to proceed, it will be some time before any proposals can be put to Ministers on whether there should be major capital investment or not.

Like other hon. Members, I received a letter dated 17 March 1988 from ASPIRE, in which Shannie Ross said:

"The Secretary of State will take the final decision after North East Thames Regional Health Authority's meeting on 28th March."

Strictly speaking, that is true, but it is highly unlikely that the decision will be made immediately after that meeting. It will still be some time before we are anywhere near that stage.

I am sorry if the continued uncertainty is disappointing to my hon. Friend and to those who work at the hospital, but I can offer him three pledges. First, if decisions are put to Ministers, we shall decide in the interests of patients — not only my hon. Friend's constituents but disabled people and their families from a much wider geographical area. Secondly, of decisions put to Ministers, we shall decide as expeditiously as possible. I offer my hon. Friend the thought that while this has gone on quite long enough, I would rather everyone took a little longer and got it right.

Thirdly, as my hon. Friend will have heard before from one of my predecessors, my hon. Friend the Member for Oxford, West and Abingdon (Mr. Patten), there are no proposals that the RNOH should be abolished. In looking at the future, it has been the intention of Bloomsbury health authority, North East Thames regional health authority, and, indeed, the Government, that the RNOH and its associated institute should retain their identity and their postgraduate status as a nationally recognised centre for orthopaedic surgery, training, and research.

The issue is how RNOH can best fulfil that role, and what back-up services are required. Such considerations will affect not only the decision about its siting but the type and level of service that it provides.

My hon. Friend the Member for Oxford, West and Abingdon gave a commitment to hon. Members, in an Adjournment debate in May 1984 that was initiated by my hon. Friend the Member for Harrow, East (Mr. Dykes), that Ministers would take the final decision if any substantial change were proposed to the services currently at the Stanmore site of the RNOH. We have repeated that pledge many times previously — including in correspondence with my hon. Friend — and I am very happy to do so again today.

I hardly need to rehearse the history of these matters, but perhaps for the benefit of a new Parliament — many hon. Members will not be aware of previous debates — I could set out the bare bones of what is happening.

I shall quote from the Association of Spinal Injury Research Rehabilitation and Reintegration booklet that was distributed by the Mike Heaffey centre, because it sums up in two elegant paragraphs the special nature of what we are talking about. It says:

"The Royal National Orthopaedic Hospital Stanmore has been in existence since 1910 and is nationally and internationally renowned for its expertise and success in treating the complete range of musculo-skeletal disorders. Together with the Institute of Orthopaedics, it is the largest orthopaedic postgraduate teaching hospital in the United Kingdom. As London's only specialist orthopaedic resource, the RNOH is one of a group of London based postgraduate teaching hospitals which, in association with London University linked Institutes, undertakes specialist training and research in medical and related disciplines.

The London Spinal Unit. The Spinal Injuries Unit at the RNOH, Stanmore, was opened in 1984 by Her Royal Highness the Princess of Wales. This experimental 24 bed unit was built by the DHSS at a cost of £3 million and has a wide catchment area — Greater London, East Anglia and the south-east of England — approximately 18 million people. Its progressive philosophy encompasses a unique treatment programme for the advanced physical and social rehabilitation of its patients."

The RNOH is on a scattered site of more than 100 acres at Stanmore. As I have said, its work covers a remarkable range of services and it is a major national institution. Early-day motion 382 talks about its "outstanding research and prosthetic work which has given so much hope to countless thousands."

I would certainly endorse those words. We have noted how many hon. Members have signed that early-day motion.

There is a general accident and emergency department at Stanmore, which covers not only orthopaedics but a wide range of work. My hon. Friend said that it is an anomaly that the hospital is managed by Bloomsbury. As he will know, if he has read the excellent booklet by John Cholmeley on the history of the RNOH, the hospital was originally located in London, in Great Portland street. The Stanmore site was intended to be an outstation, but like many babies it outgrew its parents.

I was fascinated to read that booklet, to see the pictures of the open-air wards and solariums from the days when many of the patients suffered from tubercular diseases, and to see the delightful picture of His Royal Highness the Duke of Gloucester in bed at the RNOH in June 1977. I commend the booklet to any hon. Member who takes an interest in this subject; it is a fascinating piece of work.

What has happened since? Bloomsbury health authority, which is, whether we like it or not, responsible for the in-patient and out-patient services of both the RNOH at Stanmore and the Middlesex in central London, commissioned an orthopaedic working party, chaired by Professor Le Quesne, which reported in August 1985.

The working party report made a number of recommendations for services based at Stanmore, including a reduction in the number of beds provided and the closure of the accident and emergency department. It also considered the location of services and recommended that, while the future development of orthopaedics would "be better served by close integration with the multi-disciplinary environment of a University Teaching Hospital", a detailed appraisal of the options for capital development at Stanmore should be undertaken, as no suitable teaching hospital site appeared at the time to be available.

In 1987, therefore, following discussions with the regional health authority, Bloomsbury health authority carried out an options appraisal with the assistance of consultants Llewellyn-Davies Weeks. The appraisal considered not only hospital development at Stanmore but the feasibility of transferring services to the district general hospital at Chase Farm in Enfield health authority.

The options appraisal was issued for consultation last summer, and the comments received were considered by Bloomsbury health authority in December. The responses received showed little support for a move to Chase Farm — and that is probably putting it mildly. The regional health authority therefore considered Bloomsbury's report of the results of consultation at a meeting on 25 January this year. In view of the very limited professional and public support for the Chase Farm option, it decided that that option should be abandoned.

As I have said, Bloomsbury health authority this week rejected the closure of the accident and emergency department of the RNOH as an emergency temporary measure, but is consulting about its permanent closure. That is where we are now. As my hon. Friend knows, I may be in an appellate position in relation to that proposal, so I am hesitant to make any further comment on it.

As my hon. Friend may know, like many other hon. Members I was a patron of ASPIRE when I was a Back Bencher, partly because of my previous interest in health and some small links with the royal orthopaedic hospital in Birmingham, which was in my ward as a councillor. In 1985, ASPIRE started raising substantial sums to build a special centre on the Stanmore site to be named after Mike Heaffey. I fully understand ASPIRE's concern that the substantial funds raised have not yet been used, but it is surely sensible that a decision should be taken on the RNOH's immediate future, and especially its location, before construction of the centre begins.

I should like to take this opportunity to pay tribute to the work of ASPIRE and to all those people—some of whom my hon. Friend has mentioned by name and many others who perhaps work more quietly behind the scenes—whose close association with the spinal injuries unit at Stanmore has given it a particular commitment to the RNOH. ASPIRE is concerned that the delay may cause some charities which have pledged money to pull out.

Perhaps it will help if I ask publicly today that all those marvellous charities and their boards should be a little patient, bearing in mind the further pledges that I have given to my hon. Friend. It is important that the decisions about RNOH Stanmore are the right decisions as they will affect the contribution that the centre makes to orthopaedics both locally and nationally and will thus affect the return on the charitable contributions well into the next century.

Finally, I repeat our commitment to my hon. Friend the Member for Harrow, East, to ASPIRE and to the many other people in the House and at the royal national orthopaedic hospital, that no decision will be made about significant permanent changes for the hospital without our prior agreement.

Mr. Frank Dobson (Holborn and St. Pancras): I appreciate the very proper concern of the hon. Lady and of the hon. Member for Harrow, East (Mr. Dykes) for the RNOH, but does the Minister agree that, unless the Government come up with a large bundle of money—about £5 million—the choices before the Bloomsbury health authority and the regional health authority will be a matter of robbing Peter to try to save Paul?

Mrs. Currie: No, I do not think that I would agree with that. The hon. Gentleman does himself no service by intruding in an Adjournment debate called by my hon. Friend the Member for Harrow, East. Like every district health authority in the land, Bloomsbury health authority has had an enormous increase in resources. I am sure that my hon. Friend the Member for Harrow, East recognises that. The authority is looking after substantially more patients than it did when the Labour party was in charge, at a much higher medical level and with a much greater level of success. We are all very proud of that.

Many of the options up for discussion in Bloomsbury seem very exciting indeed. I am sure that, whatever is decided and whatever proposals are put to us, the services in central London to many of the hon. Gentleman's constituents and to many other people who live and work in London, as I do, will be of tremendous benefit. On that basis, I conclude my remarks.

Question put and agreed to.

Adjourned accordingly at one minute to Three o'clock.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Radio Authority

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether it is his intention to use the radio division of the IBA as a planning nucleus during the transition period to the new Radio Authority.

Mr. Renton: The IBA will continue to be responsible for carrying out the duties with regard to local radio laid on it by the Broadcasting Act 1981 until relieved of them by new legislation. In the meantime, we shall welcome advice and assistance from the IBA's radio branch in preparing for the new structure of radio broadcasting.

Departmental Buildings

Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the location and status of all buildings within his Department located in London and the annual cost of rents, rates and maintenance of each.

Mr. Hurd: The Department's office, storage and specialised accommodation is held in the name of the Secretary of State for the Environment and administered by the Property Services Agency, which makes an accommodation charge instead of direct payment for rent, rates, maintenance and minor works. That charge includes the agency's associated administration costs. The Home Office occupies all or part of 21 buildings in the London area on this basis. The total accommodation charge for these buildings, which are listed below, is £23,931,049 in 1987-88.

The seven prison service establishments in London—Her Majesty's prisons: Brixton, Holloway, Pentonville, Wandsworth and Wormwood Scrubs; Her Majesty's Remand Centre, Ashford; and Her Majesty's Youth Custody Centre, Feltham—are held in the name of the Secretary of State for the Home Department. No rent is paid for them; the total cost of their rates and maintenance for 1986-87 was £3,081,700.

The building occupied by the Police National Computer Organisation at Hendon is held in the name of the Secretary of State for the Home Department. The total cost of the building's ground rent, rates and maintenance for 1986-87 was £225,000.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many members of staff within his Department are located within each region outside London; what percentage this constitutes of staff within his Department; and what were the comparable figures, in absolute and percentage terms in 1979.

Mr. Hurd: Non-industrial staff serve in the Home Office at the following places:

Region		As a percentage of all staff in the Home Office
South-East (excluding Greater London)	6,223	17·2
South-West	2,796	7·7
East Anglia	1,665	4·6

Scotland	128	0·4
Northern Ireland	23	0·1
Greater London	10,091	27·1
Total	36,105	100·00

Comparable figures for 1979 are not readily available.

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many representations he has received concerning the workings of the Data Protection Act; whether he has any plans to seek to amend the Act; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: Since 11 November 1987, when the Data Protection Act came fully into force, we have received 15 representations from hon. Members and members of the public of which 11 were requests for information. We have undertaken to review the working of the Act after a reasonable period of experience of its operation, and are considering the form and timing of such a review.

Inner City Crime

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what further steps he is taking to combat crime in inner city areas.

Mr. Hurd: I have today announced an important initiative, the "Safer Cities" programme, which will support the Government's policies for the regeneration of inner city areas with strong new action against crime. Twenty safer city projects will be established in inner city areas over the next three years. Their effect will be to promote an active partnership between the police, local authorities and concerned individuals in a well targeted programme of effective action against locally identified crime problems. The programme is more fully described in a note, copies of which I have placed in the Library of the House.

Passport Office, Peterborough

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the capacity for handling telephone calls from the public at the passport office in Peterborough; and what is the current average time after dialling and ringing that a caller is answered and connected to a member of staff to assist his or her query.

Mr. Renton: A new 24 exchange line telephone system was installed at the Peterborough passport office in July 1987. The time callers have to wait before being connected first to the operator and subsequently to the required extension varies according to the volume of calls at the particular time and the equipment does not have the capability to monitor response times. Planned modifications to the system, which will enable callers to be routed to a recorded message giving the answers to most general enquiries, should be completed within the next few weeks.

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the current number of passport applications awaiting action at the passport office in Peterborough; and what is the average time within which the documents are issued to the applicant, assuming the application form has been correctly completed.

Mr. Renton: Correctly completed non-urgent applications are being dealt with within 20 working days. Urgent applications are given priority. Applications are now being received at a rate of about 22,000 a week and it is estimated that a total of some 77,000 are now at the various stages of processing within the office.

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the current staff of the passport office in Peterborough; what is the authorised establishment; and when the last staff inspection took place.

Mr. Renton: The authorised permanent complement is 169 and there are now 208 staff in post, 43 of whom are casuals. The last formal staff inspection was in 1979. As I said in answer to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Basildon (Mr. Amess) on 4 February, at column 687, work is well advanced on the computerisation of passport issuing in the United Kingdom. The computerised system will be installed at the six passport issuing offices over the next two years and staffing levels will be reviewed when the new system is operational.

La Belle Discotheque

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis on the advice offered by Scotland Yard officers to the West Berlin public prosecutor, Dettlev Mehles, in connection with his inquiry into the La Belle discotheque bombing.

Mr. Hurd: No. I encourage co-operation and liaison between our police forces and foreign police forces in counter-terrorism matters including the investigation of specific terrorist incidents. I see no need to call for reports whenever such co-operation or liaison takes place.

Police Statistics

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) chief constables, (b) superintendents, (c) chief superintendents and (d) sergeants in police forces in England and Wales are (i) members of ethnic minorities and (ii) women; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The position as at 31 December 1987 is as follows:

Rank	Ethnic minorities	Women
Chief constable	—	—
Chief superintendent	—	8
Superintendent	—	27
Sergeant	61	725

Mr. John Byrne and Mr. Stan Hathaway

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) when Mr. John Byrne, a former member of the British armed forces in Northern Ireland, was sentenced to life imprisonment; what was his crime; and if he has been released;

(2) when Mr. Stan Hathaway, a former member of the British armed forces in Northern Ireland, was sentenced to life imprisonment; what was his crime; and if he has been released.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: At Belfast Crown court in January 1981, Stanley Hathaway, then a serving soldier, pleaded guilty to the murder of two civilians while on patrol duty in October 1972. On the same date, John Byrne, also a serving soldier, pleaded guilty to one of the murders. Both men were sentenced to life imprisonment and were subsequently transferred to England to serve their sentences. Neither has been released.

Firearms (McKay Report)

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when and by whom the McKay report on firearms was commissioned; and when the inquiry was announced or made known to the House.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Sir John McKay's working party was commissioned to review firearms controls in December 1970 by the then Home Secretary. The review was first announced in the other place on 15 December 1970.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether any undertaking was given that the McKay report on firearms would be published, or a copy placed in the Library.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I am not aware of any such undertaking.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will now place a copy of the McKay report on firearms in the Library.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No. The report of Sir John McKay's working party on the control of firearms, prepared in 1972, was an internal document. Its main conclusions and recommendations were incorporated in the 1973 Green Paper, "The Control of Firearms in Great Britain", Cmnd. 5297.

Canon Kevin Byrne

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has received representations from Canon Kevin Byrne of St. Lawrence's, Birkenhead, in the form of a sermon delivered on 7 February, relating to Her Majesty's Government's policy on capital punishment, sexual offences reform, the media, racial discrimination and other related matters; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: Canon Byrne sent me a copy of his sermon for Sunday 7 February. His address discussed the theme of social cohesion which I had raised in a speech to the Peel Society on 5 February and which I returned to at a fringe meeting of the General Synod of the Church of England on 10 February. Mr. Byrne made a number of criticisms of successive Governments. A reply was sent from my office on 24 February.

Social Services (Employee Vetting)

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prospective employees of local authority social service departments have been referred to the Metropolitan police for checks under his Department's circular (86)44 since July 1986; and how many checks were still outstanding at 31 January.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I am informed by the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that up to 29 February 1988 15,042 prospective employees of local authority social services departments have been referred to the Metropolitan police for checks since the arrangements announced in Home Office circular (86)44 came into force; 703 enquiries were outstanding on that date.

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish a table showing (a) the number of applicants to local authority social services departments who have been referred to each local police authority for checks under the terms of his Department's circular (86) 44 and (b) the average delay in each authority.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The information requested is shown in the table. The latest figures available are for the period 17 July 1986 to 31 August 1987.

[1] These forces do not keep separate records of inquiries from social services departments.

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if his Department has received any representations on delays in recruitment to local authority social service departments caused by police checks under his Department's circular (86)44; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have received 11 representations from, or on behalf of, local authorities about delays in recruitment caused by police checks under the arrangements announced in Home Office circular (86)44. We are discussing the points raised with the police and the local authority associations.

Councillors (Statistics)

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has as to how many local councillors in England and Wales are members of ethnic minorities and as to the total number of local councillors in England and Wales.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: There are 22,775 county, district and borough councillors and about 65,000 parish and community councillors in England and Wales. Up-to-date information about the number of councillors who are members of ethnic minorities is not available.

Under-age Drinking

Sir Dudley Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many young people under the age of 18 years have been prosecuted for obtaining or attempting to obtain alcoholic drink over the past 10 years up to the latest date for which figures ar available.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [pursuant to his reply, 18 February 1988, c. 712]: I regret that the figure given for 1986 was incorrect. The table should have read.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Torture

Sir Bernard Braine: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are the reasons for the delay in ratifying the United Nations convention against torture.

Mr. Eggar: The position has not changed since my answer of 16 November to the hon. Member for Ogmore (Mr. Powell), at column 397. It remains our intention to introduce legislation to allow ratification of the convention as soon as possible.

Information Research

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many civil servants were engaged in the information research department of his Department in each year since 1971.

Mr. Eggar: The staff establishment of the information research department in each year from 1971 until disbandment in May 1977 was 117, 99, 91, 91, 88, 85 and 85.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many members of the armed forces and civil servants were engaged in the information research department of his Department in Northern Ireland in each year since 1971.

Mr. Eggar: No member of the armed forces served in the information research department. One IRD officer served in Northern Ireland on secondment from November 1972 to December 1973.

West Berlin

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will discuss with the American Government (a) the implications for President Reagan's policy towards Libya of recent West Berlin police discoveries regarding Christina Endrigkeit and (b) the implications of these discoveries for the joint management by the allies of police in West Berlin.

Mr. Mellor: We are in constant and close contact with the United States authorities as well as the German authorities in Berlin about all aspects of the bombing of La Belle discotheque on 5 April 1986. It is not our practice to comment on cases, such as this, which are still subject to judicial inquiry.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on what grounds the allied Kommandatura exercised their right to instruct the Berlin authorities to remove from the western sector persons identified as posing a threat to the population of Berlin in April 1986; how such persons were identified; and whether their names are known to him.

Mr. Mellor: The decision referred to was taken for the safety and security of the city. The people concerned were identified as posing a threat on the basis of information available to the allied and German authorities.

Syria

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Syrian Government about the alleged supply to terrorists of Semtex bombs by the Syrian embassy in London prior to 1987.

Mr. Mellor: We broke diplomatic relations with Syria in October 1986 because of official Syrian involvement in the attempt to blow up an El Al aircraft with a Semtex bomb.

Falkland Islands (Exercise)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Halifax (Mrs. Mahon) on 2 March, what representations he has received from the Organisation of American States on the forthcoming military exercise in the Falkland Islands; if he will list the individual Governments who have expressed concern; what response he has made to the Organisation of American States' representations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: We have noted the resolution passed on 1 March by the Organisation of American States of which the United Kingdom is not a member. A number of Governments of states which are members of the Organisation of American States have expressed concern to us about the exercise.

La Belle Discotheque

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what communications were received by the British military government, West Berlin, from the United States military police regarding the likelihood of a terrorist attack in West Berlin during the hours before the attack at La Belle discotheque on 5 April 1986; what response was made; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what information has been made available to the British military government, West Berlin, on the type of explosive used to bomb the La Belle discotheque on 5 April 1986;

(3) whether the allied authorities made any inspections, under paragraph 8 of BK10/58/3, of police information relating to the La Belle discotheque in April 1986; and if he will make a statement;

(4) whether, in accordance with paragraph 6 of BK10, the Berlin police president reported to the Kommandantura the timing of any alerts in relation to events surrounding the bombing of the La Belle discotheque;

(5) whether, in accordance with paragraph 9 of BK10/58/3, the possibility of issuing direct instructions to the police in relation to the La Belle discotheque bombing was discussed by the allied Kommandantura with the West German authorities in April 1986; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: We have throughout the period in question kept in close touch with the American and French authorities, and with the German authorities in Berlin. I have nothing further to add to the many statements we have made on these matters.

East Berlin

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what communications there were in April 1986 between the allies and the Soviet authorities about the alleged use of embassies in East Berlin for promoting terrorist activities.

Mr. Mellor: The allies were in close contact with the Soviet authorities in April 1986 regarding their joint rights and responsibilities for the security of Greater Berlin.

Human Rights (Soviet Union)

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the human rights issues in the United Kingdom raised by the Soviet Union during his recent visit to the Soviet Union.

Mr. Mellor: During my right hon. and learned Friend's discussion of human rights, Mr. Shevardnadze raised alleged violation of human rights in the United Kingdom and handed over a list of so-called "political prisoners" in Northern Ireland. We have so far established that, of the eight individuals on the list, seven have been duly convicted of murder and one of attempted murder.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Beers and Lagers

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what information he has on the relative retail prices of (a) alcoholic and (b) non-alcoholic beers and lagers; if he has any plans to refer the price differential to the Office of Fair Trading; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: My Department does not have information on the relative retail price of alcoholic and non-alcoholic beers and lagers. The Director General of Fair Trading referred the supply of beer in the United Kingdom for retail sale on licensed premises to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission on 4 August 1986. The commission is due to submit its report to my right hon. and noble Friend the Secretary of State by 3 August 1988.

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many subject access requests under the terms of the Data Protection Act his Department has received; what was his estimate of this number; whether he is reconsidering the subject fee charged by his Department as a result; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: My Department has received three requests for subject access under the terms of the Data Protection Act. This is in keeping with the low level of applications which was anticipated. The subject access fee has been set at a level which will cover the cost of providing access and I am not reconsidering it.

Airbus

Mr. Hayward: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on recent developments in the Airbus programme.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I met my ministerial colleagues from France, Germany and Spain in Paris on 1 March to review recent developments in the Airbus programme.

We noted with satisfaction the continuing commercial success of the products of the Airbus consortium, particularly the A320. The A320 received its certification from the airworthiness authorities of France, the United Kingdom, Germany and the Netherlands on 26 February, and we congratulated the manufacturers on the fact that this major milestone had been achieved on schedule and that the first A320s would enter airline service at the end of this month. We also noted with satisfaction the continuing commercial success and technical development of the A330/A340 programmes.

My colleagues and I also gave Airbus Industrie and its partner companies a mandate to pursue expeditiously the negotiations begun with McDonnell Douglas about possible collaboration. These will be undertaken with the aim of reaching an agreement that would be beneficial to both parties.

We reviewed the position reached in the trade talks with the United States on civil aircraft in the context of the GATT, and expressed a wish that these discussions should reach an early and satisfactory conclusion in accordance with the principles and objectives agreed with United States Trade Representative Clayton Yeutter on 27 October 1987.

Inner City Policy

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what steps are being taken to co-ordinate the Government's inner city policy more effectively.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The 16 Government task forces co-ordinate the programmes of all Government Departments in the small core districts of the cities they serve and initiate projects of their own on behalf of the whole Government.

City action teams pull together and focus the efforts and resources of the Departments of Trade and Industry, Environment and Employment over wider urban areas in Birmingham, Liverpool, London (Hackney, Islington and Lambeth), Manchester-Salford, and Newcastle-Gateshead and the county of Cleveland. Apart from improving the effectiveness of Government programmes, the teams have a major role in encouraging the involvement of companies in urban regeneration. In view of their success, the Government are setting up two new city action teams, to cover Nottingham, Leicester and Derby, and Leeds and Bradford. The three Departments concerned will be spending over £1 billion in the areas covered by the CATs in 1988-89.

I have also been asked by the Prime Minister to help her to co-ordinate the Government's policies on inner cities. As part of that task, I will launch on 13 April in Newcastle a series of Government working breakfasts with Ministers and senior industrialists and business men to promote more co-operation with the local leaders of business in urban regeneration. Other cities to be visited will include Leeds, Manchester, Birmingham, Liverpool and London and I intend each working meeting to lead to increased efforts in each city concerned.

The Government have also set up a central free telephone link (0800 181518) so that businesses can find out from a single contact point in our action for cities unit how they can play their part.

Managed Workshops

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what progress has been made in providing more managed workshops in inner city areas.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: English Estates is to be the focus for a major new DTI-funded programme to bring the public and private sectors together to provide managed workspaces for business start-ups in inner cities. Up to £11 million of public funding will go into the programme in the first year through English Estates which has set up a new subsidiary company to spearhead the programme. Companies are being invited to adopt workshops in the town or city of their choice by investing directly in the projects or by providing land, buildings or experienced managers to give business support on site. English Estates is looking for as much private sector involvement as possible and is already working up projects in Manchester, Rochdale, Preston, Nottingham, Doncaster, Middlesbrough, Hartlepool, Spitalfields, Hackney and Peckham.

Rover Group

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what representations he has received, other than from the management of British Aerospace, asking for British Aerospace's negotiations for the acquisition of Rover Group to be conducted on an exclusive basis; what consultations he undertook before deciding to accede to such requests, and with whom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: My right hon. and noble Friend the Secretary of State consulted the chairman of Rover Group, Mr. Day, who advised that the Rover Group board considered exclusive negotiations with BAe should be pursued. The Government have accepted this advice, provided that negotiations are concluded by the end of April.

Investment

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what proposals the British Venture Capital Association has to increase investment in small enterprises in the Houghton and Washington area.

Mr. Butcher: The British Venture Capital Association is a private sector body for which there is no ministerial responsibility. I have drawn the hon. Member's question to the attention of the chairman of the British Venture Capital Association.

Insider Dealing

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he has now received the report from the stock exchange surveillance department into alleged insider dealing in the shares of Matthew Brown prior to the takeover by Newcastle Breweries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude [holding answer 4 March 1988]: It is not the practice to reveal in particular cases whether reports about possible insider dealing are under consideration.

WALES

Sheep

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give the number of sheep farmed in each county of Wales in the following years, 1975, 1980, 1983, 1986 and 1987.

Mr. Peter Walker: The number of sheep farmed in each county in Wales for the years requested is given in the following table. 1987 figures are not yet available.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Council of Europe

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what support Her Majesty's Government are giving to the European campaign for interdependence and solidarity of the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe.

Mr. Chris Patten: The Government support the aims of this campaign. Last November I announced a grant of up to £70,000 to the campaign: £40,000 for the United Kingdom National Organising Committee and £30,000 for the European Organising Committee (EOC). Since the inception of the campaign the Government have also met the expenses of the British representative to the EOC. On 15 February this year I addressed a round table on developing country debt organised as part of the campaign.

UNICEF (Global Immunisation Programme)

Mr. Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a further statement on UNICEF's global immunisation programme and on the United Kingdom's contribution to it.

Mr. Chris Patten: I have no new information to add to the answer I gave my hon. Friend on 1 February at columns 460-61.

Social Welfare Indicators

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is Her Majesty's Government's policy towards the use by the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank of social welfare indicators to measure the impact and viability of structural adjustment programmes on the poorest groups in developing countries: and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chris Patten: We fully support the policy of the IMF and the World Bank to take account of the impact on the poorest groups in developing countries when helping to design structural adjustment programmes. We regard it as important in this process to use appropriate indicators of social welfare. Such indicators are, however, not always readily available in the countries in question. We therefore support the World Bank's recent initiative to help monitor living standards and improve statistical information on the condition of the poorest groups in African countries.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Environmentally Sensitive Areas

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what arrangements have been made in accordance with the requirements of section 18(8) of the Agriculture Act 1986 to monitor the effect on wildlife and the landscape of agreements concluded with the farmers in the environmentally sensitive areas already operative in England; whether he will make details of these arrangements available in the Library; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: A programme has been established to monitor the environmental effects of designation in all environmentally sensitive areas in England. Monitoring will be based on surveys of land use, landscape, ecology, and farming practice in each area. I expect to publish a first report, as required by section 18(8) of the Agriculture Act 1986, before the end of the summer. This report will include the information requested.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Headmasters

Mr. Hayward: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received about his plans to give greater control over schools to headmasters; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: My right hon. Friend has received a large number of representations about the proposals for the management of schools included in the Education Reform Bill. The proposals would increase substantially the powers of school governing bodies and enhance the role of head teachers. The principle of greater delegation has been welcomed by many.

School Subjects

Mr. Fallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what recent representations he has received regarding subjects outside the core curriculum.

Mrs. Rumbold: Since the Second Reading of the Education Reform Bill on 1 December, over 800 letters have been received commenting on the Government's proposals for a national curriculum. A number of these have mentioned subjects other than those defined as core and other foundation subjects in the Bill.

City Technology Colleges

Mr. Holt: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a further statement on the progress in the number of city technology colleges to be instituted.

Mrs. Rumbold: Sponsorship for five city technology colleges has now been announced. The Kingshurst CTC will open in September and the Nottingham CTC next year. We are making good progress in discussions with a number of other prospective sponsors.

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received on city technology colleges; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Rochford (Dr. Clark) on 19 January 1988, at column 620.

Business Links

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what further plans he has for encouraging closer links between schools and businesses.

Mrs. Rumbold: I would refer my hon. Friend to the answer which I gave on 1 December to my hon. Friend the Member for Stockport (Mr. Favell), at columns 755-56.

National Curriculum

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps are being taken to ensure adequate staffing levels to cope with the subjects of the national curriculum.

Dr. Reid: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps he is taking to ensure that there are enough qualified teachers to teach all the subjects of the proposed national curriculum.

Mrs. Rumbold: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Leeds, Central (Mr. Fatchett) on Monday 11 January, at column 53 and to the answer my right hon. Friend, gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Pembroke (Mr. Bennett) on 19 January, at columns 629-30.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has any further indication as to when the whole of the national curriculum will be available for teaching purposes; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: The date of full implementation remains dependent on actions and decisions which have still to be taken. Amongst such decisions are included when the remaining subject working groups will be established. My right hon. Friend hopes to set up those for English and technology shortly after Easter.

School Reorganisation Plans

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many school reorganisation plans have been with his Department awaiting a decision for more than six months; and if he will list them.

Mr. Dunn: My right hon. Friend has before him 26 proposals under sections 12 to 15 of the Education Act 1980 which were published over six months ago. These are shown in the table below. The list includes a number of proposals which affect only one school, and some which are held in abeyance for reasons beyond the Department's control.

Current proposals over six months old (as at 1 March 1988)

PRIME MINISTER

Security (Trade Unions)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister what consideration has been given to banning trade unions from the Defence Intelligence Service.

The Prime Minister: None.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister what is Her Majesty's Government's policy towards trade union membership in those sections of (a) the Home Office, (b) the Ministry of Defence and (c) the Foreign and Commonwealth Office which deal with security matters or which handle highly classified information; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: Apart from members of the Ministry of Defence Police, civil servants in these Departments are free to join trades unions irrespective of whether they deal with security matters or handle classified information.

Psychological Warfare

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Prime Minister how many civil servants were trained in psychological warfare in each year from 1972 to 1987 in England, in the United States of America, or in both.

The Prime Minister: One civil servant received two weeks' training in England in 1983. Records are not available before 1982.

Security Services (Northern Ireland)

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Prime Minister which Minister was responsible for the security services in Northern Ireland (a) from 1974 to 1979 and (b) from 1979 to the current date.

The Prime Minister: The Secretary of State for Northern Ireland is responsible for all aspects of security policy in Northern Ireland. The position before 1979 is not a matter for me.

General Sikorski

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Prime Minister if she has received any representations about the repatriation to Poland of the remains of General Sikorski; what reply she has made; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: Representations have been received from various quarters both in Britain and in Poland. The Polish Foreign Minister raised with me last December the long-standing desire of the Polish authorities that the remains of General Sikorski be transferred to Poland. I told him that this was a delicate and difficult matter which divided the Polish people, and that the time had not yet come when we could agree to the transfer.

NHS Review

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Prime Minister if, further to her reply at 1 March, Official Report, column 813, she will list those district health authorities which, as part of the Government's National Health Service review, had told her that they are satisfied with their current level of funding.

The Prime Minister: The hon. Gentleman will be aware from press reports and in other ways that many district health authorities have budgeted effectively within the resources allocated to them, and have provided full and comprehensive health care to those needing it. Since the review was announced a large number of submissions have been received dealing with the experiences of many health authorities. It would not, however, be appropriate to publish information which may have been given in confidence.

War Widows

Mr. Ted Garrett: To ask the Prime Minister whether Her Majesty's Government are now in a position to remove the differences which currently exist between the pension entitlements of pre-1973 and post-1973 war widows.

The Prime Minister: All war widows receive pensions under the war pension scheme administered by the Department of Health and Social Security at the same standard rate regardless of when the husband served or died. Differences in total entitlement arise from changes made in the armed forces occupational pension scheme in 1973. These changes improved the provision made for widows where the husband gave service on or after 31 March 1973 and died from causes attributable to his service. It was recognised at the time that in accordance with normal superannuation practice, and in view of the very great costs which would have been involved, the new provisions could not be applied retrospectively. That position has not changed.

CIVIL SERVICE

Efficiency Unit Report

77. Mr. Favell: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service if he will make a statement on the implementation of the Efficiency Unit report on "Improving Management in Government: The Next Steps".

Mr. Luce: I have nothing to add to what my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister said on 18 February. I hope to make a further announcement to the House in due course.

Training College, Sunningdale

78. Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service when he last visited the Civil Service training college at Sunningdale.

Mr. Luce: On 9 November 1987.

Civil Service Applicants (Background)

79. Mr. Butler: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service whether he is satisfied with the diversity of background of applicants for Civil Service posts; and what guidance he gives the Civil Service Selection Board in this respect.

Mr. Luce: Applications for Civil Service posts are welcome from all qualified individuals, irrespective of background. Publicity arrangements are specifically designed to attract as wide a field of candidates as possible.

THE ARTS

Arts Council

56. Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Minister for the Arts what representations he has received regarding the future funding of the Arts Council in the light of recent grant announcements.

Mr. Luce: There has been general recognition that three-year funding through the Arts Council offers a firm basis to arts bodies on which to plan their future.

Incentive Funding

57. Mr. Knapman: To ask the Minister for the Arts what information he has received from the Arts Council as to its intended application of moneys set aside for incentive funding.

Mr. Luce: My office has discussed with the council the detailed arrangements for its incentive funding scheme. A summary is given in the council's brochure "Better Business for the Arts", copies of which have been placed in the Library.

69. Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Minister for the Arts whether (a) small and (b) innovative arts organisations will quality for incentive funding under the Arts Council's scheme.

Mr. Luce: The Arts Council published "Better Business for the Arts", containing full details of its scheme on 24 February.

The minimum grant will be £5,000. To qualify for this an organisation will be required to increase its income from outside sources by £10,000 in the third year of a business plan. A major criterion for all incentive funding awards will be the artistic excellence of the programmes; innovation is an important feature.

National Museum of Popular Music

58. Mr. Wareing: To ask the Minister for the Arts whether he will give financial support to establish a national museum of popular music.

70. Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Minister for the Arts whether he will give financial support to establish a national museum of popular music.

Mr. Luce: Any initiative in this area might look first to the entertainment industry for financial and practical help.

Arts and Employment (National Plan)

59. Ms. Short: To ask the Minister for the Arts whether he has had discussions with regional Arts associations on developing a national plan for the arts and employment.

67. Mr. Battle: To ask the Minister for the Arts whether he has had discussions with regional Arts associations to develop a national plan for the Arts and employment.

Mr. Luce: No, but I meet regional arts associations regularly and see the contribution that they are making. I do not think a national plan is required: the initiatives must arise locally. Some of them are referred to in the inner cities document launched by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister this morning.

Heritage Preservation

60. Mr. Key: To ask the Minister for the Arts what assessment he has made of the extent to which plural funding can aid the preservation of Britain's heritage.

Mr. Luce: I expect the heritage to continue to be supported by a mixture of public and private funding. Objects saved with the help of the national heritage memorial fund almost always attract private contributions. In addition, the Government indemnify many privately sponsored exhibitions.

61. Mr. Boyes: To ask the Minister for the Arts whether he will conduct an audit of national museums to identify the potential for further regional development.

Mr. Luce: I have no plans to conduct such study.

"Arts and the Inner City"

62. Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Minister for the Arts what was the cost of the Office of Arts and Libraries' report entitled "Arts and the Inner City".

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Minister for the Arts what was the cost of the Office of Arts and Libraries report entitled "Arts and the Inner City".

Mr. Luce: £5,900 for research fees, travel and subsistence costs.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister for the Arts what was the cost of the Office of Arts and Libraries' paper "Arts and the Inner City".

Mr. Luce [holding answer Friday 4 March 1988]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Hackney, South and Shoreditch (Mr. Sedgemore) earlier today.

West Midlands

63. Mr. Turner: To ask the Minister for the Arts whether he has had discussions with the West Midlands Arts Association about the potential for developing employment in the arts in the west midlands.

Mr. Luce: I have not had specific discussions with the west midlands arts associations, but I am aware of negotiations between WMAA and various local authorities, including Birmingham city council, Shropshire county council, and Dudley and Wolverhampton borough councils, covering employment initiatives within the field of the arts.

Arts Projects (Equal Opportunities)

64. Ms. Abbott: To ask the Minister for the Arts what discussions he has had with regional arts associations about the use of funds available for developing equal opportunities policy in implementing arts projects.

72. Mr. Vaz: To ask the Minister for the Arts what discussions he has had with regional arts associations about the use of funds available for developing equal opportunities policies in implementing arts projects.

Mr. Luce: I have not discussed this matter with regional arts associations, but the Arts Council has an equal opportunities policy covering employment practices, and an action plan committing 4 per cent. of the council's expenditure to ethnic minority arts within two years. These policies are supported by regional arts associations.

Touring Companies

65. Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Minister for the Arts what are the criteria for the distribution by the Arts Council of money set aside for touring companies.

Mr. Luce: The criteria for touring companies are similar to those for all arts companies. They take into account the company's artistic performance and standards, its strategic role and the quality of its management. The Arts Council is making a particular effort to expand regional touring over the next three years and I have made increased funds available for the purpose.

Financial and Marketing Skills

66. Mr. Jessel: To ask the Minister for the Arts what assessment he has made of the financial and marketing skills of arts bodies; and whether the Arts Council is providing advice on these skills.

Mr. Luce: In assessing its clients the Arts Council has regard to management ability as well as to artistic excellence. The council's new marketing department has embarked on a full programme of marketing support. I am also giving direct encourgement to marketing and recently announced support for two new measures: a distance learning package and training courses for top management.

Regional Departmental Staff

68. Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Minister for the Arts whether he has had discussions with the regional arts associations about the provision of Office of Arts and Libraries officers in the regions.

Mr. Luce: I am satisfied with the present arrangements, which provide for consultation whenever necessary between my officials and regional arts associations. There is no requirement for an OAL presence in the regions.

Arts Council Grants

71. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Minister for the Arts what assessments the Arts Council makes of the costs of individual productions by subsidised theatre companies in deciding its level of grant; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: In assessing its clients the Arts Council takes full account of their performance, both artistic and managerial.

Attendance Figures

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Minister for the Arts what information he has on total annual attendance figures at (a) London theatres, (b) provincial theatres, (c) London concerts, (d) provincial concerts, (e) London opera and (f) provincial opera.

Mr. Luce: The most recently available and comparable figures (1984) are as follows:

	thousands
(a)	10,471
(b)	5,557
(c)	1,118
(d)	1,348
(e)	565
(f)	474

The figures at (c) and (d) refer to "symphony concerts".

British Library

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Minister for the Arts what are the estimated capital costs of the new British Library at St. Pancras in each year from 1987-88 to 1990-91.

Mr. Luce: Provision for the estimated capital costs of the new British Library at St. Pancras for these years is as follows:

1987-88	24,500,000
1988-89	33,088,000
1989-90	41,549,000
1990-91	46,159,000

The figures given are in respect of the construction and resource costs for stage 1A, apart from £500,000 included within the 1988-89 figure, which is earmarked towards the design work for the completion stage.

The figures are larger than those which I announced on 5 November because they include additional amounts transferred from the British Library's grant-in-aid in respect of savings in rents previously paid by the British Library to the Property Services Agency now reallocated to the project.

Ethnic Arts

Mr. Butler: To ask the Minister for the Arts what discussions he has had with the Arts Council with regard to the funding of ethnic arts within London and the appointment of black directors to arts bodies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: I discuss funding matters with the chairman and secretary general on a regular basis. Employment practices, the composition of boards of directors, and the application of the council's equal opportunities policies are among the council's criteria for the assessment of its clients.

Royal Opera House

Mr. Butler: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he has any plans to seek powers to enable him to require the Royal Opera House to stage an appropriate proportion of black or ethnic arts.

Mr. Luce: No. It would be inappropriate for me to intervene in the artistic programmes of the Opera House, or any other funded theatre.

Arts Council Minority Arts Unit

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister for the Arts what has been the budget for the Arts Council minority arts unit in 1986-87 and 1987-88; and what is the proposed budget for 1988-89.

Mr. Luce [holding answer 4 March 1988]: The council had no separate budget for a minority arts unit in 1986-87. For the two succeeding years, budgets for the unit, including a grant to the minority arts advisory service, in figures are:

	£ thousand
[1]1988-89	65·0

[1] Projected.

ENERGY

North Sea Oil

7. Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what new steps he is taking to promote increased activity by oil companies in the North sea.

Mr. Parkinson: The licensing and fiscal arrangements for companies wishing to develop the resources of the United Kingdom continental shelf have encouraged a very high level of activity in recent years. Whilst activity fell as a result of the oil price collapse in 1986, it has since recovered strongly, which is further evidence of the success of the Government's approach to the North sea.

Oil-fired Power Stations

11. Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what consultations he has had with the chairman of the Central Electricity Generating Board regarding the conversion of oil-fired power stations to coal.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The CEGB keeps the possibility of conversion from oil to coal-fired power stations under constant review. I understand that the board has concluded that such conversion would be uneconomic at present.

Electricity Industry

24. Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he has now decided whether to produce a White Paper on privatisation of the electricity industry; and if he will make a statement.

29. Dr. Reid: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if will make a further statement on progress in preparing plans to privatise the electricity supply industry.

42. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what proposals he is considering for the control of the national grid after privatisation of the electricity industry.

22. Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what progress he has made regarding the proposed publication of a White Paper on electricity privatisation.

Mr. Parkinson: I refer the hon. Members to my statement to the House of 25 February 1988.

33. Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he last met the chairman of the Central Electricity Generating Board to discuss the privatisation of the electricity supply industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Parkinson: I meet Lord Marshall frequently. I refer the hon. Member to my statement to the House of 25 February 1988.

38. Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what plans he has to meet hon. Members to discuss various aspects of the Government's electricity privatisation proposals.

Mr. Parkinson: I am always ready to discuss electricity privatisation with hon. Members. I refer my hon. Friend to my statement to the House of 25 February 1988.

40. Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what representations he has received with regard to the extent of non-United Kingdom ownership of the electricity industry in the event of its being privatised.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I have received a large number of representations on many aspects of electricity privatisation.

9. Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what cost savings have been achieved in the electricity industry since 1979; and what are the cost saving targets for 1987-88 and 1988-89.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Operating costs of electricity supply per unit sold fell in real terms by 10·3 per cent. between 1979-80 and 1986-87. The present performance aim is a reduction of 6·1 per cent. in controllable costs between 1983-84 and 1987-88. The performance aim for the next two financial years is under discussion.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what assessment he has made of the implications for his decision on the future structure of the electricity supply industry of the role played by the integrated grid system in maintaining power supplies following the lightning strike on the Sundon substation in May 1986, which resulted in the tripping of seven supergrid circuits; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The Government recognise that national grid control must continue to direct the use of power stations to ensure that secure supplies are maintained. The future structure of the electricity supply industry provides for this. Nothing in the Government's proposals would affect the ability of the grid to deal with a similar incident to that at Sundon.

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what recent representations he has received from the Confederation of British Industry on the rate of return required by the electricity industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Parkinson: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to the hon. Member for Kingston upon Hull, East (Mr. Prescott) today.

19. Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what discussions he has had with the chairman or representatives of British Coal concerning privatisation of the electricity industry.

Mr. Parkinson: I meet the chairman of British Coal at regular intervals to discuss all aspects of the coal industry.

Independent Oil Sector

21. Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether he has any plans to review policy towards the United Kingdom independent oil sector; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Parkinson: The Government's policy has been and continues to be to provide opportunities for active participation by independents in offshore and onshore exploration and development.

Oil Demand

23. Mr. Knapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the projected level of demand for oil in the United Kingdom over the next three years; and what proportion of this will be met by output from the United Kingdom's own fields.

Mr. Parkinson: In 1987 the level of oil demand in the United Kingdom was 75 million tonnes. Over the next three years, we do not expect the level of demand to be very different. At this level, last year's production was 64 per cent. higher than self-sufficiency. On current estimates of future oil production, the United Kingdom is likely to remain self-sufficient well into the 1990s.

Coal Industry

25. Mr. Brandon-Bravo: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he next expects to meet the chairman of British Coal to discuss productivity.

45. Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he next expects to meet the chairman of British Coal to discuss working practices in the coal mining industry.

47. Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he last met the chairman of British Coal; and what subjects were discussed.

Mr. Parkinson: I regularly have meetings with the chairman to discuss all aspects of the coal industry.

30. Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how much public funding support is being provided for British Coal in the current year.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given to the hon. member for Birmingham, Northfield (Mr. King) earlier today.

32. Mr. Forth: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what has been the improvement in productivity in the coal industry since March 1985.

39. Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what has been the improvement in productivity in the coal industry since March 1985.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Productivity in 1984-85 was, of course, affected by the miners strike. Deep-mined revenue output per man shift for the week ended 20 February was 3·52 tonnes, an increase of some 67 per cent. on the average of 2·11 tonnes for April 1985.

Opencast Mining

26. Dr. Michael Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many tonnes of opencast coal were produced by licensed operators in the last financial year.

35. Mr. Neil Hamilton: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many tonnes of opencast coal were produced by licensed operators in the last financial year.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I am advised by British Coal that output of licensed opencast coal during 1986-87 was 1·8 million tonnes.

Power Stations (Scottish Coal)

27. Mr. Douglas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the amount of coal from Scottish miners burnt in power stations from 1979 to the latest date for which figures are available.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Coal consumed in SSEB power stations from Scottish mines from 1979 has been as follows:

Year	Million tonnes
1979-80	7·58
1980-81	7·28
1981-82	7·55
1982-83	4·65
1983-84	4·64
1984-85	2·39
1985-86	6·25
1986-87	4·50
1987[1]	4·45

[1] April to December.

Figures for Scottish coal burn in other United Kingdom power stations, and abroad, are not readily available.

Energy Supplies (Wales)

28. Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he has any plans to visit Wales to discuss future investment in energy supplies.

Mr. Parkinson: The Government's approach to energy policy is a national one. I am satisfied that the energy needs of Wales are being fully met.

Energy Efficiency

31. Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will give his Department's current estimates of the cost of wasted energy as a result of the poor standard of insulation in domestic housing in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Parkinson: Energy waste due to inadequate insulation in the housing sector is estimated at around £1 billion per year. it is in all our interests to minimise this waste. The Government, through the community insulation projects and the homes insulation scheme, are enabling over 300,000 households to be insulated annually. I hope that householders, local authorities, housing associations and building professionals will also continue to take advantage of my Energy Efficiency Office's information and advice service.

34. Mr. Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what recent representations he has received on his policy on energy efficiency in buildings.

Mr. Parkinson: I receive a regular flow of representations from those who occupy, own or manage buildings, from the energy efficiency and heating industries, and from building professionals.

Nuclear Power

36. Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what further proposals he has for the development of nuclear power.

Mr. Parkinson: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Wells (Mr. Heathcoat-Amory) on 17 December 1987, at columns 639-40, and to the statement I made to the House on 25 February 1988.

Plutonium

37. Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the maximum velocity of impact that flasks carrying plutonium from Sellafield to Japan will withstand.

Mr. Michael Spicer: British Nuclear Fuels plc is developing and testing a suitable container for transporting plutonium by air from Sellafield to Japan. The container will meet the most stringent international standards.

CEGB Chaplains

41. Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he last met the Central Electricity Generating Board chaplains; and what subjects were discussed.

Mr. Parkinson: No such meetings have taken place.

Electricity Prices

43. Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he has met the Confederation of British Industry on the subject of electricity pricing.

Mr. Parkinson: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given today to the hon. Member for Kingston upon Hull, East (Mr. Prescott).

48. Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what further representations he has received from industrial consumers about electricity prices.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I have received a number of representations from industrial consumers.

Nuclear Safety

44. Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will raise the recent Health and Safety Commission report on "The Tolerability of Risk from Nuclear Power Stations" at his next meeting with the commission.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The HSC will be considering the HSE paper, along with any comments received by 6 May 1988.

Joint European Torus

46. Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the future of the Joint European Torus.

Mr. Parkinson: The JET joint undertaking was originally established for a duration of 12 years beginning on 1 June 1978. Some of the scientific problems which JET was designed to explore are taking longer to solve than was originally hoped. To enable JET to complete its original objectives, an extension to the end of 1992 is currently under consideration in Brussels along with a proposed new community programme and R and D in the field of thermonuclear fusion.

Energy Prices and Consumption

49. Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether he plans to review his policies on energy pricing and consumption, in the light of the March

Consultation Group report on energy consumption patterns in the north-west, a copy of which has been sent to him; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I welcome this study in so far as it shows the enormous scope for improved energy efficiency in the north-west and in the country as a whole. The Energy Efficiency Office will continue to pursue sound policies to help consumers benefit from this potential. For this it is essential that energy prices should be determined within a competitive environment.

Offshore Fabrication Contracts

14. Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he has any plans to change the criteria employed by the Offshore Supplies Office in assessing the percentage of United Kingdom content in oil and oil-related fabrication and construction contracts; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: No.

Energy-Saving Measures

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what recent representations he has received about energy saving; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Parkinson: I have received numerous recent representations on energy saving, many of which have been in the context of the work currently being undertaken on the future development of the Energy Efficiency Office's programmes.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many members of staff within his Department are located within each region outside of London; what percentage this constitutes of staff within his Department; and what were the comparable figures in absolute and percentage terms in 1979.

Mr. Parkinson: The table below shows regions where 10 or more staff are currently located; there are also 28 staff in nine other regions. Comparable figures for 1979 are not available except for Strathclyde and East Midlands.

	1988		1979
	Number	percentage	Number	percentage
Strathclyde	74	7	110	9
East Midlands	43	4	56	4
Grampian	21	2	—	—
North-West	21	2	—	—

Private Opencast Mining

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy who polices the tonnage of coal taken from opencast sites in the private sector.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Compliance with the licensing arrangements for private opencast mining operations is a matter for British Coal.

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many subject access requests under the terms of the Data Protection Act his Department has received; what was his estimate of this number; whether he is reconsidering the subject access fee charged by his Department as a result; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Parkinson: My Department anticipates very few subject access requests and none has so far been received.

I have no plans to reconsider the subject access fee set out in my reply of 29 October 1987, at column 375, to the hon. Member.

Bulk Consumers (Efficiency)

Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what evidence he has as to increased fuel efficiency on the part of bulk consumers; how this compares with the practice of other consumers, domestic and industrial; and what plans he has to encourage further such efficiency.

Mr. Parkinson: During the period 1979 to 1984 energy purchased per unit of production fell over 35 per cent. in the paper industry, 40 per cent. to 65 per cent. in basic chemicals, and over 70 per cent. in the aluminium industry. The figure for manufacturing industry as a whole was 25 per cent.

No comparable figures exist for the domestic sector but, for example, about 90 per cent. of homes with lofts which can be insulated have been insulated.

Building on this success, I have asked the Energy Efficiency Office to target its work on the economically most attractive areas, and to examine how the contribution of those who benefit from its industrial and commercial programmes can be increased.

Opencast Executive

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what information he has as to what percentage of (a) the profits and (b) the income of the Opencast Executive in South Wales was spent on site restoration in each year since 1984.

Mr. Michael Spicer: This is a matter for the British Coal Corporation, and I have asked the chairman to write to the hon. Member.

Electricity Generation

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) if he will publish what information he has regarding the proportion of electricity generation in each of the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development members states which are currently met by (a) nuclear, (b) coal-fired, (c) oil fired, (d) hydro and (e) other power stations;

(2) if he will publish what information he has regarding the proportion of electricity generation in each of the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development member states which are expected to be met in 1988 by (a) nuclear, (b) coal-fired, (c) oil fired, (d) hydro and (e) other power stations.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The proportion of total electricity production by OECD member states estimated by the IEA for the years closest to those required by the hon. Members is as follows:

	1986		1990
	TWh	Per cent.	TWh	Per cent.
Coal	2,424·5	40	2,707·9	40
Oil	523·8	9	509·1	8
Gas	521·9	9	611·9	9
Nuclear	1,319·7	23	1,598·8	24
Hydro/Geothermal	1,167·7	19	1,303·2	19
Other	22·4	0	37·0	0
Total	5,980·0	100	6,767·9	100

The I E A publication "Coal Information 1987", a copy of which has been placed in the Library of the House, provides detailed information for each member state.

United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy, pursuant to his reply of Monday 15 February, Official Report, columns 516-18, if he will specify the funding provided in each of the table columns by year for (a) fast breeder reactor research, (b) fusion research, (c) thermal reactor research, (d) radioactive waste management, (e) renewable sources of energy and (f) energy efficiency.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The following table gives my Department's programme expenditure in the areas requested from the financial year 1975-76. Figures for the breakdown of the nuclear programme before 1975-76 are not readily available; and the renewables and energy efficiency programmes did not begin until that year.

Department of Energy Programme Expenditure

Central Electricity Generating Board

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he last met the chairman of the Central Electricity Generating Board; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Parkinson: I meet Lord Marshall frequently, and we discuss a range of matters.

Sellafield (Discharges)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list, aside from quantities discharged to the sea or atmosphere, the forms of (a) refined uranium, (b) refined plutonium, (c) intermediate uranium contaminated waste and (d) intermediate plutonium waste that leave British Nuclear Fuels plc, Sellafield, under full Euratom safeguards.

Mr. Michael Spicer [holding answer 5 February 1988]: All material leaving Sellafield which is destined for civil use is under safeguards and is in the form of oxides.

Power Stations (Emissions)

17. Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how much limestone will be required per annum for the flue gas desulphurisation equipment presently being installed on coal-fired power stations.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The CEGB plans to install flue gas desulphurisation equipment on 6,000 MW of existing coal-fired generating plant over the period 1988 to 1997.

Each 2,000 MW coal-fired power station using FGD equipment would use about 300,000 tonnes of limestone per year when operating at high load factors. This represents about 0·3 per cent. of annual United Kingdom limestone production.

20. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's policy on the reduction of sulphur dioxide emissions from (a) Central Electricity Generating Board power stations and (b) privately owned power stations.

Mr. Michael Spicer: All new coal-fired power stations operated by both the public and private sector will be fitted with FGD equipment to the requirements of Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Pollution. In addition, the CEGB plans to retrofit 6,000 MW of existing generating capacity over the period 1988 to 1997.

Electricity Supplies

18. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the ratio of electricity provided from (a) coal, (b) oil, (c) nuclear and (d) other sources; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Parkinson: The amount of electricity provided by the Central Electricity Generating Board in the financial year 1986-87 amounted to 238 TWh. Of this, 75 per cent. was generated by coal-fired power stations, 16 per cent. from nuclear, 5 per cent. oil and 4 per cent. from other sources.

EMPLOYMENT

Docklands

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give an account of the history, staffing and activities of the Manpower Services Commission's docklands liaison group.

Mr. Nicholls: The London docklands liaison group involving officials of the Department of Employment and the Manpower Services Commission was established in June 1987.

The docklands liaison group provides a focal point for the consideration of employment and training issues related to the development of the London docklands.

Urban Development Corporation

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when the Manpower Services Commission will submit the evidence requested by the Employment Committee for its inquiry into urban development corporations particularly in relation to the Manpower Services Commission's docklands liaison group; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: Evidence from the Manpower Services Commission for the Select Committee into urban development corporations and the London docklands liaison group was sent to the Committee on 3 March 1988.

Officials of the Manpower Services Commission are scheduled to give evidence to the Select Committee on 9 March 1988.

Community Programme

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the number of community programme projects and places, by type of project and type of sponsor, at the most recent available date.

Mr. Nicholls: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my Friend the Minister of State to the hon. Member for Oldham, West (Mr. Meacher), Official Report, Wednesday 9 December at columns 183-86.

Enterprise Allowance Scheme

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the take-up and progress of the enterprise allowance scheme in Waveney.

Mr. Cope: Information is not available in the form requested. Since its national launch in August 1983, the enterprise allowance scheme has helped over 7,500 people to start their own business throughout Norfolk and Suffolk, including Waveney. Almost 2,400 people are currently receiving the allowance in these areas.

Departmental Buildings

Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the location and status of all buildings within his Department located in London and the annual cost of rents, rates and maintenance of each.

Mr. Lee: The Department of Employment Group, including the Advisory, Conciliation Arbitration Service, the Health and Safety Executive and the Manpower Services Commission, occupies accommodation in 224 locations in the London area ranging from its main headquarters building, Caxton house, Tothill street, London, SW1, down to small jobcentres and unemployment benefit offices. Civil accommodation for Government Departments is held in the name of the Secretary of State for the Environment and managed by PSA. Property for the Manpower Services Commission is in part held in its own name and the HSE holds the lease for its headquarters at Baynards house, London, W2. Some properties are held freehold; the rents of leasehold buildings are determined on a strictly commercial, and therefore confidential, basis. The tota! annual rent, including services charges paid to landlords for DE Group occupied properties in London in 1986-87, the last complete year for which figures are available, was £17 million. Comparable figures for rate payments, and maintenance charges paid to PSA for those properties managed by them, are £8·2 million and £1·9 million respectively.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what were the 10 latest categories of employment in the Swindon jobcentre area in 1976, 1981 and 1986; how many were employed in each category; and what percentage of the work force these represent.

Mr. Lee: The available information on a comparable basis is given in the table. The figures are taken from the censuses of employment and relate to the Swindon travel-to-work area, as defined in 1984. Conparable jobcentre area information for 1981 and 1984 and travel-to-work area information for years prior to 1981 is not available.

[2] Figures for these industries cannot be given without disclosing confidential information relating to individual firms.

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the total number of people unemployed in Houghton and Washington who are (a) 18 to 21 years of age, (b) 22 to 25 years of age, (c) 26 to 30 years of age, (d) 31 to 35 years of age and (e) over 36 years of age; and what percentage of each group this represents.

Mr. Lee: The following information is in the Library. Unemployment figures are not available in the exact age bands requested, but the following table shows the number of unemployed claimants in the Houghton and Washington parliamentary constituency on 14 January 1988, for the age bands which most closely correspond with those requested. Unemployment rates by age are not calculated below national level.

Houghton and Washington Constituency—14 January 1988

Age	Unemployed Claimants
18-19 years	642
20-24 years	1,339
25-29 years	1,003
30-34 years	867
35 years and over	3,065

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people in Houghton and Washington have been unemployed for longer than a year; and what percentage of the working force this total represents.

Mr. Lee: The following information is in the Library. On 14 January 1988 the numbers of unemployed claimants who had been unemployed for one year or more in the Houghton and Washington parliamentary constituency was 3,142. The smallest areas for which unemployment rates are available are travel-to-work areas.

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information he has as to the rate of male unemployment among (a) black and (b) white people in Brixton, Tottenham, Liverpool, Birmingham and Bristol; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: Information on unemployment by ethnic group is available only at regional, metropolitan county and national level.

Industrial Tribunals

Mr. Holt: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many awards were made against claimants for frivolous or vexatious cases at industrial tribunals in each year since 1982; and what was the average value of these claims.

Mr. Nicholls: Details of all cases in which costs were awarded are readily available only for the last two years. There were 287 such cases in the 12 months to 31 March 1986 with a median award of £92. The corresponding figures for the 12 months to 31 March 1987 were 294 and £285, respectively. A breakdown between applicants and respondents is not readily available but in practice the vast majority of cost awards are against applicants.

Mr. Batiste: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations he has received concerning the effectiveness of pre-hearing assessments in industrial tribunals.

Mr. Nicholls: I am aware that criticisms have been made of the pre-hearing assessment procedure, most recently by Justice in its report on industrial tribunals. I am considering these criticisms in conjunction with the presidents of the industrial tribunals.

Mr. Batiste: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proportion of applications to industrial tribunals in each of the last three years for which figures are available have been subject to a pre-hearing assessment; in how many of such cases a warning as to costs was issued; and following such warning how many applications were withdrawn.

Mr. Nicholls: The information is as follows:

12 months ending	Proportion of applications subject to pre-hearing assessment Per cent.	Number of costs warnings issued	Number of applications withdrawn or settled after costs warning
31 December 1984	9·4	1,266	1,004
31 March 1986	3·7	672	640
31 March 1987	3·9	517	500

Mr. Batiste: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many awards of costs have been made by industrial tribunals during the most recent three years for which figures are available in respect of unfair dismissal cases; how they have been divided between awards against applicants and awards against respondents; and of all such awards how many did not follow a warning as to costs in a pre-hearing assessment.

Mr. Nicholls: Information on the number of cost awards in cases of unfair dismissal is readily available only for the two years ending 31 March 1987. The numbers are as follows:

12 months ending 31 March 1986: 185
12 months ending 31 March 1987: 229

I regret that the remaining information requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Unfair Dismissal

Mr. Batiste: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the average size of awards of compensation for all unfair dismissals made is each of the last three years for which records are available; and what is the average for awards against companies employing fewer than 20 people.

Mr. Nicholls: The median award of compensation for unfair dismissal cases was:

12 months ending 31 December 1984: £1,345
12 months ending 31 March 1986: £1,674
12 months ending 31 March 1987: £1,805

I regret that information on awards against companies with fewer than 20 employees is not available.

Mr. Batiste: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many applications for unfair dismissal have been made in each of the last three years for which records are available; and how many relate to companies employing fewer than 20 employees.

Mr. Nicholls: The number of unfair dismissal applications registered was:

12 months ending	Number
31 December 1984	28,052
31 March 1986	27,632
31 March 1987	29,392

I regret that information on the number of complaints relating to companies with fewer than 20 employees is not available.

Inner Cities

Dr. Goodson-Wickes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has to strengthen schools-industry links in inner city areas.

Mr. Fowler: I propose to deploy the resources of the Department of Employment Group to encourage the development and implementation of 12 employer-school compacts within inner city target areas. The basic aim of these compacts will be for employers to guarantee a job with training to young people from inner city schools who meet agreed standards of achievement and motivation, and for this to be set down in an agreement between employers and schools. In return, schools will commit themselves to bringing their pupils up towards these agreed standards.

I have asked the Manpower Services Commission to give financial and organisational support to the 12 compacts for their first four years and I am setting aside £3 million a year for the next four years for this purpose. The scheme will be operated in full co-operation with the Department of Education and Science and the Department of Trade and Industry.

Mr. Knapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps he intends to take to strengthen training and improve job prospects for inner city residents.

Mr. Fowler: My Department already spends over £1·1 billion in inner cities target areas providing unemployed people with skills, helping them find jobs and encouraging small businesses which are a prime source of new jobs. In intend to build on this work to focus our support on those who most need help. In particular, the following new initiatives are being introduced.

More than 100 specialist staff will work in local communities giving information and advice about the Government's training programmes, building on the help already being provided through 500 jobcentres and unemployment benefit offices.

People living in inner cities will be given more immediate access to information on jobs and training programmes, for example in community centres or libraries, in some cases using new technology.

Training in literacy, numeracy and English as a second language will be included in the Government's new training for employment programme. Special restart assessment courses will be set up for people lacking these basic skills.

A campaign to recruit more employers as training providers, particularly for the new programme, will be mounted.

The Manpower Services Commission will encourage employers to provide more training places and collaborate in planning inner city training programmes.

Small Businesses (Inner Cities)

Mr. Knapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps he is taking to encourage small businesses in the inner cities.

Mr. Fowler: Small businesses make a central contribution to the development of inner city areas and to the generation of new jobs. My Department already provides substantial support to encourage self-employment and to help small businesses to start up, prosper and grow.

I am now introducing new measures to extend our support within the inner city target areas.

Six additional inner city offices manned by the small firms service are to be set up, improving access to business advice and counselling. Specialist counsellors will be appointed, to work in the local small business community, particularly with ethnic minority businesses.

A new fund of £600,000 per annum has been established, to be used to match private sector contributions to local enterprise agencies' projects specially designed to help inner city firms.

More encouragement, better training and advice for would-be entrepreneurs will be offered through more "enterprise days" in inner city jobcentres and a new training enterprise allowance scheme.

The flow of finance to inner city business will be encouraged by increasing the guarantee to banks for the loans they make to small businesses under the Government's loan guarantee scheme. This will be raised from 70 per cent. to 85 per cent. in the 16 inner city task force areas.

Greater emphasis on the option of self-employment will be included in YTS and the new training for employment programme.

Special Aids

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if the special aids to employment scheme will be available on the new adult training scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: Yes. The special aids to employment scheme will be available on the new adult training programme. This was one of the recommendations included in the Manpower Services Commission's report and we have accepted its report in full.

Bridging Allowance

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment on what basis the proposed bridging allowance was calculated for young people at £15 per week; and whether he has any plans to increase the amount to the same rate as that payable under income support.

Mr. Cope: The proposed YTS bridging allowance has been set at £15 per week in order to provide short-term help for young people who have to wait for a few weeks for a YTS place after leaving a job or a previous YTS place. The allowance will be paid for a maximum of eight weeks, during which time the offer of a YTS place will be made. The allowance is more than twice the level of child benefit.

The allowance is not a form of income support, nor is it intended to support young people in any way over a long period of time. We shall, of course, keep the level of the allowance under review.

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether a young person discharged from a YTS place through no fault of her or his own will be entitled to a bridging allowance under the Employment Bill 1988 of more than eight weeks if they had completed 18 months of a YTS placement and still had six months before their 18th birthday and were unable to obtain another suitable YTS place.

Mr. Cope: The YTS bridging allowance will be limited to a maximum period of eight weeks in any year for all young people except registered disabled people.

All young people under 18 are guaranteed a place on YTS. This includes young people who have left a previous YTS place. The current rules preventing those with limited YTS entitlement from re-entering YTS will be changed to ensure that they can re-enter YTS and complete their training right up to their 18th birthday.

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will ensure that bridging allowance for young people under the Employment Bill 1988 will be paid immediately their parents cease receiving child benefit.

Mr. Cope: No. The child benefit and YTS bridging allowance payments are designed for different groups of young people and are not intended to run consecutively. The new YTS bridging allowance is for young people who are already in the labour market who apply for YTS after having left or lost a job or previous YTS place.

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether bridging allowance, under the Employment Bill 1988, will be paid for more than eight weeks if a suitable YTS place cannot be found for a young unemployed person.

Mr. Cope: From September 1988 all young people under 18 years of age will be guaranteed a YTS place before their child benefit entitlement or YTS bridging allowance runs out.

We have guaranteed that a suitable YTS place will be found for all young people under 18 including those who are disabled who want one before these payments run out.

Special arrangements will be made for young registered disabled people, who may require special training facilities, to receive the YTS bridging allowance for longer than eight weeks if this proves necessary.

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether a young person in receipt of bridging allowance under the Employment Bill 1988 will be penalised if she or he refuses an unsuitable YTS place.

Mr. Cope: There will be no change to the present arrangements for placing young people on to suitable YTS schemes.

The new bridging allowance is for young people looking for a YTS place after leaving or losing a job or previous YTS place. If young people in this position refuse suitable YTS places consideration will be given to whether the bridging allowance should be suspended.

YTS (Houghton and Washington)

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people are currently on YTS schemes in Houghton and Washington; and if he will provide a table delineating the totals from 1979 to the latest available date.

Mr. Cope: The YTS programme began in 1983. The following table gives numbers on schemes in Houghton and Washington at 31 January for the past four years. Earlier data are not available.

	Number
31 January 1985	504
31 January 1986	484
31 January 1987	828
31 January 1988	829

Jobcentres (Advertisements)

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will instruct jobcentres to accept job vacancy advertisements only in those cases, where jobs are advertised at legal minimum rates set by wages councils, where details of the job are given and where hours to be worked are clearly stated; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: Jobcentres have existing instructions that, where vacancies are notified for occupations affected by wages orders, rates must be not less that those specified.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will prepare standard job vacancy advertisements, reflecting good practice in terms of offering legal rates of pay, details of work to be undertaken and hours to be worked, for display in jobcentres; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: Vacancies for display in jobcentres are recorded in a standard format. I am satisfied with existing arrangements.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Hospital Charges

Mr. Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what sums were collected by each health authority from non-United Kingdom residents for hospital charges in 1985-86 and 1986-87; and what is the estimated net sum after deduction of costs of administration.

Mrs. Currie: The table shows the income under section 121 of the National Health Service Act 1977 recorded in the annual accounts of health authorities for 1985-86 and 1986-87. This income is shown net of any sums written off in the relevant year, including those due from earlier years; in some cases the result is a negative figure (figures shown in brackets in table). Such figures represent adjustments to the accrued income reported in prior years and not actual outflows of funds.

No deduction has been made for the cost of administration. The Department has no specific overall information on the administrative costs of collecting section 121 income which will vary from authority to authority.

The table does not include income received under sections 65 and 66 of the Act from overseas residents treated as private patients.

Leicester General Hospital (Renal Extension)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list representations received on the partial opening of the renal extension at Leicester general hospital.

Mrs. Currie: I have received no representations other than those from the hon. Member. The new kidney unit at Leicester general hospital is expected to open later this year. The opening was always intended to be staged. Twenty-four of the 30 available beds should open initially as soon as the district is able to recruit the necessary staff; the others will follow according to workload demand. Trent RHA, of which Leicester is a part, already provides a higher level of renal service than the national guidelines recommend. No separate representation has been received.

Hospital Beds

Dr. Owen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the proportion of all hospital beds occupied by patients who are (a) over 65 years and under 75 years and (b) over 75 years.

Mrs. Currie: The estimated figures requested for National Health Service hospitals in England in 1985—the latest year for which information is available—are (a) 18 per cent. and (b) 34 per cent. respectively. Further information on the use of National Health Service resources by age group is available in DHSS Statistical Bulletin 4/87, a copy of which has been placed in the Library.

Iatrogenic Illness

Dr. Owen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people in England and Wales were admitted to hospital as a result of iatrogenic illness in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mrs. Currie: The information requested about iatrogenic illness is not collected centrally. Such figures as are available, which relate to discharges or deaths are given in the attached table.

Estimated number of discharges (including deaths in hospital) of in-patients with diagnosis as shown, NHS hospitals, England 1984-85

	1984	1985
Post-operative infection—main diagnosis	7,120	6,890
Post-operative infection—subsidiary diagnosis	9,090	8,720
Aplastic anaemia—main diagnosis	3,290	2,820

Road Accident Casualties

Dr. Owen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list for each year since 1979 the number of road accident casualties admitted to hospital, the average length of hospital stay, and the cost to the National Health Service.

Mrs. Currie: The total cost to NHS hospitals of treating casualties arising from all road traffic accidents is estimated to be £121 million for 1985. I regret that accurate figures for previous years are not available. The other information requested is given in the table.

Estimated number of in-patient discharges[1] and mean duration of stay of road traffic accident cases in NHS hospitals, England, 1979 to 1985

Year	Estimated number	Mean duration of stay (days)
1979	66,750	[2] 12·4
1980	65,070	[2] 12·6
1981	63,090	[2] 11·9
1982	63,690	12·0

Local Office Project

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the additional cost to the Government of contracting out work on the local office project to private consultants; and what information he has on rates of pay of those employed by Computer Sciences Corporation and Arthur Andersen and Company by reference to those of equivalent staff of his Department.

Mr. Portillo: The cost of the development work on the local office project being performed by private consultants is being met from within the Department's existing budgets. Although scales of fees have been negotiated between the Department and the two firms, it is not possible to provide meaningful comparisons with Civil Service scales, because of insufficient Civil Service staff with equivalent skills and ability to deliver to the same timescale, and the different terms of service which will apply.

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps have been taken, or will be taken, to ensure that the work carried out by the Computer Sciences Corporation and Arthur Andersen and Company will be of the required quality to meet the needs of his Department.

Mr. Portillo: All local office project work performed by Computer Science Corporation and Arthur Andersen is subject to the established quality assurance procedures. These are designed to ensure that every product is delivered according to prior specification and will meet the user's requirements.

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what consultations have taken place with the Civil Service unions on the contracting out of work on the local office project.

Mr. Portillo: Civil Service unions have been regularly consulted and informed on contracting out work on the local office project at both departmental and local level.

Maternity Services

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services which health authorities have implemented the recommendations of the Maternity Services Advisory Committee.

Mrs. Currie: The reports of the Maternity Services Advisory Committee made a number of recommendations. Most districts have implemented the advice given or have plans to do so. Where districts have not fully implemented the recommendations, they have concluded that existing practices are already working well.

Following publication of the reports in 1985, the Department sought information from health authorities on a number of issues arising from the reports with a view to establishing a base from which to measure progress on implementation through the accountability review process. A copy of the findings of this exercise has been placed in the Library.

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many subject access requests under the terms of the Data Protection Act his Department has received; what was his estimate of this number; whether he is reconsidering the subject access fee charged by his Department as a result; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: Up to 1 March 1988, 270 subject access requests had been received. It had been estimated that the Department might receive some 200,000 requests per year. At present the Department does not charge a fee.

Hospital Car Service

Sir Peter Emery: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list those health authorities which reimburse drivers in the hospital car service at a rate below that agreed by the General Council for National Health Service staff.

Mrs. Currie: This information is not held centrally.

Alarms

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will introduce a Bill to enable local authorities to charge a fee to private residents for the connection of their private alarms to local authorities control centres; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: No. Local social services authorities already have powers to charge for the connection of private alarms to their control centres. The powers of housing authorities to charge for connection in these circumstances are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment.

One-Parent Families

Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the number of one-parent families in the United Kingdom recorded by the most recent statistics; and what was the number recorded in 1971.

Mr. Portillo: Comparable information for the whole of the United Kingdom is not available. But within Great Britain there were an estimated 940,000 one-parent families in 1984 which is the lastest year for which the statistics are available. The estimated number in 1971 was 570,000. The definition used, and other particulars, are contained in an article in "Population Trends No. 45 (Autumn 1986)", a copy of which is in the Library.

Attendance Allowance (Orkney and Shetland)

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how many people in (a) Shetland and (b) Orkney receive a retirement pension combined with the higher rate attendance allowance;

(2) how many people in (a) Shetland and (b) Orkney receive widow's benefit combined with a higher rate attendance allowance.

Mr. Scott: I regret that the information is not available.

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people in (a) Shetland and (b) Orkney receive invalidity benefit combined with higher rate attendance allowance.

Mr. Scott: Two and five, respectively, at 2 March 1988.

Abortions

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give a breakdown of the numbers of abortions performed in the Northern regional health authority at gestation of (a) 18, (b) 19, (c) 20, (d) 21, (e) 22 and (f) 23 or more weeks, by the district health authority in which they were performed; and if he will express the figures as a rate per thousand women in their main child-bearing years in that district health authority.

Mr. Newton: No. Abortion statistics by district health authority of termination are not released for reasons of maintaining confidentiality.

Single Payments

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the average monthly expenditure on single payments between August and October 1985.

Mr. Portillo: The average monthly, that is four-weekly, expenditure on single payments in the 12-week period ending on 22 October 1985 was £24,473,644.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will provide for each office of his Department in west Yorkshire, grouped according to the main conurbations, information on single payments for the years 1983 to 1988 in the form of his reply of 15 February, Official Report, columns 503-504.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 29 February 1988]: I have placed in the Library tables giving the information requested.

Cook-chill System (Wakefield)

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has considered the request of Wakefield district health authority for an investigation into the value for money exercise on the introduction of cook-chill system for providing food; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: Wakefield health authority's resolution asks the Secretary of State

"to institute a public enquiry into the lengthy decision making process prior to the implementation of the cook-chill system of catering in Wakefield".
Its request is still under consideration.

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has received relating to (a) the transportation of solid meal components in a refrigerated state and (b) fluids being transported warm, to wards in the Wakefield health authority area under the cook-chill system; if any assessment has been made as to whether this practice conforms to the procedures recommended by his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: I have received no information of the type suggested. Any assessment as to whether such practices conform to the principles contained in the Department's guidelines is primarily a matter for the Wakefield health authority advised as necessary by the Yorkshire regional health authority.

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has received the report of Wakefield district health authority on the annual deficit of £263,000 arriving from the introduction of the cook-chill system; if he will make provision to cover this deficit; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: I have received no such report. There is no question of central funding being made available to meet the costs of the introduction of cook-chill. That is a matter for local management.

Regional Secure Units

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether the research study on the regional secure units funded by his Department has been completed; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: A survey of regional secure services funded by the Department has been carried out. A report is being prepared.

Marta Owen

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what recent steps he has taken to monitor the progress of the closure of Swinton house hospital, Salford, and of the provision of care for Marta Owen; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: Arrangements for the closure of Swinton house and the relocation of its patients, including Marta Owen, are a matter for the Salford health authority in conjunction with the North Western regional health authority. Where appropriate, interim provision will be made for patients leaving Swinton house until long-term arrangements for their care are settled.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the percentage loss in income in the Houghton and Washington area due to housing benefit reductions for those households earning (a) £60 per week, (b) £80 per week and (c) £150 per week.

Mr. Portillo: I regret that the information is not available.

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services, further to his reply to the hon. Member for Kensington, Official Report, 4 February, columns 737-42, and to the figures for the lone parent earning £60 per week in table 'D', whether one-parent benefit is to be excluded from set income for the new housing benefit calculation; and what rate of lone parent premium was used for his calculations.

Mr. Scott: I regret my reply given to my hon. Friend on 4 February at columns 737-42 should be amended as follows: Table D showing the new system from April 1988 for a single person with gross weekly earnings of £60 and children aged 4 and 6 gross should indicate £81·95 in net weekly spending power with no rent or rate rebates.

One parent benefit is taken into account for calculating housing benefit. The lone-parent premium used was £8·60.

NHS Staff

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish a table showing how many (a) district general managers, (b) consultants, (c) nursing staff and (d) domestic staff in the National Health Service are (i) members of ethnic minorities and (ii) women in each district health authority in England and Wales; and what is the total number of people in each category.

Mrs. Currie: Information about the numbers of staff employed in each health district in England in the groups and categories mentioned is not readily available and to provide it would entail a special exercise which would be disproportionate in terms of cost. The NHS is an equal opportunities employer and health authorities have the obligation of ensuring that policies to this end are implemented.

Hospitals (Ministerial Visits)

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many hospitals in Birmingham have received official visits from Ministers since 11 June 1987.

Mrs. Currie: None. An invitation has been accepted and a visit is planned to take place later this spring.

Emphysema

Mr. Lofthouse: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has now received the Industrial Advisory Council's report on its investigation into the cause of emphysema among coal miners; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: We have received the report of the Industrial Injuries Advisory Council's investigation into bronchitis and emphysema. It is receiving careful consideration and a statement will be made shortly.

Benefits

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his latest estimate of the expenditure savings (a) during 1988-89 and (b) after the end of transitional protection, as a result of the benefit changes to be implemented in April; and if he will also show how much of the savings is due to (a) the 20 per cent. minimum rates contribution, (b) housing benefit changes,

(c) the new capital rule for housing benefit and family rebate and (d) the replacement of single and other payments by the social fund.

Mr. Scott: We estimate that the structural changes to the benefit system in April 1988 will involve additional public expenditure in 1988-89 of some £430 million compared with a straight uprating of the old schemes; there will also be a saving of some £490 million on rate rebates, which are not classified as public expenditure. It is not possible to make realistic estimates of the effect after the end of transitional protection, which will not be for several years.

The saving from requiring householders to pay 20 per cent. of their domestic rates bill, net of the cost of the compensation for this liability built into the income support, housing benefit and family credit rates, is some £80 million. The overall saving from the housing benefit changes is some £650 million; of this, roughly £80 million is attributable to the new capital rule.

Gross expenditure on loans and grants from the social fund will be broadly in line with expected outturn on single payments in the current year.

Eye Tests

Dame Jill Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the average cost of an eye test for a hospital ophthalmic out-patient.

Mr. Newton: I regret that this information is not collected centrally.

Electorates

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give the average number of electors per constituency in (a) the United Kingdom, (b) England, (c) Scotland, (d) Wales and (e) Northern Ireland at the latest available date.

Mrs. Currie: The information requested is as follows:

Area	Total number of electors on the 1987 register	Average number of electors per constituency
United Kingdom	43,666,375	67,179
England	38,393,203	69,585
Scotland	3,994,893	55,485
Wales	2,175,168	57,241
Northern Ireland	1,103,111	64,889

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list in the Official Report those constituencies in the United Kingdom which have electorates greater than 75,000 and those which have electorates less than 40,000 at the latest available date, showing in each case the number of electors.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Service if he will list the 12 largest constituencies by area in the United Kingdom, showing their electorates at the latest available date.

Mrs. Currie: The information requested is as follows:

Parliamentary constituency	[1] Hectares	Electors on the 1987 register
Ross, Cromarty and Skye	954,680	52,808
Inverness, Nairn and Lochaber	870,708	67,336
Caithness and Sutherland	788,297	31,519
Argyll and Bute	681,362	49,272

NI Fund

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the most recent advice he has received from the Government Actuary as to the minimum target balance of the national insurance fund as a proportion of annual benefit expenditure.

Mr. Portillo: The Government Actuary stated in 1983 that the national insurance fund's minimum target balance should be one sixth of the year's estimated benefit expenditure. (Report on the draft Social Security Benefit Up-Rating Order 1983. Cmnd. 8969.) This has never been a fixed target, but a prudent limit below which the balance should not be allowed to fall.

Poverty Levels

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has as to the number and percentage of people in ethnic minorities who are below the poverty level; what are the comparable figures for those who are not members of ethnic minorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: This Government, like Governments, do not accept that a poverty line can be drawn. No information on ethnic minorities is contained in the national census, the annual family expenditure survey or DHSS administrative statistics.

Income Support Scheme

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether, further to his answer of 15 February to the hon. Member for Dunfermline, East, Official Report, column 492, he will break down the £420 million extra expenditure under the income support scheme in 1988-89 into expenditure incurred by transitional protection and expenditure not incurred by transitional protection; and in each case how much of this expenditure is attributable to compensation for the 20 per cent. rates contribution.

Mr. Scott [holding answer 3 March 1988]: Of the £420 million, extra expenditure on transitional protection will be £200 million and that on structural changes £220 million.

Extra expenditure on income support in 1988-89 to compensate for the 20 per cent. rates contribution will be £280 million. This relates entirely to the structural effect. However, in calculating the amount of benefit payable at the point of the change to income support, compensation for the rates contribution is also to be built into the supplementary benefit levels. But for this the cost of transitional protection would have been reduced by £70 million and the total additional expenditure in 1988-89 would have reduced from £420 million to £350 million.

Brighton Health Authority

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the number of student and pupil nurse training places in the Brighton health authority; and what level of expenditure was allocated for training purposes for each year since 1979.

Mr. Newton [holding answer 4 March 1988]: I am sorry that I cannot give the hon. Member the information he seeks, since it is not held centrally. Details about the number of student and pupil nurse training places and the level of expenditure for training purposes for each year since 1979 should be available from Brighton health authority, and the hon. Member may wish to contact the district chairman.

Myalgic Encephalomyelitis

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what steps have been taken to ensure that officials of his Department have an adequate awareness of myalgic encephalomyelitis when assessing appropriate benefit claims:

(2) what training is given to staff in his Department to help them to identify myalgic encephalomyelitis sufferers claiming sickness or other benefits to which they may be entitled.

Mr. Scott [holding answer 4 March 1988]: For incapacity benefits, entitlement depends on a medical opinion that a claimant is incapable of work; for disability benefits there are medical criteria which are related to the effect of the disabling condition rather than its cause. People can thus qualify for these benefits even if the specific cause of their symptoms cannot readily be identified and the Departmental officials who deal with their claims are not therefore required to have a knowledge of particular diagnostic conditions.

DEFENCE

Services (Recruitment Guidelines)

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what rules or guidelines govern recruitment to the armed services in respect of persons (a) with convictions, (b) convictions of murder and (c) on parole.

Mr. Freeman: When considering applications from individuals who have been convicted of an offence the services are bound by the Rehabilitation of Offenders Act 1974. The Act lays down, according to sentence passed, those convictions which can and cannot be deemed to be "spent" under the Act and if the designated period of time has elapsed since the individual was convicted it is not necessary to advise the recruiting staff of it. Therefore, a candidate could quite legitimately enter the armed forces having at some time in the past been convicted of an offence.

Even in cases where a conviction is not spent, entry is not automatically refused. Recruiting staff many, after giving due consideration to the offence committed, the individual's conduct since and any other relevant information they have before them, decide to accept the candidate. However, if the individual is still subject to any form of supervision order, it is unlikely he or she would be accepted; this would include an individual who had been convicted of murder and was released on licence.

Members' Visits

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish in the Official Report the rules governing visits to sites within his responsibility by right hon. and hon. Members; when they were last updated; and why.

Mr. Freeman: Right hon. and hon. Members may by mutual agreement with local armed forces units visit defence establishments within their constituency; and similar arrangements may be made for Front Bench defence spokesmen in respect of defence establishments outside their constituency. Hon. and right hon. Members may also visit defence establishments as part of all-party parliamentary groups whose plans are drawn to the attention of hon. and right hon. Members.

These arrangements are intended to assist hon. and right hon. Members in the conduct of their parliamentary duties, while minimising disruption to the normal conduct of military activities and maintaining the political impartiality of the armed forces.

Fylingdales

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make it his policy to organise within the next few months a parliamentary visit to Fylingdales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: I am always prepared to consider suggestions from hon. Members for visits to defence establishments by groups of parliamentarians. I shall bear the hon. Member's interest in mind.

D Notice Committee

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 12 February, Official Report, column 387-8, what action has been taken as a result of the permanent under secretary in his Department drawing the letter from the vice chairman of the D Notice Committee, Mr. J. M. Ramsden, dated 21 January, to the attention of those in the Government concerned with the relevant matters; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Younger: My ministerial colleagues and I have noted the contents of Mr. Ramsden's letter of 2 February. We are pleased that the media side of the Defence Press and Broadcasting Committee had decided to continue to participate in the D Notice system, on which the Government place great value.

Administrative and Executive Grades

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which administrative and executive grades are in receipt of special pay additions; where they are located; and what are the total numbers by grade at each location.

Mr. Sainsbury: Special pay additions for administrative and executive grades have been introduced at AWE Aldermaston and Burghfield. The grades involved are administrative assistant, administrative officer, executive officer and higher executive officer. It is not the practice to disclose details of the number or deployment of staff employed in these areas.

Psychological Warfare

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many members if the armed forces and civil servants from his Department were engaged in psychological warfare in Northern Ireland each year from 1972 to 1987.

Mr. Freeman: It is not the policy to comment on operational matters.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many members of the armed forces and civil servants from his Department were trained in psychological warfare in each year from 1972 to 1987 in England, in the United States of America, or in both.

Mr. Freeman: The Ministry of Defence no longer uses the term "psychological warfare". In common with the rest of NATO, the Ministry of Defence uses the term "psychological operations" and runs courses intended to familiarise Ministry of Defence personnel with the background to and the concept of psychological operations. Records of Ministry of Defence personnel attending psychological operations training courses are only held from 1983. The figures for those personnel attending such courses in the United Kingdom are as follows:

Year	Numbers Attending
1983-84	[1]11
1984-85	12
1985-86	14

[1] Including one civil servant.

A small number of armed forces personnel have also attended psychological operations training courses run in the USA. Records of numbers of such personnel exist from 1982 only, and are shown below:

1985	0
1986	1
1987	3

Mr. Colin Wallace

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence in what capacity Mr. Colin Wallace served in the Ulster Defence Regiment whilst a senior information officer in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Freeman: Mr. Wallace served as a part time 2nd lieutenant in 1 (County Antrim) UDR.

Captain Fred Holroyd

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether Captain (retired) Fred Holroyd was offered any other post in military intelligence in Northern Ireland or elsewhere before he was medically downgraded in July 1975.

Mr. Freeman: It is not our normal practice to discuss the postings of individual officers.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what basis Captain (retired) Fred Holroyd was referred for medical examination at the military wing of the Musgrave Park hospital, Belfast, in 1975, and later transferred for medical examination at the Royal Victoria hospital, Netley, Southampton, in 1975; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: It is not my Department's policy to discuss the details of individual medical cases which are medical in confidence.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answers of 11 December, Official Report, columns 311 and 312, what representations have been received from Captain (retired) Fred Holroyd, his legal representative, or from his civilian doctors, for access to his medical records; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: I have nothing further to add to the reply I gave to the honourable member on 11 December 1987, at column 312.

Vanguard (Lost Components)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to the answer of 26 February, Official Report, column 378, (1) how each of the various pieces of Vanguard submarine lost overboard on 5 to 6 February were secured to the deck of the ship;

(2) what progress has been made in the attempts to recover the five Vanguard submarine sections lost on 5 to 6 February; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: Until the results of the inquiry into the incidents are known, I have nothing to add to my statements to the House on 15 and 26 February, at columns 448-9 and 378-80 respectively.

Complaints (Redress of Grievance)

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of Defence how many complaints seeking redress of grievance have been made in each of the last five years; how many have been successful; how many complaints related to injustice; and in how many of the cases there was a request for a payment because of injuries for which a legal action might have been brought but for section 10 of the Crown Proceedings Act 1979.

Mr. Freeman: Submissions for redress of grievances made under the terms of the service discipline Acts may be dealt with by commanding officers, or at any of the higher levels of command, the service boards of the Defence Council. No central records are kept of the total number of submissions made. However, information relating to submissions considered by the service boards is as follows:

Year	Number of submissions considered	Number in which redress was granted in whole or in part
1984	33	8

Year	Number of submissions considered	Number in which redress was granted in whole or in part
1985	61	25
1986	62	13
1988 (to date)	6	—

Notes:
1. Figures only available from 1985 for submissions to the Admiralty Board.
2. Five submissions are still under consideration.

All complaints relate to what the complainant considers to be be injustice. As far as can be established from available records, four submissions considered by the service boards in the last five years have requested payments in circumstances where, but for the operation of section 10 of the Crown Proceedings Act 1947 a legal action might have been pursued.

Cemeteries

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) when the War Graves Commission last inspected the graves in the Woodgrange Park cemetery in the London borough of Newham; and how many complaints have been directed by the commission to the cemetery owners;

(2) what measures are adopted by his Department to ensure that cemetery owners acting as agents of the Commonwealth War Graves Commission maintain proper standards of care;

(3) if he will list those cemeteries in London which charge for maintaining war graves and those cemeteries which do not;

(4) if any charges have been paid to the current owners of the Woodgrange Park cemetery for maintaining war graves; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: These are matters for the Commonwealth War Graves Commission and I have asked the director general to write to the hon. Member.

Ex-Marine Martin Kettrick

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will outline the procedure that was followed regarding the complaint of ex-Marine Martin Kettrick for redress of grievance; who assessed the complaint; and how the opinion of Martin Kettrick was presented.

Mr. Freeman: As an ex-member of the Royal Marines, Mr. Kettrick submitted his complaint directly through the Department of the Commandant General Royal Marines. In accordance with normal practice, information concerning the complaint, its origins, and all relevant circumstances was assembled by the relevent secretariat division for presentation to the Admiralty Board. The opinion of Mr. Kettrick, as expressed in the full text of his complaint, formed part of that presentation. The case was considered at length by the Admiralty Board and a decision then taken on behalf of the Defence Council.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether, in the consideration of the case of ex-Marine Martin Kettrick, the fact that section 10 of the Crown Proceedings Act 1947 has now been abolished was taken into account; what assessment was made of the actuarial level of the pensions that Martin Kettrick received from the Army in relation to what he might have received had he been successful in a civil court; and if there was any assessment of the possibility that Martin Kettrick's injuries arose from the negligence of others.

Mr. Freeman: The Crown Proceedings (Armed Forces) Act 1987 is non-retrospective and section 10 of the Crown Proceedings Act 1947 remains a bar in Mr. Kettrick's case to a civil action in the courts in which questions of negligence and level of damages would otherwise have been determined. Nevertheless, in considering Mr. Kettrick's case full account was taken, and assessments made, of these and all other relevant factors including the value of the pension and other benefits which he continues to receive under the no-fault system available to members of the armed forces.

Maritime Tactical Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if Britain's maritime tactical nuclear weapons are all assigned to NATO; and whether they can be withdrawn from NATO command to be used under national command;

(2) what is the strategy for employment of Britain's maritime tactical nuclear weapons.

Mr. Ian Stewart: All the United Kingdom's nuclear forces are committed to NATO, in support of the strategy of flexible response, although they remain at all times under the control of the British Government and are capable of being employed independently when supreme national interests are at stake.

National Joint Ocean Surveillance Information Centre

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if the National Joint Ocean Surveillance Information Centre is designed to be capable of operating as a back-up to the United States ocean surveillance information system;

(2) when the National Joint Ocean Surveillance Information Centre first became operational;

(3) what is the number of (a) Royal Navy personnel, (b) United States military personnel, (c) United States civilian personnel and (d) British civilian personnel assigned to the United Kingdom National Joint Ocean Surveillance Information Centre.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I have nothing to add to the answer I gave the hon. Member on 14 December 1987, at column 411.

Eurogroup Defence Ministers

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when and where the next meeting of Eurogroup Defence Ministers is scheduled to take place; if he is planning to attend the meeting; and if he will make a statement on the agenda for the meeting.

Mr. Ian Stewart: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence will attend the next Eurogroup meeting which takes place on 25 May. A range of items will be discussed.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Income Tax

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the cost of reducing the higher tax rate of 60 per cent. to (a) 50 per cent., (b) 45 per cent., and (c) 40 per cent. in 1988-89.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The direct revenue costs, in a full year at 1988-89 levels of income, of reducing the higher tax rates to the levels specified are given in the table below:

Top rate of tax Percentage	Direct revenue cost £ million
50	530
40	1,650

The estimates are based on projections of the 1984-85 survey of personal incomes in line with the forecasts in the Autumn Statement and are therefore provisional. The costs assume indexation of the current income tax bands and allowances to 1988-89 levels according to the statutory provisions. The estimates assume that the wife's earnings election is made where it is beneficial, but no other allowance is made for possible changes in taxpayers' behaviour.

Personal Ownership

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the growth of personal ownership in Britain since 1979.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer which I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Darlington (Mr. Fallon) on 29 October, at column 435.

VAT

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information he has as to the date by which the final verdict of the European Court is likely to be known in respect of the case between the European Commission and the United Kingdom Government in respect of value added tax zero-rating policy on domestic and non-domestic construction work.

Mr. Lilley: The European Court of Justice has not yet given an indication of a likely date for delivery of its judgment; best estimates suggest that it may not deliver judgment before April or May at the earliest.

Forestry

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received on tax incentives for forestry.

Mr. Norman Lamont: My right hon. Friend has received a number of representations.

Shareholders

Mr. Butler: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information he has regarding the number of shareholders within the United Kingdom.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer which I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Darlington (Mr. Fallon) on 29 October, at column 435.

Luncheon Vouchers (Civil Servants)

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the annual cost of providing weekly luncheon vouchers of (a) £5, (b) £6 and (c) £7 per employee for each civil servant in the London pay area; and what is his estimate of the cost of similar services for all civil servants outside London.

Mr. Brooke: The table below gives estimates, excluding administrative costs, based on the numbers of civil servants at 1 January 1987.

£ million

Pay area	Weekly luncheon vouchers
	£5 per employee	£6 per employee	£7 per employee
London	32·3	38·8	45·3
Outside London	124·1	148·9	173·8

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will consider providing luncheon vouchers as a means of topping up any pay offer in response to the 1988 pay claim by the National Union of Civil and Public Servants; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: No.

Britoil

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish in the Official Report the text of his letter of 29 February to the hon. Member for Linlithgow (Mr. Dalyell) about Britoil, referred to in the Official Report, column 1168, on 3 March.

Mr. Lawson: The text of the letter is as follows:

"In my statement to the House on 23 February I said that the details of the arrangement which the Government had reached with BP were set out in an exchange of letters between BP and the Treasury, and that I was placing copies of those letters in the Library. In response to your subsequent question, I referred you to the letter written by BP.

After my statement, you raised a point of order to the effect that the undertakings to which I had referred were not set out in the documents. You suggested that this was a gross abuse of the House. Your point of order referred only to the letter from Sir Peter Middleton and not to the letter from Sir Peter Walters, which was of course the letter to which I had referred in my reply to you and which contained BP's undertakings. Both letters were, in fact, deposited in the Library at the same time, and I assume that you overlooked the letter from Sir Peter Walters when you went to inspect the documents.

I recognise that your accusation of 'Ministerial abuse of the House' was made in good faith; but it was a very serious charge indeed and one wholly without foundation. I am sure you will recognise that it is only proper that you should set the record straight, in Hansard, by a further point of order."

Taxation

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether, in the manner of the answer given on 1 July 1986, Official Report, column 509, he will publish a table showing his estimate for the current financial year of the numbers of people who will be liable to pay income tax, higher rate tax and employee's contributions to national insurance, divided into the main categories on the basis of the combined rates of deduction from income for which they will be liable.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 15 February 1988]: The table gives estimates of employees liable to income tax and national insurance contributions (NIC) in 1987-88 by the combined marginal rate of tax and NIC. Cases where the main source of income derives from self-employment have been excluded. Estimates are derived from projections of the 1984-85 survey of personal incomes which does not contain details of NIC. These have been imputed from earnings levels on the simplifying assumption that all employees are contracted in to the earnings-related part of the national insurance scheme and do not pay the reduced rate for married women optants. Other estimates could only be produced at disproportionate cost.

Employees liable to income tax and NIC by marginal rate

Combined Tax and NIC Marginal rate per cent.	No. of employees Thousands	[1]Taxable Income £ per annum	Earnings of individual £ per week
7	100	0	65-100
9	100	0	100-295
27	600	1-17,900	Under 39
32	1,400	1-17,900	39-65
34	2,400	1-17,900	65-100
36	12,100	1-17,900	100-295
[2]27	1,100	1-17,900	above 295
[3]40	400	17,901-20,400	all ranges
[3]45	300	20,401-25,400	all ranges
[3]50	100	25,401-33,300	all ranges
[3]55	100	33,301-41,200	all ranges
[3]60	100	above 41,200	all ranges
All	19,400	—	—

[1] For married couples taxable income is the combined income of the husband and wife except where there is a wife's earnings election, when the wife's earnings are treated separately as her taxable income.
[2] Above the upper earnings limit (£295 per week) for National Insurance contributions, the marginal rate of NIC is zero.
[3] For higher rate taxpayers the marginal rate of NIC is zero, except for a few cases where the wife's earnings are below the upper limit or much of the income comes from investments.

Revenue Contributions

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the annual receipts derived from payment of (a) income tax, (b) capital gains tax, (c) natonal insurance and (d) value added tax paid by the top (i) 1 per cent. and (ii) 5 per cent. and (iii) 10 per cent. of earners and the bottom (1) 1 per cent. (2) 5 per cent. and (3) 10 per cent. of earners.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 23 February 1988]: I regret that information is not available in the form requested and could be produced only at disproportionate cost. However, the Central Statistical Office published an analysis of the distribution of taxes and benefits by households in the July 1987 edition of "Economic Trends."

Licensed Premises (Sports Centres)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what incentives are offered through tax rebates and tax concessions to licensed premises within sports centres both in the public and private sector to encourage the reinvestment of profits in enhanced sporting facilities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 3 March 1988]: There are no special reliefs or concessions for licensed premises within sports centres and normal tax rules apply.

Sole Traders

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will take steps to waive the earnings limit for 714s certificates for those sole traders starting a business with assistance from the enterprise allowance scheme.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 3 March 1988]: The 714s certificate was introduced in 1982 to enable those who did not qualify for a full exemption certificate because of a history of unemployment to obtain limited exemption from deduction at source on their earnings. It is difficult to see why the recently unemployed who receive financial assistance under the enterprise allowance scheme should be given a further advantage over the recently unemployed who do not.

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when the earnings limit of £150 a week, excluding the cost of materials, was set in relation to sole traders applying for a 714s certificate; what the figure would now be if it had been increased in line with rises in average earnings; and what plans he has to raise the limit.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 3 March 1988]: The £150 limit came into effect on 1 December 1982 and, if increased in line with average earnings, would now stand at £215. I have no plans at present to raise the limit.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Irish Army Air Corps

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how often Irish Army Air Corps aircraft have landed at Aldergrove airport in each of the last three years; what are the reasons for these landings; and to what extent this practice has developed as a result of the Anglo-Irish Agreement.

Mr. Stanley: It is not the practice to give details of flight movements at military establishments.

However, use of Aldergrove airport by the Irish Army Air Corps is essentially in the context of the Anglo-Irish Agreement.

Ian Richard Thain

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland on what date his Department learned that Ian Richard Thain had applied for or was being offered parole, and by what agency his Department was informed.

Mr. Stanley: My Department was first informed by the Ministry of Defence on 13 February 1986 that Private Thain's petition for early release on parole had been lodged by his solicitor.

My Department was informed by the Home Office on 13 November 1986 of Private Thain's forthcoming release from prison.

RUC (Photographs)

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will place in the Library any guidelines issued to the Royal Ulster Constabulary concerning the release of official photographs for media use.

Mr. Stanley: I understand that the instructions on the use of official photographs are contained in the RUC code, an internal document for police use only. Any question of releasing these instructions would be a matter for the Chief Constable of the Royal Ulster Constabulary.

Security Statistics

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if security statistics for Northern Ireland for the second half of 1987 are now available, together with details of persons charged with terrorist-type offences and convictions for scheduled offences for the year.

Mr. Stanley [holding answer 2 March 1988]: Yes, the statistics together with those since 1971 are as follows:

Statistics on Security

PART I

Statistics of Terrorist Activity

Yearly totals for 1971-1987

Statistics for terrorist activity comprise the following:

(i) Number of shooting incidents.
(ii) Number of explosions.
(iii) Number of bombs and devices neutralised.
(iv) Weight of explosives in bombs and devices neutralised.
(v) Number of armed robberies and amount stolen.
(vi) Number of malicious fires.
(vii) Number of deaths and injuries of RUC/RUC 'R', Army and civilians.

PART II

Statistics of Security Forces' Activity

Yearly totals for 1971-1987

Statistics for security forces' activity comprise the following:

(i) Number of houses searched.
(ii) Number of weapons, pounds of explosives and rounds of ammunition found.
(iii) Number of people charged with terrorist type offences (murder, attempted murder, explosives offences, firearms offences, armed robbery and other offences relating to the security situation, for example, arson, membership of illegal organisation and so on.

Notes on the Tables:

1. The offence classifications are based on those used by the Crown and Peace Office in its annual return.
2. The tables relate to persons convicted at the Belfast Crown Court. This covers all scheduled offences tried on indictment.
3. Some jury trials are included in cases where the Attorney-General certified out of the scheduled mode of trial, that is non-terrorist serious offences.
4. Where a person had been convicted of more than one offence only the most serious or that which received the longest sentence is recorded in the statistics.

RUC Special Branch

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what has been the total number of police officers and civilians serving in, or responsible to, the RUC special branch in each year from 1968 to to the latest available date.

Mr. Stanley [holding answer 29 February 1988]: In the particular operational circumstances of Northern Ireland this information is confidential.

Diplock Courts

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many prisoners currently serving sentences in Northern Ireland have been convicted in Diplock courts; and how many (a) Catholics and (b) Protestants have been convicted and acquitted in Diplock courts.

Mr. Stanley [holding answer 26 February 1988]: The only information readily available indicates that on 1 February there were 1,155 prisoners in Northern Ireland who had been convicted of scheduled offences, although in a proportion of cases, where there was no connection with terrorism, they would have been dealt with by normal jury trial. Five hundred and eighty six of these gave their religion as Roman Catholic; and 549 as Protestants. There were 20 "others".

Figures are not available showing the religious persuasion of all those convicted in the Diplock courts, or of those who were acquitted.

Firearms

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list in the Official Report such information as is available to him as to (a) the make, (b) the type and (c) the calibre of the firearms used by terrorist organisations in Northern Ireland during the last five years.

Mr. Stanley [holding answer 26 February 1988]: The following information can be made available:

Types of weapon used by terrorist organisations in Northern Ireland in the last five years

Pistols
Revolvers
Rifles
Heavy machine guns
Sub machine guns
General purpose machine guns
Shotguns

Most common calibres of the firearms used by terrorist organisations in Northern Ireland in the last five years

1. ·22 LR (Long Rifle)
2. 7·65 mm
3. 9 mm Short
4. 9 mm Parabellum
5. ·380
6. ·38 Smith and Wesson
7. ·38 Spl (Special)
8. ·357 Magnum
9. ·30 M1 Carbine
10. 7·62 × 39 mm
11. 7·62 NATO
12. 12 Gauge Shotgun
13. ·223 (5·56 mm)

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many legally held (a) shotguns, (b) rifles, (c) handguns and (d) other firearms were stolen from their civilian owners in Northern Ireland in each of the last five years, where the owners were not members of the part-time Ulster Defence Regiment or Royal Ulster Constabulary Reserve; and if he has any information as to how many were stolen by paramilitary and terrorist organisations.

Mr. Stanley [holding answer 26 February 1988]: Information in the form requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many persons are known to have been killed in Northern Ireland in each of the last five years by persons who were using (a) a shotgun, (b) a hand gun, (c) a rifle and (d) another firearm which was legally held by the person using it, not being a member of the security forces; and of these deaths how many (i) were the victims of a relation or (ii) died during the commission of another crime.

Mr. Stanley [holding answer 26 February 1988]: The information requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

ENVIRONMENT

Nottingham (Housing Waiting List)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) further to his answer of 22nd February, what changes have been necessitated in the calculation of indicators for Nottingham as a result of the changes in Nottingham's housing waiting list;

(2) when he expects discussions between his Department and the Housing Corporation regarding changes in the Nottingham housing waiting list to be completed; and if he will make a statement as to the likely effects.

Mr. Waldegrave: As I explained in my earlier answer, waiting list figures are not used in the housing needs index. Discussions of the calculations and other indicators for Nottingham have, however, been concluded and the city's latest housing needs index score has been increased. The corrected figures will be taken into account in future decisions about the allocation of the Housing Corporation's programme; the error had no bearing on allocations to be made for 1988-89.

St. George's Hospital, Hyde Park

Mr. Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Chipping Barnet, Official Report, 23 February, column 125, why it is no longer his policy that the former St. George's hospital building, Hyde Park, should be restored and used in accordance with the decision expressed by his predecessor in December 1982; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: As with all planning permissions, that given on appeal in 1982 in relation to St. George's hospital was an indication that the proposed works and use of the site were acceptable in planning terms. A planning approval is not an indication that other uses or works are unacceptable provided they, in turn, receive permission. As stated in my previous answer, it is for the owner of the site to decide which, if any, planning permissions and listed building consents should be implemented.

Palace of Westminster (Lavatories)

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will take steps to improve the standards of cleaning and maintenance of lavatories in the Palace of Westminster and associated buildings; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: If my hon. Friend is aware of any particular lavatory in the Palace of Westminster and associated buildings where he considers the standard of cleaning and maintenance to be inadequate, he should report this to the House authorities who carry out a daily inspection.

Inner Cities

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to encourage further investment in inner city revival.

Mr. Ridley: A new streamlined grant, city grant, will replace urban development grant and urban regeneration grant from 2 May. It will also incorporate private sector derelict land grant within the 57 urban priority areas.

City grant will be paid directly by my Department and will have simplified procedures aimed at giving quicker decisions. It will encourage developers to invest in projects providing jobs and homes in inner areas.

A consultation document inviting views on aspects of city grant is being issued today. I am placing copies in the Library.

Idle Land

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress has been made in bringing idle land owned by public bodies back into use.

Mr. Ridley: Since the registers of unused and underused land were first compiled in 1981, some 50,000 acres of this land has been removed from the registers because it has been sold or brought into use by the owners. This has been achieved through publicity, financial discipline and the use of the power to direct disposal. These measures will continue to be applied; and provisions to improve their effectiveness are contained in the Local Government Bill.

I consider that publication of information by the public bodies themselves about the unused and underused land they own would provide a significant incentive to the efficient management of land assets, which the recently published Audit Commission report indicated was needed in the case of local authorities. And it would contribute to the public accountability of the bodies concerned.

I therefore intend that public bodies should regularly publish this information and as a first step I will be consulting the local authority associations on how local authorities are to do so.

Landlord and Tenant Act 1987

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he proposes to implement parts II, III and V of the Landlord and Tenant Act 1987.

Mr. Waldegrave: We intend to bring parts II, III and IV of the Landlord and Tenant Act 1987 into force during April, and to bring part V into force by the summer recess.

Urban Development Corporations

Mr. Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has for new urban development corporations.

Mr. Ridley: I propose to establish a new urban development corporation in the lower Don Valley, Sheffield, and to extend the remit of the Merseyside development corporation to cover further areas of land in Liverpool and the Wirral. These proposals will be subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary orders.

The lower Don Valley has recently been studied by consultants. The UDC would cover approximately 2,000 acres to the north-east of the city centre and account for public expenditure of about £50 million over seven years. I shall bring forward specific boundary proposals shortly and reach decisions in the light of the view of local interests.

I shall appoint consultants to look at areas identified on Merseyside and to advise on their development potential and boundaries. The areas would cover approximately 800 acres and expenditure could be between £50 million and £90 million over eight or nine years. Decisions on boundaries will be taken in the light of the results of the consultants' study and of the views of local interests.

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list for each urban development corporation the parliamentary constituencies contained within or overlapped by it.

Mr. Trippier: The constituencies contained within or overlapped by each UDC in England are as follows:

Black Country Development Corporation
- West Bromwich West
- West Bromwich East
- Walsall North
- Walsall South
- Warley West
- Warley East

London Docklands Development Corporation
- Bethnal Green and Stepney
- Bow and Poplar
- Newham South
- Southwark and Bermondsey

Merseyside Development Corporation
- Birkenhead
- Bootle
- Liverpool Riverside
- Wallasey

Teeside Development Corporation
- Hartlepool
- Redcar
- Middlesbrough
- Stockton North
- Stockton South

Trafford Park Development Corporation
- Stretford
- Worsley
- Davyhulme
- Salford East
- Eccles

Tyne and Wear Development Corporation
- Tyne Bridge
- Newcastle upon Tyne East
- Wallsend
- Tynemouth

Jarrow

Housing Condition Surveys

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many housing condition surveys have been completed in England and Wales since 1970; what has been the cost of each at 1988 prices; and when he expects the next survey to be carried out.

Mrs. Roe: Four house condition surveys have been completed in England since 1970, but the sizes of sample and other arrangements have differed considerably in successive surveys. The extra-mural expenditure incurred in each survey was, at 1988 prices:

1976	431,000
1986	1,533,000

We plan to hold the next English house condition survey in 1991. House condition surveys in Wales are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Dog Licences

Miss Fookes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many representations he has received on dog licences.

Mr. Chope: Since publication of the Local Government Bill on 26 June 1987, some 1,700 letters have been received from hon. Members and others. In addition, the Department has received some 8,700 printed postcards or letters prepared by organisations concerned with dogs.

Crown Suppliers

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Tatton (Mr. Hamilton), Official Report, 9 February, column 126, if an employee of the Crown Suppliers will receive all pension rights under the principal Civil Service pension scheme, including benefits payable in respect of premature retirement, in the event of the sale of the Crown Suppliers; and if he will make a statement;

(2) pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Tatton (Mr. Hamilton), Official Report, column 126, what specific steps will be taken to ensure that Crown Suppliers employees in any privatised regime will have pensions comparable with those which they now possess; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: Work on how best to effect the sale of the Crown Suppliers is at an early stage, and it is too soon to specify the precise steps which will be taken to give staff pension rights broadly comparable to those which they now possess.

Chapels (Listed Buildings)

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many applications he has recently received for demolition or alteration of non-conformist chapels or former chapels which are listed buildings; and whether Brunswick Methodist chapel, Macclesfield, and Preston Unitarian chapel have been the subject of any such application.

Mr. Moynihan: Applications for listed building consent are made initially to local planning authorities, but must in certain circumstances be referred to the Department if the authority proposes to grant consent so that the case can be considered for call-in for decision by my right hon. Friend. All applications by local planning authorities themselves are automatically referred to the Department for decision.

Since 1 August 1987, 17 applications for listed building consent for the demolition (total or partial), alteration or extension of listed non-conformist chapels or former chapels have been referred to the Department. In 10 of these cases we decided not to intervene; this category included an application to convert the Brunswick Methodist chapel, Macclesfield, to office and residential purposes. In a further five cases we are still considering call-in; and two local planning authority applications are currently before us for decision.

In addition to the above applications, my right hon. Friend refuesed consent in January 1988, following a public inquiry, for the total demolition of he Old Methodist chapel, Swineshead, near Boston, Lincolnshire. This application was made in April 1987. The Preston Unitarian chapel was the subject of a local planning authority application for total demolition in February 1986. The authority was asked to investigate the possibility of selling the chapel on the open market as the Department was not satisfied that sufficient thought had been given to this possibility. Efforts to sell the building have not been successful to date.

Fishing Rates

Mr. Onslow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his latest estimate of the total annual product of fishing rates in England and Wales.

Mr. Chope: I regret the information is not held centrally and could be collected only at disproportionate cost.

London Docklands

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish in the Official Report details of the sequence of events which have caused him to delay his decision in the matter of the London Docklands East Docklands Compulsory Purchase Order 1985; and if he will now publish his decision.

Mr. Trippier: The order covers an unusually large number of plots owned by a wide diversity of local authority, statutory undertakers and private interests. It has been necessary for the Department to consult other Government Departments under the Acquisition of Land Act 1981 and to seek agreement from the parties affected on the dimensions of those plots where compulsory acquisition is to be confirmed in part. My right hon. Friend's decision is expected imminently.

Pollution (Archaeological Sites)

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether the policy that the polluter should pay for the cost of removing pollution applies to anyone developing an archaeological site; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: Whilst I think the analogy with the "polluter pays" principle is false in this context, both the Department and English Heritage encourage developers to contribute towards the cost of archaeological investigation in advance of development. A code of practice prepared nearly two years ago by the British Archaeologists and Developers Liaison Group has been a valuable stimulus to this successful voluntary approach. In addition, the Government contribute some £6 million a year in grants towards rescue archaeology projects through their heritage agency, the Historic Buildings and Monuments Commission. Local planning authorities can impose conditions on planning permissions affecting land considered to be of archaeological interest to ensure that access is given to archaeologists, and a similar requirement is often a condition of consent to development affecting scheduled monuments.

Water Supplies (Nitrate Levels)

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has on private water supplies where the nitrate levels are above recommended levels.

Mr. Moynihan: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to the hon. Member for Bootle (Mr. Roberts) on 12 February, at columns 382-83, by the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State my hon. Friend the Member for Broxbourne (Mrs. Roe).

Office Development (Ruthin)

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the office development already funded to replace the present agricultural department accommodation in Ruthin will proceed.

Mr. Chope: The intention is to provide a new Crown building, including accommodation for the Welsh Office Agricultural Department, in Ruthin, but a date for the start of construction had not yet been decided.

New Towns

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish the proposed or actual wind-up dates for all the new towns.

Mrs. Roe: In England, firm wind-up dates have been set for the new town development corporations at:

Aycliffe and Peterlee 31 March 1988.
Washington 31 March 1988.
Peterborough 30 September 1988.

Target wind-up dates, which will be reviewed with the relevant local authorities nearer the time, for the remaining corporations are:

Warrington and Runcorn 30 September 1989.
Telford 30 September 1991.
Milton Keynes 31 March 1992.

My right hon. Friend has no responsibility for new town development corporations in Scotland or Wales.

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish in the Official Report the names, profession, and salary of people appointed to each urban development corporation.

Mr. Trippier: Board membership for each English urban development corporation is as set out, together with information on each individual's other interests. The remuneration of chairmen and deputy chairmen is shown alongside the names of each: payments reflect the time commitment made. Members of the London Docklands development corporation receive a flat rate of £4,535, and members of all other corporations £3,625.

Phoenix Initiative

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals the Phoenix initiative has rendered for the Tyne and Wear Development Corporation regarding its future in terms of private sector investment.

Mr. Trippier: None.

Rating Reform

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his latest estimate of the total number of people who will not pay the poll tax.

Mr. Howard: I do not believe evasion will be a serious problem, and I have explained why on a number of occasions to the Standing Committee considering the Local Government Finance Bill. The most recent was on 25 February at columns 1000-1.

Inner City Renewal Project, Bow

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when his Department will grant the necessary approval to permit work to proceed on the inner city renewal project for the Monteith estate in the Bow neighbourhood of the London borough of Tower Hamlets.

Mr. Trippier: This project requires a number of consents. These are being considered urgently by the Department and a letter will be sent to the London borough of Tower Hamlets shortly.

Windsor Castle

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions the Property Services Agency has had regarding the structural condition of Windsor castle; with whom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: In January this year some cracking occurred in the north-west quadrant of the Round Tower at Windsor castle, which houses the Royal archives. It is possible that the recent period of exceptionally heavy rainfall increased pressures within the earth mound which supports the tower giving rise to movement. Engineers of the Property Services Agency and specialist consultants have been monitoring the situation closely since the occurrence and no further movement has taken place. A comprehensive geo-technical survey, including borehole investigation, has been planned and will beging this week. Preliminary results will be available during May and I will write to my hon. Friend at that time.

The Royal Household is being kept closely in touch with developments.

Model Yacht Sailing Association and London Archers

Mr. Tracey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether suitable equivalent new premises have been found for the Model Yacht Sailing Association and the London Archers as a result of the necessary demolition of the old ones.

Mr. Moynihan: A new clubhouse will be built at the north end of the Paddock area in Kensington Gardens to house both of these long-established clubs. Work should start on 1 April and the new premises be completed and ready for occupation by 1 June. I aim to minimise any disruption of the clubs' normal summer activities.

Crown Suppliers (Fuel Branch)

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will produce a table in the Official Report showing the savings to the Government for each of the last five years from the activities of the Crown Suppliers fuel branch.

Mr. Chope [holding answer Friday 4 March 1988]: Over the last five years TCS prices for liquid fuel have been below the average in an independent index comprising prices among large fuel buyers. On this basis the savings on liquid fuel purchased were as follows:

	£ million
1987	11·2
1986	7·8
1985	5·7
1984	3·8
1983	2·5

SCOTLAND

Soroya (Monofilament Nets)

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what action he proposes to take against the Grimsby vessel Soroya for carriage of monofilament nets pending his appeal against the court decision on the illegality of this regulation; and how many other vessels he has proceeded against since the court decision.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: A report is shortly to be submitted by the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland against the skipper of the vessel concerning the alleged carriage of these nets. The matter will be referred to the procurator fiscal in Aberdeen for consideration of proceedings. The Lord Advocate has decided that all appropriate cases involving monofilament gill nets will be proceeded with notwithstanding the appeal which the Crown has lodged against the decision of the sheriff at Stranraer.

As far as other vessels are concerned, the numbers of those proceeded against are not centrally held and cannot be obtained except at disproportionate cost.

Training Exercise

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will name the Home Defence training exercise held in Scotland in 1986 to train regional government staff for wartime duties; what number and grades of officials from each Department participated in the exercise; and which local government staff, public and private utility staff and staff from other agencies with designated war appointments took part in the exercise.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: No such exercise was held in Scotland in 1986.

Roads (Fife)

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been the amount of Government expenditure on the construction, maintenance and repair of motorways and trunk roads in Fife since 1979; and what is the estimated expenditure for these purposes in each of the next five years.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested for expenditure in Fife since 1979 is shown in the table. The White Paper on public expenditure (Cm. 288-II) gives details of the Government's proposals for Scotland for the period to 1990-91, but no decisions have been taken on how planned trunk road expenditure should be allocated by scheme or by region.

Forfar Bypass

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many drivers have been charged with road traffic offences following incidents or accidents on the Forfar bypass since it was opened to traffic; how many of those charged have been brought before the courts; and how many of those appearing in court were over 70 years of age.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I regret that the information requested is not available.

Clothing Grants

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what guidance he gives to local authorities on the frequency of clothing grants.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Assistance with clothing under section 54 of the Education (Scotland) Act 1980 is available only where a pupil is unable to take full advantage of the education offered because of the inadequacy or unsuitability of his clothing. This is a matter for decision by education authorities in the circumstances of individual cases and no central guidance has been issued.

Sheep

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the number of sheep farmed in each county of Scotland in the following years: 1975, 1980, 1983, 1986 and 1987.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The total number of sheep recorded in the annual June agricultural census for each of the Scottish local government islands areas and regions is set out in the table. After the 1986 census, 6,000 very small scale holdings with a total of 203,000 sheep were excluded from subsequent annual censuses.

Housing Condition Survey

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if his Department has any plans to carry out a housing condition survey in Scotland; if he will estimate the cost of such a survey; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas Hamilton: Local authorities have ample powers to carry out surveys of their areas to establish housing conditions. We are keeping the possibility of a national house condition survey under review but we are not, as yet, convinced of its merits. In particular, it is unlikely that such a survey would yield results at below district level unless the sample size was large, and consequently expensive. Our best assessment is that a national survey would cost over £5 million.

Rates (Aberdeen)

Mr. Robert Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish in the Official Report the amount of rates paid in Aberdeen by non-domestic ratepayers in the current financial year, the amount of rates to be paid by non-domestic ratepayers in the first year of the community charge, and the proportion of such payments which will be available to Aberdeen city district council.

Mr. Lang: The amount of rates paid in Aberdeen by non-domestic ratepayers in 1987-88 is estimated at £73 million. It is not possible to calculate the amount of rates to be paid by non-domestic ratepayers in the first year of the community charge as this will depend on decisions not yet taken and information not yet available. For the same reason it is not possible to calculate the proportion of such payments which will be available to Aberdeen city district council; but the proportion for 1987-88 is estimated at 25 per cent.

Capital Spending (Aberdeen)

Mr. Robert Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what criteria he used in allocating the capital spending of Aberdeen city district council for the forthcoming financial year; and if he will review the position in the light of representations received.

Mr. Lang: The allocation of resources for capital expenditure by local authorities, including Aberdeen city district council is determined, within the resources available, on the basis of their relative needs. In the light of the financial plans they submit each year, the relative needs of authorities are assessed taking account of a number of factors, including the capital costs of individual projects, their current expenditure consequences, the previous spending patterns and performance of the authorities and their forecasts of capital receipts. Account is also taken of the provisional allocations previously issued; it is, in general likely to be disruptive to depart very far from them but there can often be a need to adjust them to reflect particular changes in circumstances.

The resources available for distribution as capital allocations for 1988-89 are finite. They were allocated in full with the Scottish Office finance division letter of 22 February 1988.

Hospital and Community Health Services

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what expenditure in Scotland on the hospital and community health services was, in each year since 1982-83, adjusted by the hospital and community health services pay and prices deflator.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: No separate price index is maintained for hospital and community health services in Scotland.

NHS (Contracting Out)

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what discretion has been give by him to health boards in Scotland on implementation of his circular on the contracting out of ancillary services.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Scottish Home and Health Department's letter of 11 December set boards a specific programme of competitive tendering within a specified timetable. All boards are expected to carry that out.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will place in the Library a copy of the letter received from Fife health board in response to his circular on the contracting out of ancillary services.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: No. Correspondence between the Scottish Home and Health Department and health boards is not normally made available to other parties.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the consultations held with each health board prior to the placing of the advertisement in The Scotsman on behalf of the Scottish Health Service in which notice of information about tendering for in-house ancillary services for health boards was given.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The advertisement was placed by health boards acting jointly. No consultations by the Scottish Home and Health Department were involved.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give details in the Official Report of any external, management, financial or marketing consultants advising him on privatisation or contracted-out programmes.

Mr. Rifkind: The only firms of this nature currently advising me are the following. Their advice is being sought in connection with the privatisation of the electricity supply industry or of the Scottish Transport Group:

Quayle Munro Ltd., Merchant Bankers.
Barclays de Zoete Webb Ltd., Merchant Bankers.
British Linen Bank Ltd., Merchant Bankers.
Merz and McLellan, Consulting Engineers.
Coopers and Lybrand, Chartered Accountants.
McGrigor Donald, Solicitors.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give an estimate of the savings he envisages from the contracting out of ancillary services in each health board for 1988-89, 1989-90 and 1990-91.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: It is impossible to predict accurately the level of savings likely to be achieved through competitive tendering. This will depend on the levels of bids submitted.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he next plans to meet the Scottish Trades Union Congress and Health Service unions to discuss the contracting out of health board ancillary services.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I will be replying shortly to an invitation from the Scottish Trades Union Congress to meet to discuss a number of matters including competitive tendering for support services.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in the Official Report the responses from Scottish health boards to his circular on the contracting out of ancillary services.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I refer the hon. Member to my reply of 24 February, at column 231, to the hon. Member for Kilmarnock and Loudon (Mr. McKelvey).

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what action he will take against any health board refusing to contract out their ancillary services.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The question does not arise, since no board has declined to proceed with the programme of competitive tendering for certain ancillary services.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the cost of placing the advertisement in The Scotsman on behalf of the Scottish health service in which information about tendering for in-house ancillary services for health boards was given.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The cost of placing the advertisement in The Scotsman was £277.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in the Official Report the companies which have shown an interest in competing for ancillary service contracts.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This information is not available centrally.

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland on what basis his Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State responsible for health announced on Radio Scotland on 27 February that all Scottish health boards have agreed to invite tenders for in-house services.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: All health boards accept that they must implement the programme of competitive tendering on which my right hon. and learned Friend has decided.

Acute Beds (Fife)

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will detail his reasons for adopting option D as the basis for acute bed provision in Fife.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: In deciding on option D I took a view of what was best for patients throughout Fife, taking account of travelling time, the location of population, cost and the demands on the Scottish hospital building programme.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much expenditure is required for the acute bed proposals in Fife contained in option D; and if he will make available this level of expenditure.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: At present the only expenditure at issue is the Dunfermline development of option D, the cost of which is estimated at £27 million.

The question of substantial capital funding will not arise for a year or two. If approval in principle is granted, that will indicate a firm intention of finance expenditure.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what timetable he now envisages for (a) the submission of Fife health board's option D proposals for acute bed provision in Fife, (b) ministerial decision, (c) agreement of financial allocations and programme and (d) implementation at local level.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I have asked Fife health board to make a new submission for approval in principle to the Dunfermline development of option D and expect the board to do this as soon as possible, to facilitate an early decision. Allocation of capital funds for the development would then be considered in the context of the capital building programme.

It would be for the health board to progress the implementation of projects within the procedures subsequent to approval in principle.

Fife Health Board

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland why Fife health board has not yet appointed a new general manager to fill the vacancy created by the resignation of Mr. Lee; and whether the post will be redesignated.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This is a matter for Fife health board. I understand that the board is making every effort to find a suitable person to fill the vacant post of general manager.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in the Official Report the meetings held between the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State responsible for health, the hon. Member for Stirling (Mr. Forsyth) and the chairman of Fife health board since 1 July 1987 to the present, including dates and subjects discussed.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I have had two meetings with the chairman of Fife health board since 1 July 1987—on 15 October 1987 and 1 February 1988. On both occasions we discussed a range of matters affecting the Health Service.

Health Boards

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in the Official Report the membership of each health board, detailing names, nominating body, date appointed and known political affiliation.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I refer the hon. Member to my reply of 24 July 1987 at columns 427-32, to the hon. Member for Strathkelvin and Bearsden (Mr. Galbraith) and my reply of 3 November 1987 at columns 685-9, to the hon. Member for Cumbernauld and Kilsyth (Mr. Hogg).

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in the Official Report any chairman or members of Scottish health boards who have direct pecuniary or other interests in private health care.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Such information is not collected or held centrally. The general obligation of chairmen and members to declare any interests related to specific contracts is set out in the National Health Service (Health Boards: Membership, Procedure and Payment of Subscriptions) (Scotland) Regulations 1975.

Hospitals

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish capital expenditure amounts for hospital building programmes for each of the health boards in 1988-89, 1989-90, and 1990-91.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 3 March at column 667, to my hon. Friend the Member for Dumfries (Sir H. Monro) about 1988-89. Capital expenditure figures are not published for the two following years though health boards are given indicative provisional allocations for planning purposes.

Seals

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will institute a study of the number of grey and common seals killed annually on the east coast of Scotland; and whether he will consider seeking to amend the Conservation of Seals Act 1970 to secure the indigenous grey and common seal populations.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My right hon. and learned Friend has no plans to put in hand such a study. It would be expensive and the results likely to be unreliable. There is no legal requirement on the public to report the number of seals shot outwith the close season, during which shooting can only take place under licence or to prevent seals causing damage to fisheries.

My right hon. and learned Friend does not consider that the available evidence would justify an amendment to the Conservation of Seals Act for the purpose proposed. It is estimated by the Environment Research Council that the size of the Scottish population of grey seals is expected to be 92,500, an annual increase of 5 per cent. over the period 1985 to 1987. The minimum size of the common seals is estimated to be some 18,100 animals.

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many salmon netting stations are located around the east coast of Scotland; how many seals are shot around these stations; and how many seals are killed around all fish farms annually.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Comprehensive information on the numbers of salmon netting stations around the Scottish coast and annual records of the number of seals killed around netting stations and fish farms are not kept centrally.

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the current population of common seals on the east coast of Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland obtains advice from the Natural Environment Research Council as to estimates of seal populations.

The most recent estimates obtained from the council in respect of common seals were provided by surveys carried out by the sea mammal research unit in 1984. These showed a minimum total population in that area of some 1,000 animals.

Sheep (Radioactivity)

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland under what authority unmarked sheep were allowed to be moved in August 1986 from the restricted areas of Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Consents were given on my right hon. and learned Friend's behalf by the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland under section 2(1) of the Food and Environment Protection Act 1985.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to the answer of 12 February, Official Report, column 371, how many (a) rams, (b) ewes and (c) lambs were allowed to be moved from the restricted areas of Scotland following the Chernobyl accident in each month from June 1986 to April 1987.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information requested is as follows:

1986	Rams	Ewes	Lambs
June	nil	nil	nil
July	nil	nil	nil
August	7	nil	8,404
September	79	nil	nil

Rating Reform

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his estimate of the cost of publishing and delivering an explanatory booklet on the community charge to every household in Scotland.

Mr. Lang: The cost to my Department of preparing, printing and distributing the explanatory booklet for the current community charge information campaign is £246,367.

Ships and Piers (EC Aid)

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what levels of European Economic Community aid and have been available for ship replacement and pier construction undertaken by the Scottish Transport Group in the past five years; and if he will list the specific projects for which such aid has been received, together with the amounts involved in each case.

Mr. Rifkind: Since 1 January 1985 assistance from the EEC's European regional development fund for ferry vessels and infrastructure has been available at 50 per cent. of the gross cost of the project concerned. Prior to that date the standard rate was 30 per cent. but this was varied on occasion depending on the nature of the project. Since 1983 the Scottish Transport Group's subsidiary, Caledonian MacBrayne Ltd., have been awarded assistance from the fund as follows:

Year	Location	Project	Award (£)	Percentage of cost
1984	Uig/Tarbert/Lochmaddy[1]	New ferry vessel and conversion of terminals to roll-on/roll-off	3,280,000	40
1985	Tobermory	Pier improvements	110,000	50
1985	Gourock	Pier improvements	175,000	50
1985	Rothesay	Pier improvements	37,000	50
1985	Oban	Pier improvements	750,000	50
1985	Largs/Cumbrae, Fishnish/Lochaline	Two new ferry vessels	850,000	50
1986	Lochranza/Claonaig	New ferry vessel	425,000	50
1987	Lochaline	Extension of slipway	43,000	50
1987	Colintraive/Rhubodach	New ferry vessel	425,000	50
1987	Oban/Mull/Colonsay	New ferry vessel	3,300,000	50

Skoal Bandits

Mr. Harry Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in the Official Report the Ministers in his Department, together with their responsibilities, at the time of the decision to give financial assistance to United States Tobacco for the manufacture of Skoal Bandits.

Mr. Rifkind: In November 1984, when the offer of assistance was made, the Secretary of State for Scotland was my right hon. Friend the Member for Ayr (Mr. Younger). The other Ministers, and their responsibilities, were:

Rt. hon. Lord Gray of Contin.
Responsibilities: Agriculture; fisheries; forestry; the Highlands and Islands Development Board; Scottish Tourist Board; and the co-ordination of Government action in relation to the Highlands and Islands.

The hon. Member for Eastwood (Mr. Stewart).
Responsibilities: Industrial and regional development; manpower services; matters relating to oil development; new towns; education including primary, secondary and higher education, but excluding universities; public libraries; youth and community services; sport and recreation; and the arts.

The former hon. Member for Argyll and Bute (Mr. MacKay).
Responsibilities: Health boards and the Common Services Agency; hospital services; general practitioner services; community health services; ambulance services; health education; services for the elderly, children, the disabled and the mentally handicapped; list D schools; children's hearings; and the after-care of offenders.

The former hon. Member for Edinburgh, South (Mr. Ancram).
Responsibilities: Police and fire services; civil law and criminal justice; prisons; Scottish courts administration; local government; town and country planning; housing; roads and transport; water, sewage and pollution; urban renewal; building control; and ancient monuments and historic buildings.

TRANSPORT

Severn Bridge

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Warrington, South of 24 February, Official Report, column 203, on the second Severn bridge, he will revise the forecast in his answer of 14 December, Official Report, columns 421-22, of the level of tolls required to meet the objective of the Severn Bridge Act 1965 to take account of the forecasts of the division of traffic flow.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: When we decide that forecast traffic growth warrants the construction of the second bridge, and how it is to be financed, we shall have to consider their implications for the finances of the present crossing.

Enforcement Officers

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many enforcement officers he employed in (a) 1979 and (b) the latest available year; and whether he has any plans to increase their numbers.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Department employed 1,401 enforcement officers in 1979 and 1,560 in 1987. These officers are:

	1979	1987
Traffic examiners	241	235
Vehicle examiners	327	352
VED enforcement officers	833	973

There are no plans to increase the numbers of enforcement officers.

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many prosecutions were brought by enforcement officers in each year from 1979 to the latest available year.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The number of prosecutions brought by the Department's traffic area offices between 1978-79 and 1986-87 in enforcing heavy goods and passenger operator and vocational driver licensing and other requirements relating to road safety were as follows:

	Number
1978-79	10,700
1979-80	14,100
1980-81	13,500
1981-82	12,500

	Number
1982-83	14,900
1983-84[1]	9,300
1984-85	13,500
1985-86	15,000
1986-87	16,300

[1] The period of the reporting year was changed resulting in a six-month report.

The number of prosecutions sought by the Department between 1979 and 1987 for vehicle excise duty offences including those settled out of court were as follows:

	Number
1979	172,000
1980	210,000
1981	169,000
1982	198,000
1983	253,000
1984	291,000
1985	305,000
1986	343,000
1987	348,000

Departmental Buildings

Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the location and status of all buildings within his Department located in London and the annual cost of rents, rates and maintenance of each.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I would refer my hon. Friend to the reply given on Wednesday 2 March 1988, at column 584, to his question referring to the Department of the Environment. The Department of Transport occupies accommodation in 58 buildings in the Greater London area, ranging from the main HQ building at 2 Marsham Street down to driver testing centres.

Accident Statistics

Mr. Robert B. Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will set out a table listing (a) the percentage of total motorway traffic represented by and (b) the percentage of vehicles involved in motorway accidents which are (i) heavy goods vehicles and vehicles drawing a trailer and (ii) buses and coaches.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The information requested, based on road accident injury statistics for GB in 1986, is as follows:

	Heavy goods vehicles Percentage	Buses and coaches Percentage
Percentage of motorway traffic	15·9	0·8
Percentage of vehicles involved in motorway accidents	14·1	0·8

Heavy goods vehicles include articulated vehicles and goods vehicles drawing a trailer. The percentage of vehicles involved in motorway accidents, which are heavy goods vehicles or other vehicles drawing a trailer, is 15·4. However, traffic figures are not available, separately, for other vehicles drawing a trailer.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will list for each of the first six months for 1987 (a) the number of buses and coaches involved in accidents on motorways and (b) the number which were travelling in the fast lane at the time.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The number of buses and coaches involved in accidents on motorways in GB in the first six months of 1987 is as follows:

	Number
January	6
February	3
March	7
April	4
May	12
June	6

The lane in which the vehicle was travelling at the time of the accident is not recorded on the police road accident report form.

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the road death rates of each of the countries in the EEC, expressed as deaths per 100,000 population, for the latest available year; and if he will list the equivalent figures for 10 years earlier.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The information is as follows:

EC comparisons of road deaths[1] per 100,000 population

	1976	1986
Belgium	25	20
Denmark	17	[3]15
Federal Republic of Germany	24	15
France	28	22
Greece	14	16
Irish Republic	17	11
Italy	17	[3]13
Luxembourg	28	22
Netherlands	18	11
Portugal	35	[3]26
Spain	17	18
United Kingdom	[2]12	10

[1] In accordance with the commonly agreed international definition, most countries define a fatality as being due to a road accident if death occurs within 30 days of the accident. The official road accident statistics of some countries, however, limit the fatalities to those occuring within shorter periods after the accident. Deaths and death rates in the table have been adjusted according to the factors used by the Economic Commission for Europe and the European conference of Ministers of Transport, to represent standardised 30-day deaths.

[2] Great Britain only.

[3] 1985 Data.

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many subject access requests under the terms of the Data Protection Act his Department has received; what was his estimate of this number; whether he is reconsidering the subject access fee charged by his Department as a result; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: By 1 March the Department had received 1,197 subject access inquiries, 1,185 were inquiries made of the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Centres' 78 million driver and vehicle licence records held there on computer. 270,000 transactions are handled each day at the centre. No prior estimate had been made of the number of subject access inquiries. We have no plans to reconsider the levels of fees charged.

Transport Safety

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport with which institutions he has discussed the voluntary improvement of transport safety standards during the last month.

Mr. David Mitchell: Safety standards are one aspect of most of the discussions I and my hon. Friends have with outside bodies.

Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he intends to bring forward new guidelines for transport safety; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We keep safety standards in transport regularly under review and will continue to develop proposals when the need arises.

King's Cross and St. Pancras

Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has had recent discussions with representatives of British Rail and British Rail Properties Limited on the outline plans to redevelop the King's Cross and St. Pancras station complexes.

Mr. David Mitchell: No. This is a commercial matter for British Rail.

Traffic Law Review

Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects the team set up by his Department to review traffic law to announce its findings; and what priority he attaches to achieving a change in the law relating to road traffic offences.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We expect to receive Dr. North's report of his road traffic law review very shortly. We shall give urgent consideration to its recommendations.

Ferry Safety

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he last met representatives of ferry staff to discuss safety standards.

Mr. Channon: I have had no recent meetings with ferry staff on this subject.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the health and safety implications of longer shift patterns aboard British ferries.

Mr. Channon: Working arrangements on board United Kingdom-registered ferries operating out of United Kingdom ports vary considerably, according to the companies and routes involved. I understand that proposals for new working arrangements for certain routes are now under discussion between the seafarers trades unions and the company concerned. Whatever arrangements may result will, of course, need to comply with the statutory officers manning requirements and with the statutory requirement that the watch system shall be such that the efficiency of watchkeepers is not impaired by fatigue.

Near Misses

Dr. Reid: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received seeking an inquiry into the near misses of aircraft recently occurring over United Kingdom airspace.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We and the Civil Aviation Authority (which is responsible for air traffic control and air safety) have received a number of representations about recent airmisses. The chairman of the CAA asked the Department's chief inspector of accidents to investigate the airmiss over Kent on 6 February. The CAA is itself investigating that and other air misses under its usual procedures.

My right hon. Friend also asked the chairman to review urgently the procedures for investigating and reporting airmisses and the chairman reported to him on 3 March 1988. I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to the hon. Member for Brentwood and Ongar (Mr. McCrindle) the same day.

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received seeking an inquiry into the recent near misses of aircraft in United Kingdom airspace.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State received a number of representations following the recent reports of airmisses and asked the chairman of the Civil Aviation Authority to review urgently the arrangements for reporting and investigating them. I draw the hon. Member's attention to the reply given by my right hon. Friend on 3 March 1988 to the member for Brentwood and Ongar (Mr. McCrindle) setting out the chairman's response.

Regional Airports

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has on whether non-London airports are operating at their full potential.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Passenger traffic statistics suggest that a number of non-London airports are operating below their capacity, although others, such as Manchester and Birmingham, are close to the capacity of their present passenger terminals.

Speed Limiters

Mr. Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he intends to bring forward legislation requiring speed limiters to be fitted to heavy goods vehicles.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Such limiters would have to be set at 60 mph—the motorway speed limit for heavy goods vehicles of over 7·5 tonnes gross weight. The latest national speed survey has shown an encouraging reduction in lorry speeds on motorways. If this trend continues it will reduce the need to consider the fitting of speed limiters.

Channel Tunnel

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what action he is taking to ensure that regions north of London are able to benefit fully in terms of transport infrastructure, from the Channel tunnel project.

Mr. David Mitchell: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Halifax (Mrs. Mahon) on 2 March, at column 599-600.

Smoke Hoods

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he last met the chairman of the Civil Aviation Authority to discuss the establishment of an internationally agreed specification for airline passenger protection smoke hoods.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: My right hon. Friend met the chairman of the Civil Aviation Authority in December 1987 to discuss the authority's decision not to introduce regulations requiring the mandatory carriage of passenger smoke hoods. He informed my right hon. Friend then of the international collaboration on this matter between the Civil Aviation Authority and other leading aviation authorities. That collaboration is continuing and may in time lead to an internationally agreed specification.

Drinking and Driving

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received seeking a reduction in the blood alcohol level for drinking and driving offences; and what response he has made.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We are pressed at different times to reduce the permitted blood alcohol content to various levels including nil below the present limit of 80 mg of alcohol in 100 ml of blood.

With more than half of all drinking and driving offenders convicted at around twice the existing limit, the current priority is to secure greater compliance with the law as it stands.

British Transport Police

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he last met members of the British Transport police authority, and what subjects were discussed.

Mr. David Mitchell: My right hon. Friend has not had any meetings with the British Transport Police Committee.

Vehicle Excise Duty

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) pursuant to his reply of 29 June 1987, Official Report, column 35, to the hon. Member for Bristol, North-West (Mr. Stern) if he will make a statement on the effectiveness of the intensive local campaigns to discourage the evasion of vehicle licence duty;

(2) pursuant to his reply of 29 June 1987, Official Report, column 35, to the hon. Member for Bristol, North-West (Mr. Stern) for the most recent date for which figures are available, how many successful prosecutions have been brought by police following the intensive local campaigns against evasion of vehicle licence duty during 1987-88.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The evidence shows that campaigns are an effective way of deterring VED evasion. Eleven campaigns have so far been held in the financial year 1987-88. Four more are under way.

Checks of DVLC's computer register show that 172,000 vehicles recorded as unlicensed before the 11 campaigns were launched were licensed afterwards. This represents £12·8 million revenue which might otherwise have been lost.

So far, some 3,000 of the 5,286 evaders who ignored the warnings given during the campaigns have been successfully prosecuted, yielding a further £380,000 in fines, back-duty orders and costs.

Seat Belts (Coaches)

Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether any estimate has been made as to the number of lives that may have been saved over the last five years had passengers in motor coaches been required to wear seat belts; and if he has any plans to require coach manufacturers to fit seat belts in their vehicles.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Department has not made such an estimate. The available information on coach accidents could not support more than a broad indication of the numbers and types of casualty that might have been avoided by wearing seat belts.

From 1 October 1988 seat belts must be fitted in new coaches to seats most at risk, such as the front seats. The Department is investigating the possibility of extending this requirement to existing modern coaches.

Airport Charges

Mr. McTaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give a list of the landing and take-off charges for a Boeing 727 at each airport in Britain; and whether there are different scales for British Airways and other operators.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Information on charges is not compiled in this form. Detailed data for most airports will shortly be published in the Aerodrome Owners Association 1988 handbook, a copy of which will be placed in the Library. All the larger airports operate under public use licences, which require the aerodrome to be available to all persons on equal terms and conditions.

Nuclear Materials (Flasks)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will place in the Library a full copy of the report by the Central Electricity Generating Board's consulting engineers Ove Arup about the safety of flasks used for carrying nuclear materials; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: Any such reports are the property of the Central Electricity Generating Board and it is for it to decide whether or not they can be made available.

Car Telephones

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what recent reports he has received regarding the use of car telephones; and if he will introduce new regulations regarding their use.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: None. We have no plans to introduce legislation controlling use of in-car telephones. Existing legislation already places the responsibility on drivers to have proper control of their vehicles at all times. A motorist who fails to do so as a result of distraction or lack of concentration is liable to prosecution. The revised Highway code advises drivers not to use a hand held telephone while their vehicles are moving, except in an emergency.

Roads (Expenditure)

Mrs. Maureen Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans for further road investment.

Mr. Channon: I am adding two new major projects to my road programme:

—a £50 million grant for the construction of a new road through the Black Country, linking the Black Country development corporation area to the M5 and M6: and —a £59 million scheme to improve the A13 between Limehouse and Dagenham to assist the redevelopment of Docklands and east London and linking in to the London Docklands Development Corporation's docklands highway.

These new schemes will provide better transport links to stimulate new enterprise and jobs in these two inner-city areas. They are in addition to the £2 billion of schemes —two fifths of the total—already in my trunk road programme, which will directly assist the regeneration of inner cities throughout the country. More such schemes will follow.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish in the Official Report the numerical criteria used to determine the proportion of local authority block grants allowed for expenditure on roads.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Local authorities receive support for roads expenditure through two grants, which form part of aggregate exchequer grant (AEG). The criteria for determining AEG are set out in section 54(4) of the Local Government Planning and Land Act 1980.

Capital expenditure on roads of more than local importance is supported by transport supplementary grant (TSG). TSG is allocated on the basis of accepted estimated expenditure selected from bids included in highway authorities' annual transport policies and programme (TPPs). Criteria used include cost/benefit analyses and previous years' plan progress.

Like most other local authority spending, transport current expenditure and the financing costs of capital expenditure not financed by TSG are supported through block grant. This is distributed according to the expenditure of each authority in relation to its grant related expenditure assessment (GRE). GREs are built up from components for each service including roads. The roads maintenance GRE formula contains a number of factors, including road lengths and traffic volume. Details are published in the "Rate Support Grant Report (England) 1988-89" (HC. 163) and in the Department of Environment's "Technical Handbook of Grant Related Expenditure 1988-89".

Transport Supplementary Grant

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list in the Official Report the amount of transport supplementary grant per head of the population for each of the county and metropolitan borough councils for the years 1986-87 to 1988-89.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The table lists values of transport supplementary grant (TSG) per head of population in 1986-87, 1987-88 and 1988-89 for each local highway authority in England. TSG is awarded on the relative merits of each authority's proposed programme of highway improvements not on the basis of population.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list in the Official Report for each highway authority (a) the value of the first year return, (b) the total net present value and (c) the length of each road project which qualified for transport supplementary grant, in each year from 1986-87 to 1988-89.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The table lists all local road schemes supported with transport supplementary grant (TSG) in 1986-87, 1987-88 and 1988-89 for which either a net present value or a first year rate of return is available. A number of other schemes for which economic costs and benefits are not available is also supported with TSG.

Road Improvements

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what programmes are being initiated to improve road quality standards throughout the United Kingdom; and if he will provide a table listing expenditure figures for all regions from 1979 to the latest available date.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We have initiated a greatly enhanced programme of structural maintenance on national roads. Maintenance of other roads is a matter for local authorities. Where authorities continue to underspend we will be looking urgently for ways of improving the situation, in consultation with the local authority associations.

Rural Transport (Cornwall)

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what recent representations he has received concerning rural transport in Cornwall; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: No recent representations have been received about rural transport services in Cornwall. Deregulation passed off smoothly there with services broadly maintained at reduced cost to the county. There are minibuses in many towns and the consequent increase in bus mileage overall has been of benefit to the people of Cornwall.

Train Drivers (Statistics)

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has as to how many train drivers employed by British Rail are (a) members of ethnic minorities and (b) women; and what is the total number of train drivers on British Rail's network.

Mr. Channon: I do not have this information. I am asking the British Railways Board to write to the hon. Member.

Motor Industry (Safety Standards)

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans and programmes are being considered to enhance and promote safety standards in the motor industry.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Many improvements to vehicle safety are under consideration in the European Commission's working group of governmental and motor industry experts. Introductory dates are agreed only when new or amending directives are adopted. For example, last November agreement was reached to require anti-lock brakes on new heavy articulated vehicles and coaches, registered from 1 October 1991.

WALES

Bistre Nursery School

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will pay an official visit to the Bistre (Buckley) nursery school to meet members of staff, members of the parent-teachers' association, members of the governing body and committee members of the voluntary bodies that use the school out of hours; if he will take steps to ensure that Bistre nursery school will remain open for the school years 1988-89, 1989-90 and 1990-91; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answers I gave him on 12 January.

Rate Support Grant (Fire Stations)

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to increase the rate support grant for Clwyd to enable the county to avoid both the closure of fire stations and cutbacks in fire stations, with specific reference to the Buckley and Queensferry fire stations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: It is primarily for the local authority to determine its own spending priorities from within available resources. However, the Home Secretary's approval under section 19 of the Fire Services Act 1947 (as amended by section 7 of the 1959 act) would be required before any reduction in fire cover in Clwyd could be implemented.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Prisons (Worship)

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what extra staffing will be required to make sure that at least two principal Sunday services are available to prisoners between the hours of 9 am and 11 am on Sunday mornings if proposals to close Roman Catholic chapels in prisons are implemented;

(2) what consultation there has been with all denominations, both within the prison service chaplaincy and within the local hierarchies of the denominations concerned in areas where prison establishments are situated, on the proposals to close Roman Catholic chapels in prisons;

(3) what proposals there are to close Roman Catholic chapels in prison establishments where there is more than one dedicated worship place.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Since the early 1970s, with the full agreement of the Prison Service Chaplaincy and the Anglican and Roman Catholic Churches, a single shared chapel has been provided in all prison establishments except those very large prisons where two separate chapels are considered operationally necessary. There are no proposals for closing any of the existing Roman Catholic chapels and the question of extra staffing has not therefore arisen.

Prisons (Development Value)

Mr. Temple-Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) whether any consideration has been given to the development value of the present sites of Her Majesty's prisons at Cardiff, Reading and Swansea in the context of the prison building programme;

(2) what are the current site values as such and for development purposes of the present sites of Her Majesty's prisons at Cardiff, Reading and Swansea.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: It is recognised that sites such as those mentioned may have considerable redevelopment value. Under present rules the proceeds of any sale would not be available for prison building. Moreover, each establishment is well placed to perform its function as a local prison. The population pressures on the prison system are so great that there can be no question at present of selling any of them. Current site values have not therefore been assessed.

Domestic Violence

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis on whether the police force order relating to domestic violence has been fully implemented, and as to whether a local referral point and nearest refuge to each police station has been identified; if he will list the number of domestic violence incidents for each police division since the police force orders to the end of February; in how many such cases police transport was provided; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Implementation of force orders within the Metropolitan police district is the responsibility of the commissioner. I understand from the commissioner that the implementation of the force order relating to domestic violence is being evaluated.

I also understand that local referral points for victims have been identified, together with a centralised emergency line to find the most appropriate refuge in each case; and that police transport is provided for victims wishing to go to a refuge. I regret that statistics in the form requested by the hon. Member are not available.

Oxford Prison (Syringes)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about the recent amnesty on syringes at Oxford prison; whether any of the syringes surrendered contained the AIDS virus; whether it is proposed to extent this amnesty to other prisons; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: There has been no such amnesty.

Prisons (Conjugal Visits)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will review current prison rules and regulations to allow conjugal visits; what information he has on the practice in this respect in prisons in other countries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No. We do not have comprehensive information about the position abroad, but officials keep in touch with developments in other countries with respect to many aspects of prison administration, including visiting arrangements.

Prisons (Toilets)

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the provision of toilet facilities in Her Majesty's prisons.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: All accommodation at new prisons has access to night sanitation. At existing establishments there are some 22,000 places without access to night sanitation out of a total of about 42,000. The refurbishment programme is steadily reducing the number of places without access.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the provisions of toilet facilities in the remand wing of Her Majesty's prison, Lincoln.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Refurbishment of the toilet facilities in the remand wing of Her Majesty's prison, Lincoln is due for completion this summer and will increase their provision by 75 per cent.

Criminal Injuries Compensation Board

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many cases are currently being considered by the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board.

Mr. John Patten: The latest available figures from the board show that about 76,000 applications were awaiting resolution at the end of January 1988.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many cases have been (a) considered and (b) awarded payments by the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board in each year since it was established.

(2) how many staff and assessors have been employed by the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board in each year since it was established.

Mr. John Patten: The following table lists the numbers of applications resolved and awards made by the board in each year since its inception in August 1964. Details of the numbers of staff in post at 1 April each year are available from 1977 only, and are set out in the table with details of staff complements from 1964 to 1976. The table also shows the number of board members at 1 April each year.

Offenders (Electronic Tagging)

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on plans to evaluate electronic tagging as an alternative to custody.

Mr. John Patten: The next step is to make a technical assessment of the various systems in use in North America and those which could be produced by British firms. This is being set in hand.

TV-am (Franchise)

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to ensure that the Independent Broadcasting Authority carries out the terms of the Broadcasting Act 1981 in relation to the TV-am franchise and Saudi Arabian investment in that company; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: It is for the Independent Broadcasting Authority to determine the way in which it discharges its responsibilities under the Broadcasting Act 1981.

Television Franchises

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy not to reach any final decision on the method by which independent television company franchises are to be allocated in the next round until (a) the Home Affairs Select Committee has reported on its present inquiry into broadcasting and (b) consultation has taken place on his proposals in the form of a White Paper.

Mr. Renton: The Government are considering a range of matters on the future of broadcasting, and we have in mind the possibility of a White Paper. We shall take careful account of the views of the Home Affairs Select Committee. Legislation will be required to give effect to any changes in the existing broadcasting structure, including any changes in the method for awarding ITV franchises.

Custody

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to try and reduce the use of custodial remands in England and Wales.

Mr. John Patten [holding answer 1 March 1988]: Work is being done by the probation service and the Vera Institute of Justice on providing better information on defendants to magistrates through bail information schemes; resources are being provided over the next three financial years for about nine new bail hostels; and my noble and learned Friend the Lord Chancellor is preparing improved training on bail decisions for magistrates. My right hon. Friend has made clear the Government's view that custody should be used only where it is necessary. The extension of custody time limits to all of Wales and a number of counties in England, with effect from 1 April, will provide a discipline against undue delay in bringing to trial those defendants who are remanded in custody.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Industrial and Provident Societies

Mr. John Townend: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) if he will take steps to require any industrial and provident society which competes commercially with bona fide customers which announces a scheme to secure a stock market flotation, to ensure that the promotion of such a scheme complies with the provisions of the Companies, Financial Services and Prevention of Fraud (Investment) Acts;

(2) if he will take steps to prevent any industrial and provident society from issuing misleading advertisements relating to the stock market value of its shares when (a) its members have not been consulted on a change of status to enable a stock market flotation to proceed and (b) its campaign creates a major distortion of competition between it and other properly constituted commercial enterprises;

(3) if he will refer to the Director General of the Office of Fair Trading the question whether the issue of discounted bonus shares over a three-year period linked to tied customer purchases distorts open market competition and therefore should be ruled an anti-competitive practice, with particular reference to the issue of such shares by an industrial and provident society;

(4) if he will consider taking action under the Prevention of Fraud (Investment) Act 1988 against Unichem Ltd. in respect of its proposal to offer additional shares to members at £1 each which it states will be worth not less than £12 when Unichem is converted from an industrial and provident society to a plc.

Mr. Maude: My Department has received and is considering allegations that the issue of certain advertisements by Unichem Ltd. may have infringed the Prevention of Fraud (Investments) Act 1958. It is for the Director General of Fair Trading to consider whether the issue of bonus shares on the terms proposed would constitute an anti-competitive practice under the Competition Act 1980.

David Abell of Suter

Mr. Ashdown: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on investigations undertaken by his Department into the affairs of David Abell of Suter.

Mr. Maude: It is not my practice to comment on the affairs of an individual.

Restrictive Trade Practices

Mr. Page: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when the Green Paper on reform of the restrictive trade practices legislation will be published.

Mr. Maude: The Green Paper, "Review of Restrictive Trade Practices Policy" has been laid before the House today. It proposes fundamental reform of the current legislation in order to control seriously damaging cartels more effectively. Together with the conclusions announced in the departmental policy paper on mergers published on 3 March, this concludes the review of law and policy on mergers and restrictive trade practices announced in June 1986, by my right hon. Friend the Member for Southend, West (Mr. Channon).

In particular, the Green Paper proposes a general prohibition of business agreements whose effect is to prevent, restrict or distort competiton. This concentration on anti-competitive agreements means that the scope of the law is at once consistent with its objective. By contrast, the present legislation covers agreements of a particular legal form; it is therefore possible for it to cover agreements which have little effect on competition. This disadvantage and the present statutory requirements to furnish details of agreements of a specified form to the Office of Fair Trading (OFT) makes the present law unduly burdensome on business. The new law proposed in today's Green Paper, which is aimed at the effects of agreements, will be more precisely targeted on those agreements which are genuinely anti-competitive, and will have the added advantage for firms of being closely aligned with European cartel law.

There will be provision under the new system for the exemption of agreements which, though anti-competitive, are on balance beneficial. Applications for exemptions will be judged against a broad test, along the lines of article 85(3) of the treaty of Rome. Guidance notes will be published to help firms and their advisers.

It may be appropriate to draw up "block" exemptions for some categories of agreement, such as franchising, whereby agreements which satisfied certain conditions would become automatically exempt. This would allow some element of self-policing by firms.

As a general rule, it is our intention that exemptions will be granted sparingly; it is a central objective of the Government's economic philosophy to promote competition as far as possible — not to sanction anti-competitive behaviour. The same principle applies to economic sectors and professional services which benefit from exemption from the present legislation. These exemptions will not be automatically carried across into new legislation without the merits of each case being thoroughly re-examined. The Government intend to end as many of the existing exemptions as possible.

We propose that decisions whether agreements are anti-competitive and decisions on applications for exemption will be taken by an administrative competition authority. This will be based on the OFT although the new legislation would require changes to the OFT's organisation and procedures. For this reason, the Green Paper simply refers to an "authority" throughout.

There will be rights of appeal from the authority to the Restrictive Practices Court, and provision for private actions.

The Green Paper also proposes more effective powers of investigation and enforcement and potentially heavy fines—up to 10 per cent. of total turnover—for those who breach the law. This is a particularly important feature of our proposals and an approach strongly urged on us by many of those who submitted comments during the review. It is envisaged that the authority will impose the fines, although decisions on fines would also be subject to appeal.

I hope that the business community will support these proposals; they reflect many of the comments made to us over the last year or so. This is a crucially important area for business and I believe that our proposals will benefit from thorough public debate. We are allowing a further period (up to 30 September) for comments on the basis of the Green Paper proposals, which I hope will be widely read.

Automotive Industry (Research and Development)

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what incentives are being proposed to promote research and development in the United Kingdom auto industry.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 7 March 1988]: The automotive industry is eligible to receive assistance through all the Department of Trade and Industry initiatives for innovation which were announced in the White Paper "DTI—the department for Enterprise". This was placed before the House on 12 January 1988 by the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster.

North-east (Investment)

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what measures and initiatives are being undertaken to attract investment capital and industry to the north-east: and if he will provide a table of capital investment in real terms, showing the percentage increase this sum represents from May 1979 to the latest available date.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 7 March 1988]: My Department offers a range of incentives under its recently launched enterprise initiative which are designed to encourage industrial and commercial development in the north-east and elsewhere. The information sought by the hon. Member about capital investment is as follows. For the standard economic planning region of the north (which includes Cumbria as well as Northumberland, Tyne and Wear, Durham and Cleveland), the figures in the table imply the following percentage changes in manufacturing net capital expenditure from the 1979 base year figure of £613 million:

1980	428	−30·2
1981	284	−53·7
1982	256	−58·2
1983	279	−54·5
1984	356	−41·9
1985	403	−34·3

STRIDE Programme

Ms. Quin: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement as to which regions of the United Kingdom are included within the European Commission's STRIDE programme.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 3 March 1988]: The European Commission has yet to make any proposals for this programme.

EMPLOYMENT

EC (Internal Market)

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the extent and impact of the proposals contained in the European Commission's White Paper, "Europe without frontiers; Towards a Large Internal Market", in so far as his Department is concerned.

Mr. Cope: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given him by my hon. Friend the Minister for Trade on Thursday 3 March 1988, at column 643. This Department has a particular interest in the employment effects arising from the removal of trade barriers, the effects on small firms, and proposals concerning the health and safety of workers.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many members of staff within his Department are located within each region outside London; what percentage this constitutes of staff within his Department; and what were the comparable figures, in absolute and percentage terms in 1979.

Mr. Lee: It is estimated that the following numbers and percentages of staff were employed within the regions of the Department of Employment group at 1 January 1988. Comparable data for 1979 and a disaggregation of central London staff from those in the south-east as a whole are not available without disproportionate cost.

Department of Employment group staff in post at 1 January 1988

	Number	Percentage of all staff
Scotland	6,120	10·2
North-West	8,641	14·4
Northern	4,080	6·8
Yorkshire and Humberside	7,740	12·9
Wales	3,420	5·7
Midlands	8,641	14·4

	Number	Percentage of all staff
South-West	4,020	6·7
London and South-East	17,341	28·9
All	60,003

Note:
The Department of Employment (DE) group comprises the Department itself (including the employment service), the Manpower Services Commission (MSC), the Health and Safety Executive and Commission (HSE and HSC) and the Advisory, Conciliation and Arbitration Service (ACAS). There are some minor variations in regional boundaries between different parts of the group.

Local Enterprise Agency Grant Scheme

Mr. Andy Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has any plans to change the local enterprise agency grant scheme.

Mr. Cope: The local enterprise agency grant scheme (LEAGS) was introduced as a five-year pump-priming scheme to develop a network of viable enterprise agencies (LEAs) led and supported by the private sector. There are no plans to extend the scheme or alter its basic structure. However, it remains our intention that a network of viable agencies should be created which will continue with private sector support.

Following the announcement of Government plans in respect of the inner cities and representations from business in the community and several enterprise agencies, some modifications to the scheme will come into effect on 1 April 1988.

The changes are:

(i) The income ceiling up to which LEAs are eligible for LEAGS will be raised to £100,000 pa and will remain at this level for the remaining three years of the scheme:

(ii) During the year of a merger, newly merged LEAs will be allowed an income ceiling of £150,000 and will be able to receive up to 50 per cent. additional grant—for that one year only.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Economic Development

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what studies his Department has sponsored on the role of private enterprise in fostering economic development.

Mr. Chris Patten: In recent years the Department has sponsored studies covering the role of multinational corporations in assisting small-scale enterprises, privatisation in developing countries, and the role of British commercial banks in Commonwealth development. Related studies include trade and industrial strategies of the newly industrialised countries, export diversification for the African, Caribbean and Pacific countries, and the promotion of Indian handicrafts for export.

ENVIRONMENT

Trafford Park Development Corporation

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has had from the Trafford Park urban development corporation for trade union representation on the board.

Mr. Trippier: None. Urban development corporation board members are chosen for their ability to do the job, not as representatives of particular interests.

London Docklands Development Corporation

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what percentage of the dwellings built or started in the area of the London Docklands development corporation is for rent.

Mr. Trippier: Of the 8,000 dwellings completed in the LDDC area by 30 September 1987, a total of 16 per cent. were built for renting.

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the average worth of land per acre when vested in the London Docklands development corporation; and at what average price it is now being sold to developers.

Mr. Trippier: The average value of land when it was vested in the UDA, including water areas and reflecting liabilities transferred, was approximately £50,000 per acre. Land prices currently range from £250,000 per acre to £3 million per acre, depending on size, location, planning use and LDDC expenditure on site preparation and infrastructure.

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the remit of the London Docklands development corporation's social facilities programme unit.

Mr. Trippier: To carry forward the corporation's commitment to improvements in education, training, health, tourism, leisure, the arts and community development in docklands.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will estimate the enhancement of land values accruing to the London Docklands development corporation arising from the Beckton extension of the dockland's light railway and the approximate proportion of that increase which will need to be devoted to fund the construction of that extension.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 3 March 1988]: The Secretary of State and the LDDC are satisfied that the enhancement will be sufficient to meet the costs of the railway's construction. Precise forecasts of land receipts are not possible and the estimates used are confidential for commercial reasons.

Isle of Dogs Enterprise Zone

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the effective tax subsidy for businesses locating at the enterprise zone of the Isle of Dogs, calculated as a percentage.

Mr. Trippier: Industrial and commercial property in enterprise zones is 100 per cent. exempt from local authority rates. The rate revenue thus forgone by the authorities is reimbursed by the Government: up to 31 March 1987 a total of £10·5 million had been paid to the local authorities in whose areas the Isle of Dogs enterprise zone lies.

In addition, there is an allowance, for corporation and income tax purposes, of 100 per cent. of capital expenditure on the construction, extension or improvement of industrial and commercial buildings in an enterprise zone. Not all businesses that locate in enterprise zones are in a position to avail themselves of this benefit. Information about tax revenue forgone as a consequence is not kept for individual zones.

Neighbourhood Revitalisation

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what additional funding his Department has allocated for neighbourhood revitalisation schemes.

Mrs. Roe: The National Home Improvement Council has been allocated grant in aid of approximately £2 million towards the costs of setting up neighbourhood revitalisation services schemes throughout England.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those local authorities which have received allocations in their housing investment programme for neighbourhood revitalisation schemes.

Mrs. Roe: No specific capital allocations have been given to those local authorities co-operating with neighbourhood revitalisation services in setting up agency services schemes. The Department's regional controllers take the establishment of the N R S scheme into account in exercising their discretion over housing investment programme allocations.

Chlorofluorocarbons

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether his Department has assessed the effects of the use of chlorofluorocarbons, used as a blowing agent in the manufacture of food packaging.

Mr. Moynihan: Scientific assessment of the effects of chlorofluorocarbons (CFCs) undertaken by the Department's stratospheric ozone review group is concerned with total emissions not individual uses. Rigid polystyrene foam, which is widely used in the food packaging industry, uses approximately 5 per cent. of global production of CFCs.

Ozone Layer

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions he is having with the industries concerned in order to bring about an urgent voluntary agreement to ban substances and activities likely to damage the ozone layer.

Mr. Moynihan: Officials in the Departments of the Environment and of Trade and Industry hold regular meetings with representatives of British industry on implementing the Montreal protocol on substances that deplete the ozone layer. These meetings enable producers and users of chlorofluorocarbons and halons to report their plans for reducing the emissions of these chemicals and for switching to environmentally safe substitutes.

Local Government Finance

Mr. John M. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has any estimates of the effect of the alternative system of local government finance proposed recently by the Association of London Authorities on the level of local taxation outside London.

Mr. Howard: The ALA document does not itself offer estimates of the effect of its proposals on particular local authority areas, and does not provide sufficient information to enable others to calculate them in detail. However, the document proposes a combination of local income tax and domestic rates, with the latter equalised to reflect only variations in incomes between areas. Such an arrangement would make it virtually certain that the level of local taxation would increase in those parts of the country — particularly the north — where domestic rateable values are very low at present.

Gay and Lesbian Groups

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will discuss with the Association of London Authorities the level of expenditure by local authorities in London on support for gay and lesbian groups.

Mr. Chope: No. Clause 28 of the Local Government Bill will ensure that expenditure by local authorities for the purpose of promoting homosexuality will no longer be permitted.

Enterprise Zones (Report)

Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what future policy initiatives he is considering in the light of the publication of his Department's consultant's report on "An Evaluation of the Enterprise Zone Experiment."

Mr. Trippier: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given by my right hon. Friend to my hon. Friend the Member for Banbury (Mr. Baldry) on 17 December 1987 at column 618.

Carpets (Houses of Parliament)

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to replace the artificial fibre carpets in the House and its associated buildings; and what steps he is taking to reduce the degree of static electricity in the meantime.

Mr. Chope: Most carpeting in the Palace of Westminster is made of an 80 per cent. wool and 20 per cent. nylon mix. There is a limited amount of synthetic fibre carpet, most of which has been modified to prevent static build-up. There are no plans to replace it.

Static electricity is exacerbated when there are low levels of humidity. The Crown Suppliers spray carpets with anti-static fluid when requested to do so.

Derelict Land

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment on how many occasions, where, and on what dates, his Department has initiated, or been actively involved in, derelict land clearance operations outside England, since 1969.

Mr. Ridley: In the period in question, the statutory responsibilities of the Secretary of State for the Environment for derelict land reclamation have been confined to England, though on occasions initiatives launched in England have been of benefit to other parts of Great Britain and collaboration has always taken place between those involved in derelict land clearance programmes throughout Great Britain.

Ministerial Visits (Wales)

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish in the Official Report a list of all the official visits to Wales by a Secretary of State for the Environment, in each year since 1969.

Mr. Ridley: This information is not available.

Rating Reform

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what plans he has to commission management consultants to investigate the costs of collecting the community charge; and if he will make a statement;

(2) how much he plans to spend on research into the administration and collection of the community charge in (a) 1987-88 and (b) 1988-89; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ridley: Various estimates from different sources have emerged in recent months for the cost of preparing for and collecting the proposed community charge. My Department's forecasts have not changed. I am about to commission consultants to undertake a study of these costs, the reasons for the wide differences between authorities of similar size and factors which authorities should take into account in designing efficient new systems. The cost of this study, which will fall to be paid in 1988-89, will be up to £60,000.

Water Industry

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how the water industry will be guided on the development of Government policy for the regulation of charges for water and sewerage services during preparations for its forthcoming reorganisation and privatisation.

Mr. Ridley: I am sending to the chairman of the Water Authorities Association and the president of the Water Companies' Association a series of letters setting out the details of various aspects of the policy settled in the light of the discussions and consultations that have taken place to date. I have placed a copy of the first of these letters, "Utility Company Charges Regulation for Core Services (WRP 1)," in the Libraries of both Houses. The main features of charges regulation will be as follows:

—Customers should be protected against the ability of the water authorities, as monopolies, to charge high prices;

—Existing statutory safeguards covering the structure of water charges will remain in force after privatisation. The utilities must avoid undue discrimination between classes of customers and charges must have regard to the utilities' costs of providing water and sewerage services;

—Charges increases are to be related to movements in the RPI, adjusted to take account of factors affecting the efficiency and financial requirements of the privatised water utilities;

—A new, independent Director General of Water Services will be appointed to oversee the "utilities charges and to protect customers' interests".

PRIME MINISTER

Tees and Hartlepool Port Authority

Q42. Mr. Fallon: To ask the Prime Minister whether she will make an official visit to Tees and Hartlepool port authority.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Marton

Q96. Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Prime Minister if she has any plans to make an official visit to Marton near Rugby.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Interdepartmental Working Parties

Mr. Madel: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list the number of Government interdepartmental working parties not at work, with the exception of those concerned with national security; and what subjects they are considering.

The Prime Minister: Interdepartmental working parties are a normal feature of government. They are necessary to secure the requisite degree of co-ordination. Records are not held centrally. In many cases the detailed arrangements for such interdepartmental co-ordination and the matters discussed are classified and may form the basis of advice to Ministers.

Engagements

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 8 March.

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 8 March.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 8 March.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 8 March.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 8 March.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 8 March.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 8 March.

Mr. Stern: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 8 March.

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House I shall be having further meetings later today. This evening I hope to have an audience of Her Majesty the Queen.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Inner Cities

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the achievements of his Department with respect to education in the inner cities.

Mr. Dunn: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer which I gave him on 1 December at column 539. In addition, the city technology colleges programme continues to expand, and the Department is to co-operate with the Department of Employment and the Manpower Services Commission as announced on 7 March 1988 in backing 12 new compacts between groups of employers and schools and colleges in inner cities.

Polytechnics (Women Staff)

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what proportions of polytechnic teachers and heads of departments in polytechnics are women.

Mr. Jackson: At March 1986, the latest date for which information is available, 15·9 per cent. of full-time teachers, and 7·8 per cent. of full-time heads of departments in polytechnics in England and Wales were women.

City Technology Colleges

Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on new developments in the establishment of the city technology colleges.

Mrs. Rumbold: Sponsorship for five city technology colleges has now been announced. We are making good progress in discussions with a number of prospective sponsors.

Education Reform Bill

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what recent representations he has received about the likely effects of the Education Reform Bill on higher education: and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: We have received many representations concerning the higher education provisions in the Education Reform Bill which, by clarifying responsibilities and accountability, pave the way for increased efficiency.

Research Councils

Dr. Reid: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will make provision for restructuring costs of the research councils an addition to the science budget, as recommended by the Advisory Board for the Research Councils in its discussion document "A Strategy for the Science Base."

Mr. Jackson: We shall be considering what additional resources might be required to implement such recommendations in the document as may be approved.

Postgraduates

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how the number of postgraduates in science has changed since 1979, in absolute and percentage terms.

Mr. Jackson: The information is as follows:

Full-time United Kingdom domiciled science postgraduates in Great Britain

	Thousands
1979	8·3
1986	11·1
Change	+2·8
Percentage change	+34

The subject classification for universities changed in 1985, so that the figures are compiled on slightly different bases.

Pupil Costs

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) how much was spent per pupil in primary schools in (a) England and (b) Suffolk in the most recent year for which figures are available; and what were the comparable figures for 1978-79 at constant prices;

(2) how much was spent per pupil in middle and high schools in (a) England and (b) Suffolk in the most recent year for which figures are available; and what were the comparable figures for 1978-79 at constant prices.

Mr. Dunn: The available information is as follows:

Net institutional recurrent expenditure[1] per pupil (£1985-86 prices)

	England		Suffolk
	1978-79[2]	1985-86	1978-79[2]	1985-86
Primary schools[3]	690	815	680	770
Secondary schools[3]	1,000	1,175	890	1,030

Notes:

[1] Net institutional recurrent expenditure covers the cost of salaries and wages, premises and certain supplies and services. It does not include the cost of school meals, central administration and inspection, debt charges or revenue contributions to capital outlay.

[2] The cash prices for 1978-79 have been repriced to 1985-86 prices using the Gross Domestic Product (Market Prices) Deflator.

[3] Includes Middle Schools as deemed.

Language Teachers

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what action is being taken to ensure that there are adequate numbers of teachers trained for languages other than French.

Mrs. Rumbold: Education support grants are being made available from 1988-89 to help local education authorities to plan and implement diversification of modern language provision. We are holding a secondary teacher staffing this month—a year early—to establish up-to-date information on existing stocks of teachers, including those qualified to teach languages other than French. We are in the process of estimating likely demand for teachers for the national curriculum including modern languages. We monitor applications for initial teacher training closely. We are already featuring the need for modern language teachers in our teacher recruitment publicity.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Property Compensation

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he has any plans to change the policy of offering £50 as site value for a terraced house in an area scheduled for redevelopment in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Needham: There is no "policy" of offering £50 site value for a terrace house in an area scheduled for redevelopment in Northern Ireland. In accordance with the legislative framework applying to compensation for compulsory acquisition, settlement levels are governed by property values in an open market and by the particular circumstances of each individual case.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many home owners denied grant because of redevelopment proposals prior to a vesting order, can obtain adequate compensation; and what estimate he has made of the average ratio between expenditure on private improvements and the subsequent level of compensation.

Mr. Needham: Compensation for houses compulsorily acquired by the Housing Executive is governed by property values in an open market under the Housing (Northern Ireland) Order 1981. Data on the average ratio between expenditure on private improvements and the subsequent level of compensation are not available.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when the level of compensation payable to owners of property which is to be acquired compulsorily, by vesting order if necessary, for redevelopment, was last reviewed; and if he will take steps to increase the level of compensation payable at present.

Mr. Needham: The Housing (Northern Ireland) Order 1981 consolidated the previous legislation on compensation for compulsory purchase for this purpose and maintained the existing practice of compensation being based on the market value of a particular property. The level of compensation follows the market and is therefore self-regulatory. I have no plan to change the current practice.

Antrim Area Hospital

Mr. Clifford Forsythe: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will forecast the completion date of the Antrim area hospital; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: Contracts for the construction of the new Antrim hospital will be let at the end of this year and I expect building work to be complete by December 1992.

The new hospital will provide urgently needed, modern facilities for acute services for the people of Antrim, Larne, Ballymena, Carrickfergus and Newtownabbey as well as providing some specialised services for the whole of the northern area.

This is a vital development and I should like to take this opportunity to reaffirm my full commitment to the project.

Housing Condition Surveys

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many housing condition surveys have been completed in Northern Ireland since 1970; what has been the cost of each at 1988 prices; and when he expects the next survey to be carried out.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 7 March 1988]: There have been three major surveys carried out since 1970, in 1974, 1979 and 1984. The Housing Executive is also working on a mini house condition survey for 1987, which is a mid-term analysis survey. The results are due in report form by the end of 1988. Details of the costs are as follows:

Year	Actual cost	Cost at January 1988 prices
1974	83,200	339,000
1979	180,000	328,000
1984	248,400	284,700
1987 Mini House Condition Survey—budget £59,000

Kincora Boys' Home

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Brent, East of 25 February, he will call for a report from the Chief Constable of the Royal Ulster Constabulary as to the total number of Government employees interviewed in connection with investigations into the Kincora boys' home, and as to how many of these were officials of his Department at the time of the interview.

Mr. Tom King [holding answer 2 March 1988]: No.

ENERGY

Departmental Cash Limits

Dr. Michael Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether he has any changes to announce to his Department's cash limits for 1987-88.

Mr. Parkinson: In addition to the £1 million reduction announced on 2 February 1988, at column 533, the cash limit for class VI, vote 2 has been reduced by a further £10 million to £240·272 million. This reduction is to help offset the increase in provision in class VI sought in a Spring Supplementary Estimate (HC. 284) to the non-cash limited vote 1.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Arab-Israel Dispute

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are the boundaries of Jerusalem which are currently recognised by Her Majesty's Government; and whether they include those previously unoccupied areas on which new housing estates have been built since 1967, and which have been incorporated under Israeli law within the Jerusalem municipality.

Mr. Mellor: The status of the whole Jerusalem area, as defined by United Nations General Assembly resolution 303 (IV) of 9 December 1949, remains to be determined. All Israeli settlements in the territories occupied since 1967 are illegal.

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reports he has sought from the consul-general in Jerusalem about the refusal of Palestinian representatives to meet the United States Secretary of State on his recent visit; and if he will instruct the consul-general to urge those Palestinian representatives to convey their views on the peace process to Her Majesty's Government, for onward transmission to the Government of the United States of America.

Mr. Mellor: We have received full reports from all the appropriate posts about Mr. Shultz's recent visit to the middle east. We hope that a way can be found for the Palestinians to put their views direct to Mr. Shultz. Meanwhile, we will continue to do all we can to help the parties to the Arab/Israel dispute bridge the gap between their respective positions.

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will list the specific claims to sovereignty over that area of the former British mandate in Palestine, now variously described as the West Bank or Judaea and Samaria, and currently under Israeli administration, which are (a) accepted and (b) noted by Her Majesty's Government.

Mr. Mellor: Since 27 April 1950 we have recognised Jordanian sovereignty over the West Bank. No other Government have formally claimed sovereignty to this area, except those parts which Israel purports to have incorporated within the municipal boundaries of Jerusalem.

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are the international boundaries on the Golan Heights which are currently recognised by Her Majesty's Government; and how they relate to those areas currently supervised by the United Nations under the 1974 disengagement agreements.

Mr. Mellor: The international boundary between Israel and Syria remains to be negotiated, but the armistice line established by the 1949 Syria-Israel armistice agreement has generally been accepted as the de facto boundary. The demilitarised zone, in which the United Nations disengagement observer force operates, lies well to the east of this line.

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will list the specific claims to sovereignty over the Gaza strip which are (a) accepted and (b) noted by Her Majesty's Government.

Mr. Mellor: No Government have made a specific, formal claim to sovereignty over the Gaza strip.

Mr. Yasser Arafat (Speech)

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will make a statement on the action of the British delegation (a) before and (b) during the speech to the United Nations Human Rights Commission in Geneva by Mr. Yasser Arafat; whether the action of the British delegation was co-ordinated in advance with that of the United States of America; and whether any protest has been made by the British delegation to the chairman of the Commission about (a) allowing Mr. Arafat to speak from the podium and (b) the violence of his language against another member state.

Mr. Mellor: We and other Western delegations expressed to the chairman of the Human Rights Commission our vigorous opposition to the proposal to extend exceptional privileges to Mr. Arafat, but the majority of members were in favour and the chairman ruled accordingly. A junior member of the United Kingdom delegation was present during Mr. Arafat's speech. The level of representation was discussed in advance with other Western delegations, but not specifically co-ordinated with that of the United States. We have made no protest about the content of Mr. Arafat's speech.

Gazans (Travel to Egypt)

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what requests he has made, on humanitarian grounds, to the Egyptian Government to permit Gazans to travel to Egypt without a visa through the security fence, and to assist in the resettlement of overcrowded families within Egyptian territory in Sinai; and what response he has received.

Mr. Mellor: None.

NATIONAL FINANCE

EC (Internal Market)

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the extent and impact of the proposals contained in the European Commission's White Paper, "Europe without frontiers; Towards a Large Internal Market", in so far as the Treasury is concerned.

Mr. Brooke: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer by the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster on 3 March at column 643. The Treasury has a particular interest in proposals relating to public procurement procedures, capital movements, banking services and fiscal issues.

Inland Revenue and Customs and Excise

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether the Inland Revenue and Customs and Excise will be implementing the Keith committee's recommendation that they extend nationwide their 1977 Leeds experiment for exchange of information between local revenue and value added tax offices.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Both the Revenue and Customs, in their published responses to volumes 1 and 2 of the report of the Keith committee on the enforcement powers of the revenue departments, proposed that the matching recommendations on local exchange of information should be accepted. With my authority, exchanges, which were formerly restricted to head office level as a result of a 1972 ministerial undertaking, will, from 1 April 1988, take place at local level also. The exchanges will concentrate on larger cases of suspected tax evasion.

Statutory authority for the exchange of information by Inland Revenue and Customs and Excise for the purpose of assisting them in the performance of their duties is already provided by section 127, Finance Act 1972. No new legislation is therefore required.

Value Added Tax

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list all those goods and services whose exemption from value added tax is currently under review by the European Court of Justice.

Mr. Lilley: There are no goods or services whose exemption from value added tax in the United Kingdom is currently under review by the European Court; we are not aware of any such cases currently involving other member states.

Privatisation

Mr. Soames: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on his future plans for privatisation.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The Government have already announced their intention to privatise British Steel, and the water and electricity industries. There may also be other sales. No decision has been taken on the timing of future privatisations.

Mr. Soames: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the bodies privatised since 1979 and the proceeds that Her Majesty's Government have accrued therefrom.

Mr. Norman Lamont: A list of bodies privatised from 1979-80 to 1986-87 can be found in the Government's public expenditure White Papers published since 1984. In 1987-88 Rolls-Royce, BAA and Royal Ordnance plc were privatised and the Government also sold their 31 per cent. residual shareholding in BP. The latest estimate of proceeds for these and other asset sales in 1987-88 is £5 billion.

International Debt

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table of the debts owed to Western banks by Third world countries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley: The data requested are to be found in table 4a of the quarterly report on international banking developments, published by the Bank for International Settlements.

Tobacco

Mr. Forth: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has estimated the revenue effect of the proposed banning of oral tobacco products announced by the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Health and Social Security, the hon. Member for Derbyshire, South (Mrs. Currie), Official Report, 26 February, column 362.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 7 March 1988]: The oral tobacco products covered by the proposed ban are not subject to any excise duty.

THE ARTS

Almeida Theatre

Mr. Butler: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he will make a statement on the implications for his arts funding policy of the Greater London Arts Association's refusal to continue funding the Almeida theatre, in the light of its record on ethnic minority employment.

Mr. Luce [holding answer 7 March 1988]: I understand that the Greater London Arts Association has not refused to fund the Almeida threatre, but that its performing arts committee has recommended a grant of £166,000 in 1988-89—12·3 per cent. less than the previous level. This has to be seen in the context of a 10 per cent. cut in the overall budget of the GLA. I note that a meeting has been proposed between the Arts Council and the GLA. I have asked to be informed of the outcome.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Research and Development

Mr. Wray: To ask the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the agricultural research and development bodies invited to give information and suggestions to the Barnes review; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: As explained in the reply given to the hon. Member for Falkirk, East (Mr. Ewing) on 3 March at column 674 there have been no formal consultations outside Government, but the following bodies responsible for agricultural research and development are among those from whom we have received views and information:

Agricultural and Food Research Council
Apple and Pear Development Council
British Flour Milling and Baking Research Association
British Food Manufacturing Industry Research Association
Campden Food Preservation Research Association
Home Grown Cereals Authority
Horticultural Development Council
Meat and Livestock Commission
Milk Marketing Board
Potato Marketing Board
Priorities Board for Research and Development in Agriculture and Food
Processors and Growers Research Organisation
Scottish Agricultural Colleges
Scottish Agricultural Research Institutes
Sea Fish Industry Authority
Sugar Beet Research and Education Committee

I would also refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Bristol, South (Ms. Primarolo) on 1 March at column 546.

Mr. Eadie: To ask the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish the Barnes review into research and development activities within his Departmental responsibility.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Bristol, South (Ms. Primarolo) on 1 March at column 546.

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what definition he has of the term near market, as applied to agricultural research and development.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Bristol, South (Ms. Primarolo) on 1 March at column 547.

Arctic Foxes

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will make it his policy to take steps to apply the provisions of the Arctic Foxes Order (Northern Ireland) 1988 to the United Kingdom, as a whole;

(2) what information he has concerning the number of Arctic fox fur farms in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I have information about premises farming Arctic fox for their fur from the licensing arrangements operated for mink farms and from the review of those arrangements in 1987. Arctic fox are farmed at three establishments of which two are in England and one in Scotland.

My Department is considering whether controls on the keeping of destructive non-indigenous animals should be extended to Arctic fox and other species. Organisations and the public have been invited to make representations by the end of the month.

Sheep

Ms. Quin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will give the number of sheep farmed in each county of England in the following years, 1975, 1980, 1983, 1986 and 1987.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding answer 7 March 1988]: The information is given in the table. 1987 figures are not yet available.

DEFENCE

NATO Nuclear Planning Group

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will provide a full list of the projects within the decision of the NATO nuclear planning group meeting in October 1983 to modernise weapons.

Mr. Ian Stewart: SACEUR's proposals for implementing the 1983 Montebello commitment were presented to NATO Defence Ministers in 1985. The modernisation measures called for by SACEUR comprise the development of a stand-off tactical air-to-surface missile (TASM), the deployment of a follow on to the Lance surface-to-surface missile system, the introduction of improved nuclear artillery shells and the continued modernisation of NATO's dual capable aircraft.

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many subject access requests under the terms of the Data Protection Act his Department has received; what was his estimate of this number; whether he is reconsidering the subject access fee charged by his Department as a result; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: A total of 2,317 subject access requests have been received by the major pay and personnel database centres in the Ministry of Defence; all were from current, past or potential employees. The figures so far are considered to be roughly in line with the forecast of between 0·01 per cent. and 0·1 per cent. of the target population per annum. The subject access fee charged has not been reconsidered at this time.

Women

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many (a) generals, (b) colonels, (c) majors, (d) captains, (e) warrant officers, (f) lieutenants and (g) non-commissioned officers in the British Army are women; what is the total number of people in each rank; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The information requested is as follows:

Memoranda of Understanding (US-UK)

Mr. Warren To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many memoranda of understanding exist between the United Kingdom and the United States of America arising from the Nunn amendment; what each covers; how many have been funded; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: Ten MOU exist between the United Kingdom and United States of America involving Nunn amendment funding. They cover:

The NATO Frigate for the 1990s (NFR90)
NATO Anti-Air Warfare System (NAAWS)
The Modular Stand-Off Weapon (MSOW)
ADA Project Support Environment (ADA PSE)
Multifunctional Information Distribution System (MIDS)
Airborne Radar Demonstrator System (ARDS)
NATO Information System, Information Exchange
NATO Information System, Co-operative Q & A component development
Advanced Sea Mine (ASM)
Advanced Short Takeoff and Verticial Landing Technology (ASTOVL)

All the above MOU except the advanced sea mine and ASTOVL technology, involve other NATO nations in addition to the United States and United Kingdom. The United Kingdom has funded initial work under all of the above MOU with the exception of the modular stand-off weapon programme, for which funding will be considered once proposals from industry have been evaluated.

US Naval Airship Programme

Mr. Grylls: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what involvement his Department has in the United States naval airship programme.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 4 March 1988]: The Department has had no direct involvement in the United States naval airship programme, but has been fully supportive of British industrial participation.

Military Equipment

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list those countries to which Her Majesty's Government will not authorise the sale of defence equipment.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 26 February 1988]: It is our general policy to consider all applications for licences to export defence equipment on a case by case basis, taking into account our international obligations and declared policy towards individual countries.

SCOTLAND

Drug Addicts

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his best estimate of the number of persons suffering from drug-related problems in (a) Glasgow district council area and (b) Shettleston parliamentary constituency; what additional measures he proposes to take in order to tackle the problem in both areas; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Because of the nature of the activity it is very difficult to make precise estimates of the numbers of problem drug takers. The latest estimate is that there are between 5,000 and 7,500 intravenous drug misuers in the west of Scotland (mainly Glasgow). Figures are not collected in respect of individual parliamentary constituencies.

The Government remain committed to tackling the problem of drug misuse throughout Scotland and a wide range of positive measures have already been taken or are in hand. A further stage of the Government's information and education campaign against drug misuse in Scotland was launched on 1 February. From 1987-88 the total sum set aside in the health programme in Scotland specifically for the support of drug misuse services is over £1 million per annum. The sum allocated to Greater Glasgow health board under these arrangements in 1987-88 is £392,615. This is a major contribution to the encouragement and assistance of these services. The provision of such services is, however, primarily the responsibility of health boards and local authorities.

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many subject access requests under the terms of the Data Protection Act his Department has received; what was his estimate of this number; whether he is reconsidering the subject access fee charged by his Department as a result; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: No valid requests for access have been received from the general public. For forward planning, there was a working assumption of 500 requests per annum. I am not proposing to review the access fee. There have been no complaints or other evidence that the access fee accounts for the low level of interest shown.

Inverclyde Initiative

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 29 February to the hon. Member for Greenock and Port Glasgow, Official Report, column 433, how much of the £8·75 million of public money spent on the Inverclyde initiative came from the Scottish Development Agency.

Mr. Lang: The sum of £8·75 million of public money spent by the Inverclyde initiative since its inception represents the total Scottish Development Agency expenditure to date.

Consultants

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much money has been paid to management or financial consultants in 1985-86 and 1986-87 for work for (a) the Scottish Home and Health Department and (b) each health board.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Amounts paid to management or financial consultants for work commissioned by the Scottish Home and Health Department were:

1985-86	282,252
1986-87	[1]248,535

[1] Includes £118,000 for a project commissioned by the Home side of the Department.

Information available from the annual accounts of health boards relates to the total of fees paid to management consultants, to legal firms (other than for legal expenses connected with compensation claims) and to work study consultants. The amounts for each health board are shown in the table.

Caesarian Section Deliveries

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many women in 1986-87, having had a caesarian section, were discharged from a National Health Service maternity unit into a private hospital in Lothian, Tayside and Greater Glasgow health board areas.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I regret that the information requested is not held centrally.

Childbirth (Statistics)

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many women in 1986-87, having given birth, were discharged from a National Health Service maternity unit into a private hospital in Lothian, Tayside and Greater Glasgow health board areas;

(2) how many women in 1986-87 were admitted to National Health Service maternity units from private hospitals in Lothian, Tayside and Greater Glasgow health board areas.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I regret that the information requested is not held centrally.

Health Boards (Income)

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what was the total income received by each health board for dressings from private hospitals and clinics in each of the last 10 years;

(2) what was the total income received by each health board for dressings from private nursing homes in each of the last 10 years;

(3) what was the total income received by each health board for dressings from individual consultants in each of the last 10 years;

(4) what was the total income received by each health board for pharmaceutical preparations and medicines from private nursing homes in each of the last 10 years;

(5) what was the total income received by each health board for pharmaceutical preparations and medicines from private hospitals and clinics in each of the last 10 years;

(6) what was the total income received by each health board for pharmaceutical preparations and medicines from individual consultants in each of the last 10 years;

(7) what was the total income received by each health board in each of the last 10 years for the hire of National Health Service equipment to private registered nursing homes;

(8) what was the total income received by each health board in each of the last 10 years for the hire of National Health Service equipment to private hospitals;

(9) what was the total income received by each health board in each of the last 10 years for the hire of National Health Service equipment to individual consultants.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Information held centrally on income received by health boards does not separately identify the items requested.

Private Beds

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the number of private beds in National Health Service hospitals in Scotland by each health board and hospital.

Merit Awards

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will provide health boards with an additional allocation to cover the cost of merit awards; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: No. The costs of distinction and meritorious service awards along with all other pay-related costs fall to be met from health boards' general allocations.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give individual health boards control over the granting of merit awards; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This would not be practicable. The objective of the present system is to ensure that the awards available for distribution are allocated fairly and equitably on a Great Britain basis and this could not be achieved if allocation was determined separately by individual health boards.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the total value of merit awards for each health board in Scotland for each of the financial years from 1979-80 to 1987-88.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information requested is not collected centrally, but an estimate can be made from the number and value of awards at 30 November each year. Estimates are shown in the table for 1983-87; figures for earlier years are not readily available.

Estimated annual value of Distinction Awards awarded: as at 30 November

£'000s

Health Board	1983	1984	1985	1986	1987
Argyll and Clyde	123	151	137	144	186

Scotland	4,759	5,283	5,770	6,350	6,926

Notes:
(1) The estimates are based on the value of awards multiplied by the whole time equivalent of the doctors and dentists receiving them. Honorary staff are given a notional WTE of 7/11.
(2) Other employers' costs, such as national insurance contributions for example, are not included in these estimates.

Medical Consultants

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if, further to his reply of 25 January, Official Report, column 54, he will list how many consultants employed by the National Health Service in Scotland are (a) full-time, (b) maximum part-time and (c) part-time, by health board and specialty.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information requested is shown in the tables.

Hip Replacement Operations

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the average waiting time for a hip replacement operation in National Health Service beds in National Health Service hospitals in each health board area.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information recorded for 1985, which is the lastest available, is as follows:

Health board	Mean waiting time in days
Argyll and Clyde	207
Ayrshire and Arran	167
Borders	116
Dumfries and Galloway	191
Fife	214
Forth Valley	277
Grampian	303
Greater Glasgow	127
Highland	323
Lanarkshire	145
Lothian	207
Orkney	—
Shetland	—
Tayside	285
Western Isles	—
Scotland	203

Eye Tests and Dental Examinations

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many (a) eye tests and (b) dental examinations took place in Fife in each of the years 1980 to 1986.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information is set out in the table.

thousands

Year	Eye tests	Dental examinations
1980	49·0	[1]
1981	48·3	[1]
1982	51·3	151·4
1983	54·7	157·7
1984	56·3	164·5
1985	60·3	169·0
1986	62·4	183·4

[1] Not held centrally.

Prison Officers

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many extra prison officer posts will be created during the financial years 1988-89 and 1989-90.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. and learned Friend expects increases in the number of staff by 218 in 1988-89 and a further 114 in 1989-90.

Police Officers

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many extra police officer posts will be created during the financial years 1988-89 and 1989-90 in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: This will depend on decisions taken by police authorities in the first instance. However, the assumptions regarding police manpower growth in these years underlying the Government's public expenditure plans were outlined in the recently published "Scottish Commentary," a copy of which is in the Library.

These plans provide for police strength to increase to 13,830 by the end of 1988-89 and to 13,880 by the end of 1989-90.

Probation

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what percentage of persons placed on a probation order in Scotland in 1985 and 1986 completed their period of supervision without a further appearance in court.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information requested is not available centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Community Service Order

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what percentage of persons placed on a community service order in Scotland during 1985 and 1986 completed their period of service without a further appearance in court;

(2) what percentage of persons who were the subject of a community service order in Scotland had been sentenced again within two years of the completion of the order, for the latest convenient period.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information requested is not available centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Recidivism

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many persons in Scotland who were granted parole in 1985 and 1986 whose original offence involved violence, sexual assault or robbery were sentenced again (a) during the period of their parole licence or (b) within 12 months of the expiration of that licence.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Information on the numbers of persons convicted within 12 months of their parole licence expiring is not collected centrally; the other information requested could be compiled only at disproportionate cost.

Offenders (Electronic Tagging)

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he has any plans to introduce electronic surveillance as a condition of bail, probation, parole or executive release on a trial basis in either Strathclyde or any other part of Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: While we are keeping developments on this matter under review, we have no such present plans in Scotland.

Police Surgeons

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many police surgeons are employed in Scotland; and, of these, how many are female.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: 169, of whom 18 are female.

Agency Staff

Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the latest figures for the number of agency staff supplied to the National Health Service in the following categories: (a) nurses, (b) midwives, (c) professional and technical staff (excluding works staff), (d) works professional staff, (e) administrative and clerical staff, (f) ambulance officers and control assistants and (g) other staff, indicating their distribution by health board; what payments in fees has been made by each board to each of these groups over the last 12 months; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Information is held centrally only for agency nurses and midwives and ambulance officers and control assistants. No agency ambulance officers and control assistants are employed. The table shows the average daily number of qualified nurses and midwives, by whole-time equivalent, supplied by agencies to health boards in Scotland during the year ended 30 September 1987. No information is available centrally about payments made for agency staff.

Agricultural Research and Development

Mr. Eadie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any further proposals to cut agricultural research and development funding in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Our current proposals are set out in the White Paper "The Government's Expenditure Plans 1988-89 to 1990-91" Cm. 288-II.

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what definition his Department uses of the term near market, as applied to agricultural research and development.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: There is no formal definition. It is, however, a convenient way of referring to the kind of work of direct commercial benefit towards which the Government believe industry should contribute more.

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what reviews are being, or have been, carried out by or on behalf of, his Department into agricultural research and development funded by his Department; when the results of any such reviews will be published; and if this information will be made available to the House.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The programmes of agricultural research and development are kept under continual review in association with the Priorities Board for R and D in Agriculture and Food, the Agricultural and Food Research Council, the Scottish Agricultural R and D Advisory Council and other bodies. Ad hoc reviews are also undertaken from time to time into specific subject areas or other issues, as appropriate.

Language Teachers

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what action is being taken to ensure that there are adequate numbers of teachers in Scotland training for languages other than French.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Consultations about the annual intake of student teachers to the colleges of education provide a mechanism for alerting the Government to areas of actual or potential need. The most recent consultations indicate that the supply of modern languages teachers is adequate to meet the needs of education authorities.

Forestry

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the average wage of Forestry Commission forest keepers, at the latest available date.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 22 February 1988]: The basic weekly wage is £131·91 and the average gross weekly earnings are £177·31.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many (a) grant and (b) felling licence applications were received by the Forestry Commission in each year from 1984; how many were referred to regional advisory committees; and what proportion of the annual total this represented.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 1 March 1988]: The information is as follows:

Year (to 31 March)	Number received	Number and percentage of cases referred to Regional advisory committees
Grant scheme applications
1984	2,255	16 (0·7)
1985	2,915	10 (0·3)

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many (a) grant and (b) felling licence applications were referred to the regional advisory committee for each Forestry Commission conservancy in each year from 1984, and what were the results.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 1 March 1988]: The information is set out in the following tables, and reflects the fact that the commission's conservancies were reorganised in 1984-85.

Scottish Health Service (Advertisement)

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland who placed the advertisement in The Scotsman on behalf of the Scottish Health Service in which notice of information about tendering for in-house ancillary services for health boards was given; and who is responsible for the payment for the advertisement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 3 March 1988]: The advertisement was placed and paid for by the health boards acting jointly. Such co-ordinated action by boards seems a cost-effective way to implement the Government's policy of competitive tendering.

Ministerial Offices

Mr. Harry Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the total cost involved in moving his office, together with the offices of other Scottish Office Ministers, from their present location in New St. Andrew's House to St. Andrew's House.

Mr. Rifkind [holding answer 4 March 1988]: The return of my office and that of certain of my ministerial colleagues to St. Andrew's House requires certain structural adaptations and improvements to the ministerial accommodation in the building. The total cost is likely to be of the order of £150,000 including VAT and contingencies.

HMA v Russell Stirton

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what further proceedings the Lord Advocate is considering arising from the facts and circumstances surrounding the case of HMA v Russell Stirton, with particular reference to those narrated in charge 9 of the indictment.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 4 March 1988]: None.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if the Lord Advocate was consulted by the procurator fiscal of Glasgow in connection with his consideration of whether to oppose bail in respect of charges against Russell Stirton on 24 April 1986.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 4 March 1988]: No.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if the Lord Advocate will review the circumstances surrounding the case of HMA v Russell Stirton and the investigation by an officer of Lothian and Borders police into allegations made by Russell Stirton; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 4 March 1988]: The Lord Advocate does not intend any further review of the circumstances surrounding the case of HMA v Russell Stirton.

Bail

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what guidelines the Lord Advocate issued to procurators fiscal in connection with the granting of bail (a) before 26 April 1986 and (b) thereafter; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 4 March 1988]: Instructions were issued to procurators fiscal following the coming into force of the Bail etc. (Scotland) Act 1980. These instructions were current on 26 April 1986. They have recently been revised and re-issued. The date, 26 April 1986, is without significance in this connection.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if guidelines are issued to procurators fiscal concerning policy on whether or not to oppose bail in cases where an accused person offers to provide information to the police in respect of a third party.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 4 March 1988]: No. Procurators fiscal are expected to exercise their discretion in the light of all relevant factors affecting the public interest in such cases.

Electricity Generation

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proportion of electricity generation in Scotland is met by (a) nuclear, (b) coal-fired, (c) oil fired, (d) hydro and (e) other power stations.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 7 March 1988]: I am advised by the Scottish electricity boards, UKAEA and BNFL that the proportions of electricity generation sent out to the supply network from different sources in Scotland during the year ending 31 March 1987 were as follows:

	Percentage
Nuclear	43·5
Coal-fired	34·4
Oil-fired	9·1
Hydro	12·7
Pumped storage (net)	0·2
Other (for example diesels, wind, private generation)	0·1

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will estimate the proportion of electricity generation in Scotland in 1998 which will be met by (a) nuclear, (b) coal-fired, (c) oil-fired, (d) hydro and (e) other power stations.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 7 March 1988]: The proportions of electricity generation met from different sources in 1998 will depend upon the availability of fuels and their relative costs at that time. In view of the uncertainties associated with these factors, it is considered that no useful estimates can be made.

United States Tobacco Company

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the grants awarded to the United States Tobacco Company to set up and maintain its company in East Kilbride.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 7 March 1988]: I refer to the reply given to the hon. Member for Falkirk, East (Mr. Ewing) on 4 March.

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if it is his intention to provide additional grant support to the United States Tobacco Company in East Kilbride to manufacture products other than tobacco products for oral use, consequent upon the announcement made by the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Health, the hon. Member for Derbyshire, South (Mrs. Currie), on 26 February, Official Report, column 362, concerning a prohibition on tobacco products for oral use.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 7 March 1988]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him on 3 March. It is, of course, open to the company to apply for relevant grants for any projects which it is considering.

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will take steps to provide alternative employment for the employees of the United States Tobacco Company in East Kilbride consequent upon the announcement made by the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Health, the hon. Member for Derbyshire, South (Mrs. Currie), on 26 February, Official Report, column 362, concerning a prohibition on tobacco products for oral use.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 7 March 1988]: I refer to my previous reply to the hon. Member on 3 March.

Mr. Harry Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he intends to discuss with United States Tobacco the refunding of financial assistance given to it for the manufacture of Skoal Bandits.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 4 March 1988]: Any question of the refunding of financial assistance in relation to United States Tobacco will arise only if the conditions under which assistance was given are breached. I have no evidence at this time that any such breach has taken place.

Mr. Harry Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland on what date it was decided to give financial assistance to United States Tobacco for the manufacture of Skoal Bandits; and what was the total amount of assistance given.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 4 March 1988]: Financial assistance in terms of the Industrial Development Act 1982 was offered to United States Tobacco on 27 November 1984. To date the only payments made have been under the regional development grant scheme and amount to £193,357.

TRANSPORT

EC (Internal Market)

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the extent and impact of the proposals contained in the European Commission's White Paper, "Europe without frontiers; Towards a Large Internal Market", in so far as his Department is concerned.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Trade and Industry on 3 March. The Department of Transport has a particular interest in proposals covering the transport of goods and passengers by road, vehicle emissions and vehicle type approval, air transport, maritime transport, and inland waterways transport.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many members of staff within his Department are located within each region outside London; what percentage this constitutes of staff within his Department; and what are the comparable figures, in absolute and percentage terms, in 1979.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The number of percentage of Department of Transport staff (including casuals and part-timers) located outside London is as follows:

	1 March 1988		1 April 1979
	Number	Per cent.	Number	Per cent.
South East	2,146	14·1	2,193	14·8
South West	1,103	7·3	864	5·8
East Anglia	314	2·1	324	2·2
East Midlands	545	3·6	497	3·4
West Midlands	773	5·1	720	4·9
North West	842	5·5	797	5·4
Yorkshire and Humberside	694	4·6	669	4·5
Northern	452	3·0	453	3·1
Wales	4,665	30·7	5,193	35·1
Scotland	797	5·3	752	5·1
Northern Ireland	15	0·1	0	0·0

Organisation changes made since 1979 will distort any comparison between years. These include the transfer of 765 staff from the Department of Environment in 1981 and 1,459 from the Department of Trade and Industry in 1984.

Truck Stops

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on progress on meetings with local authority associations and others on the provision of truck stops near motorways.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: On 19 February the Department had discussions with the three main local authority associations concerned with the provision of services on all purpose trunk roads, including those for lorry drivers. It is proposed shortly to have a further meeting with both them and representatives of the oil and catering industries so as to take further the initiative to secure comprehensive provision of facilities where needed and where consistent with road safety and other considerations.

The policy on provision of services for motorway users was set out in answer to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Mid-Worcestershire (Mr. Forth) on 1 July last year, column 88. Where proposals are put forward for truck stops off motorways but designed to serve the needs of motorway users, the Department asks local planning authorities to take into account road safety and traffic implications as well as the services already available or to be provided on the motorway itself.

Merchant Shipping Policy

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he last met members of the Nautical Institute to discuss merchant shipping policy.

Mr. Channon: I have had no such meeting, but officials of my Department are in regular contact with the institute.

Motorways (Surface Water)

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether his Department will undertake further surveys to assess the effect of spray on motorways and its involvement in accidents.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Department's research programme on spray includes work on drivers' reactions to spray in motorway conditions. Motorway accident reports do not identify the possible contribution of spray.

Heavy Vehicles (Spray Guards)

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether his Department has any proposals to legislate for improved heavy vehicle spray guards.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Regulations introduced in 1984 require spray reducing devices on new British registered heavy lorries and existing heavy trailers. The devices must comply with British Standard BS AU 200. The European Commission has made proposals on similar lines, but there is no early prospect of these being adopted by the Council of Ministers.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what indications he has received from British Rail as to when it is likely to come forward with proposals for the construction of a high speed railway line across Kent to link London and other British cities with the continental rail network after the Channel tunnel is built.

Mr. Channon: I have asked British Rail to let me have a report by 1 June 1988 on the options for increasing the capacity of its rail network between London and the tunnel once the capacity of the existing network is exhausted. It will be considering all possible options, including a new high-speed line.

Merchant Shipping Act 1984

Mr. Onslow: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what recent representations he has received concerning the need to reform the provisions of the Merchant Shipping Act 1984, in so far as these have come to be applied to the disposal of antiquities recovered from historic shipwrecks; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Channon: One such representation has been made, by the Museums Association. Our aim is that the disposal of items recovered from wreck sites designated under the provisions of the Protection of Wrecks Act 1973 as of historical, archaeological or artistic importance should be conducted in such a way as to ensure as far as possible that they remain accessible to the general public, that collections of items are kept together and that items of particular local interest go to local museums. In 1984 my Department published a consultative document containing proposals for changes to the wreck provisions of the 1894 Act. It remains the Government's intention to introduce legislation on the lines proposed, when Parliamentary time allows.

Railways (Capital Investment)

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he last met the chairman of British rail to discuss the railways capital investment programme.

Mr. David Mitchell: My right hon. Friend discusses BR's capital investment programme with the chairman each year when considering BR's corporate plan and its external financing requirements. Particular aspects of the capital investment programme are discussed as necessary. Major projects are submitted for my right hon. Friend's approval.

Drink-Driving

Mr. Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make available the established international protocal for the conduct of roadside surveys of drinking and driving.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The recommended research methodology for such surveys is set out in an annex to the OECD report "Road Research: New Research on the Role of Alcohol and Drugs in Road Accidents" published in 1978. I have arranged for a copy to be placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Lord: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what research his Department is undertaking in support of his efforts to reduce drinking and driving.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Transport and Road Research Laboratory will be publishing tomorrow the results of a study of the personal characteristics, driving experience and drinking habits of drivers or riders who had been involved in road accidents. The study has been able to quantify for the first time the frequency with which particular characteristics and initiatives occur and the extent to which these vary with the level of drinking prior to the accident.

To complement this work the laboratory will now be carrying out a programme of roadside surveys of drinking and driving in Warwickshire and Sussex. The surveys will provide valuable information about attitudes to drinking and driving of a random selection of people from the general driving population. Participation in the surveys will be voluntary. By enlarging the sample in this way we shall obtain a fuller picture of the problem and be able to target efforts to put an end to the drinking and driving menace more effectively.

Orange Badge Scheme

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the review into the operation of the orange badge scheme of parking concessions for disabled people is expected to report; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has completed his review of the orange badge parking scheme for the disabled; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [holding answer 7 March 1988]: The Department is issuing a revised leaflet on the orange badge scheme.

The leaflet is an interim measure and seeks to provide better information on the rights and duties of badgeholders under the present scheme. We hope to make a further announcement shortly on measures to improve the scheme as a result of the recent review.

Copies of the leaflet have been placed in the Library.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Competitive Tendering

13. Mr. Neil Hamilton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what savings he expects from competitive tendering in 1988-89 and subsequent years.

25. Mr. Sims: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what savings he expects from competitive tendering in 1988-89 and subsequent years.

Mr. Newton: Cumulative annual savings in respect of domestic, laundry and catering services will amount to some £105 million in the coming year. Further extension of the programme to other services is a matter for regional and district health authorities to determine in the light of local needs, priorities and resources.

36. Mr. Gregory: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a further statement on the progress of the competitive tendering initiative.

84. Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a further statement on the progress of the competitive tendering initiative.

Mrs. Currie: The most recent information held centrally is for the quarter ended 31 December 1987. By that date approaching 95 per cent. of domestic and laundry services had been put out to tender, and some 75 per cent. of catering services. Estimated annual savings generated from contracts awarded for the three services totalled £105 million: £79 million for domestic services, £18 million for catering services and £8 million for laundry services. £28 million has been generated from contracts won by outside contractors and £77 million from tenders secured by in-house organisations.

41. Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many districts have yet to let any contracts by competitive tendering.

Mr. John M. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services, how many districts have yet to let any contracts by competitive tendering.

Mrs. Currie: Only three district health authorities have yet to let a contract for at least one of the three services to which the competitive tendering initiative applies. Of these, two have now gone out to tender for domestic and laundry services and the third intends to put its domestic services out to tender shortly.

42. Mr. Forth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his policy towards the extension of competitive tendering to non-medical areas other than laundry, cleaning and catering.

Mrs. Currie: Competitive tendering has established its value as a management tool in the National Health Service. We encourage health authorities to look constructively at any possibility of securing greater cost-effectiveness in the provision of their NHS services. This can include going to tender for services other than domestic cleaning, catering and laundry, noting that competitive tendering for those services has already generated annual savings of over £100 million in England.

Social Fund

15. Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he has received any further representations about the level of the capital limit which bars application for single payments from the social fund.

81. Mr. Patchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he has received any further representations about the level of the capital limit which bars application for single payments or the social fund.

Mr. Portillo: We have received very few representations recently. Capital over £500 is taken into account in assessing the amount of any single payment award. A similar rule for the social fund ensures that social fund payments are made to those people most in need of help.

31. Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what step he is taking to monitor the impact of the social fund on the clients of local authority social services departments.

52. Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps he is taking to monitor the impact of the social fund on the clients of local authority social service departments.

Mr. Scott: There will be a great deal of management information on the number of applications and refusals, the amounts awarded, for what purpose, and the applicants to whom the awards are made. The quality of decision-making will also be monitored. We propose to commission independent research later in the year into the extent to which the social fund is meeting its objectives.

67. Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what arrangements have been made to provide additional funds to his Department's officers should urgent, serious or special needs arise for either grants or loans under the social fund after the relevant sums for any particular month have been exhausted.

Mr. Portillo: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Maryhill (Ms. Fyfe) on 4 March at column 746.

Hypothermia

16. Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how frequently hypothermia is cited as a cause of death; and to what extent the incidence of hypothermia is changing.

Mrs. Currie: The total number of deaths from all causes in England and Wales last year was 560,000. The provisional total of deaths from hypothermia was 581. There has been no particular trend in this total in recent years.

Personal Social Services

17. Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether the review of the National Health Service at present being undertaken by the Government will take into account the impact of National Health Service funding on the personal social services.

Mr. Newton: We shall seek to take account of all relevant factors.

Drugs

18. Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list in order the three biggest overseas suppliers of drugs to the National Health Service.

Mr. Newton: For the family practitioner services in Great Britain, the three biggest overseas-owned companies supplying drugs to the NHS in 1986 were, CIBA Geigy, Merck Sharp and Dohme, and Bayer in that order. For drugs supplied to the hospital service, aggregate information concerning suppliers is not collected.

Housing Benefit

19. Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps he has taken to ensure that all housing authorities will be able to implement the new housing benefit scheme on 1 October.

Mr. Portillo: The new housing benefit scheme starts from 1 April 1988. The Department has been involved in consultation with local authority Associations on details of the new scheme for over 18 months. It has provided £25 million this year for authorities' preparation costs and produced and distributed free of charge training material, publicity and explanatory literature.

Chronically Sick and Disabled Persons Act

20. Mr. Randall: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people with disabilities were registered with their local social services authorities under section 1 of the Chronically Sick and Disabled Persons Act at the latest date for which figures are available.

103. Mr. Haynes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people were registered as disabled with their local authorities at the latest date for which figures are available.

Mr. Scott: The latest information available centrally on the number of people with disabilities registered with local authorities Social Service Authorities in England is as follows:

In 1984, there were about 1·1 million people registered as physically disabled.

In 1986, there were about 192,000 people registered as blind or partially sighted.

Also in 1986, there were over 97,000 people registered as deaf or hard of hearing.

22. Mr. Eastham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people received help under the provisions of section 2 of the Chronically Sick and Disabled Persons Act in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Scott: This information is not collected centrally. The information that is available relates to the number of meals served and to the number of cases of assistance in England in the year ending 31 March 1986, and the latest figures are:

Number of meals served: over 44 million
Number of cases of assistance: some 670,000

Further details are available in the publication: "Domiciliary Services, Aids and Adaptations Year Ending 31 March 1986" England: a copy of which has been placed in the Library.

38. Mr. Bidwell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many local authorities are fully meeting their statutory duties to disabled people registered with them under the Chronically Sick and Disabled Persons Act.

74. Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps he takes to ensure that all social services authorities are fulfilling their statutory duties under section 2 of the Chronically Sick and Disabled Persons Act.

78. Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps he takes to ensure that all social services authorities are fulfilling their statutory duties under section 1 of the Chronically Sick and Disabled Persons Act.

85. Dr. Moonie: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he is satisfied that all local social services authorities are meeting their statutory duties under the Chronically Sick and Disabled Persons Act.

Mr. Scott: Responsibility for implementing the Act lies with local authorities. However, the Department receives regular returns on certain services provided under the Act, in addition to information from a number of sources including the social services inspectorate.

49. Mr. Allen McKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the adequacy of funds available to local social services authorities for the implementation of the Chronically Sick and Disabled Persons Act.

50. Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his estimate of the additional resources local social services authorities would need fully to implement the provisions of section 2 of the Chronically Sick and Disabled Persons Act in respect of all the disabled people registered with them under the Act.

53. Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any plans to increase the resources available to local social services authorities to implement the Chronically Sick and Disabled Persons Act.

61. Mr. John: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will increase the resources available to local social services authorities to implement the Chronically Sick and Disabled Persons Act.

Mr. Scott: I am unable to add to my reply to the hon. Member for Aberdeen South (Mr. Doran) on 9 February 1988 at column 191.

Winter Mortality

21. Mr. Summerson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the causes of the 30-year decline, in England, in excess winter mortality.

66. Mr. Carttiss: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what further information he can provide on recent trends in the incidence of winter mortality among elderly people.

69. Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the causes of the 30-year decline, in England, in excess winter mortality.

73. Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what further information he can provide on recent trends in the incidence of winter mortality among elderly people.

Mrs. Currie: Since 1958 there has been a clear downward trend in excess winter mortality. For England and Wales, it averaged 55·6 per cent. between 1958 and 1962, dropping to 28·6 per cent., or around 37,000 cases each winter, between 1983 and 1987. The causal relationship between cold weather and excess winter mortality is not clearly understood, and further research is needed. We hope that the Medical Research Council will be able to help out in this area.

Disabled People

23. Mr. John Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what resources are being allocated to the special fund his Department is setting up in co-operation with the Disablement Income Group.

28. Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects to be able to indicate the cost to the Government of the special fund his Department is setting up with the Disablement Income Group.

45. Mr. Ray Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what sums he expects to be made available by his Department to the Disablement Income Group for the special fund for assisting people with disabilities who will have a reduced social security entitlement in April.

Mr. Scott: Up to £5 million has been set aside for the fund in 1988-89. The level of funding for future years will be considered in the light of experience.

30. Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what monitoring will take place of the implementation of the Disabled Person (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act, with particular regard to the interests of mentally ill people.

44. Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what plans he has to monitor the implementation of the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986.

Mr. Scott: The particular needs of people who suffer from a mental disorder will be considered within the monitoring exercise which I mentioned in my reply to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Maryhill (Mrs. Fyfe) earlier today.

65. Mr. Moss: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on his discussions with the Disablement Income Group before and after the announcement of new measures to assist very severely disabled people.

Mr. Scott: The discussions are continuing. The Disablement Income Group is working with my officials to devise criteria of eligibility for payment from the fund and is giving advice on other administrative matters. As I announced in my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Richmond and Barnes (Mr. Hanley) today the fund's trustees will include individuals nominated by the Disablement Income Group.

The dicsussions I held with the Disablement Income Group and other organisations of and for disabled people before the announcement of the fund were informal and those who gave their advice did so in confidence.

101. Mr. Cabom: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many cases of discrimination against disabled people have been referred to his Department in each of the past four years.

Mr. Scott: The numbers of complaints of alleged discrimination against disabled people referred to the Department in each of the last four years are as follows:

	Number
1984	3
1985	2
1986	0
1987	4

In addition we have so far received two complaints in 1988.

Long-term Sick and Disabled People

24. Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the Government's total estimated expenditure on the long-term sick and disabled for 1987-88; how this compares with 1978-79 in real terms; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: The estimated expenditure on benefits for long-term sick and disabled people for 1987-88 is £6·75 billion. This is an increase of over 80 per cent. in real terms compared with expenditure in 1978-79.

Health Vouchers

26. Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what recent representations he has received seeking the inclusion in the current Government review of the National Health Service the idea of issuing vouchers to enable people to contract out of the National Health Service; what response he has made; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moore: We have received a number of representations about the introduction of vouchers. We shall consider all proposals put to us in the context of our review.

NHS Review

27. Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what progress has been made in the examination of the use of resources in the National Health Service as part of the overall review of the funding of the service.

68. Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any plans to reorganise the administration of the National Health Service.

75. Mr. Duffy: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what consultations the Government have undertaken in their consideration of the future of the National Health Service.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if the current review of National Health Service funding will compare the National Health Service with health services in other Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development countries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moore: The Government's review of the Health Service will be wideranging and fundamental. We shall look at all the options, including the experience of the other countries, and shall bring forward our proposals in due course. In the meantime, I shall consider carefully any representations which are made to me.

NHS Pay Awards

29. Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received regarding the funding of any pay awards made to National Health Service employees.

34. Mr. Wall: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make it his policy that Her Majesty's Government will meet the pay award to nurses and the ancillary staff in the National Health Service.

Mr. Newton: A large number of representations on the subject of funding pay awards has been received from a wide range of organisations and individuals.

As in the past, the Government will await the recommendations of the review body on nurses' pay before taking decisions on implementation and funding. These decisions will be announced as soon as possible thereafter. The pay of ancillary staff is a matter for negotiation within the ancillary staffs Whitley Council.

Nursing Homes

32. Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what recent representations he has received regarding income support limits for elderly people in residential care and nursing homes.

Mr. Portillo: We have received a number of letters on the levels of the income support limits; in addition I recently met representatives of the National Confederation of Registered Residential Care Homes Associations and this issue was raised.

Blackpool HQ Office

33. Mr. Holt: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he will next review the work of his Departments headquarters office at Blackpool; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: Under standing management arrangements, the functions, objectives, resources and performance of North Fylde central office are kept under regular review in accordance with the principles of the Government's financial management initiative.

Trent Region (Funding)

35. Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the funding of the National Health Service in the Trent region in the forthcoming financial year.

Mr. Newton: Trent regional health authority's initial general revenue allocation will be some £1,050 million. This is a cash increase of 6·3 per cent. (1·7 per cent. above forecast general inflation) and will bring the region to within 3 per cent. of its target share of resources. The region will also receive £1·16 million for the treatment and prevention of AIDS and £0·75 million to develop breast cancer screening services. Trent's capital allocation will be over £61 million. Allocations to district health authorities are a matter for the RHA.

Purchasing Procedures

37. Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will undertake a review of his Department's purchasing procedures with a view to widening access to small suppliers; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: We have recently appointed a departmental purchasing adviser, part of whose task is to oversee the implementation of the agreed recommendations of the multi-Department review of purchasing and to review all departmental purchasing and contracting procedures, with specific reference to ensuring equal opportunity for small suppliers. In the National Health Service, a major proportion of suppliers are small firms and we are seeking to develop further opportunities for them, always having regard to the need to obtain value for money, both in departmental and NHS purchasing.

Social Security Reform

39. Mr. Flannery: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many families will lose net weekly spending power in April on the basis of the figures given in his answer to the hon. Member for Kensington (Sir B. Rhys Williams) on 4 February, Official Report, column 737.

48. Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many families will lose net weekly spending power in April on the basis of the figures given in his answer to the hon. Member for Kensington (Sir B. Rhys Williams) on 4 February, Official Report, column 737.

Mr. Scott: The hypothetical examples given in my reply to the hon. Member for Kensington (Sir B. Rhys Williams) on 4 February at columns 737-42 cannot be used to assess the actual impact of the reforms. Nationally representative data reflecting families' actual circumstances give a more balanced picture. I refer the hon. Members to the "Impact of the Reformed Structure of Income-Related Benefits" published last October by the Department. Copies are in the Library.

NHS Buildings (Norfolk)

40. Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any plans to increase investment in new National Health Services buildings in the Norfolk area.

Mrs. Currie: Investment in new hospital buildings in the Norfolk area is the responsibility of the East Anglian regional health authority. However, my hon. Friend may be aware that the regional health authority has submitted to the Department a proposal to build a second district general hospital in Norwich at a total cost of £50 million.

Private Ambulances

43. Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will provide details of any representations made to him from private companies with regard to alternative arrangements for providing ambulance services.

Mrs. Currie: We have had no direct representations from private companies about existing services; but it is for health authorities to manage ambulance service provision locally and I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Norwood (Mr. Fraser) on 1 March 1988 at column 610.

Nurses (Pay)

46. Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when the review body for nursing staff will report on the nurses' pay award.

Mr. Newton: The nurses' pay review body is expected to report to my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister in April.

NHS Consultants

47. Mrs. Gillian Shephard: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many consultants are employed in the National Health Service; and of those how many work in more than one district health authority.

Mr. Newton: At 30 September 1986 there were 14,731 medical and dental consultants employed in NHS hospitals in England. Information is not held centrally on the number of these who work in more than one district health authority.

Health Authorities (Trading of Services)

51. Mrs. Rosie Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he intends to take any steps to encourage district health authorities to trade services between one another to reduce waiting lists and improve efficiency.

Mr. Newton: As part of our waiting list initiative we are keen to encourage far better use of all health care capacity and this includes one district making use of temporary spare capacity in another for an agreed number of patients at an agreed cost. I wrote to regional chairmen last December pointing out the scope for health authorities to arrange treatment for waiting list patients in this way.

Home Helps

54. Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many social service departments provide home help services free of charge; and what number do not.

79. Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what are the minimum and maximum charges for home help services by social services departments.

Mr. Newton: Local authorities have discretion whether, and to what extent, to charge for home help services. Information about charges is not collected by the Department. However, details are available in "Personal Social Services Statistics, 1985-86, Actuals", published by the Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy, a copy of which is in the Library.

Social Fund Officers

55. Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps he has taken to train social fund officers in their new duties.

Mr. Portillo: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to the hon. Member for Islington, North (Mr. Corbyn) on 15 December at columns 483-4.

Consultants (Contracts)

56. Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has plans to transfer consultants contracts from regional to district health authorities.

Mr. Newton: We have no plans to do so.

Retail Prices Index (Error)

57. Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many representations he has received concerning the decision not to pay £8 additions to recipients with two benefits on one book; from whom he has received the representations; and if he will make a statement.

90. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received seeking full reimbursement to all pensioners and other recipients of state benefits for the computer error made regarding back payments; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: We have received some 670 representations about the £8 special payments exercise most of which concerned more than one benefit combined on a single order book. By no means all of the individuals concerned have been under-compensated. Most representations were made by individuals through their Members of Parliament; a small proportion wrote directly to the Department.

Disabled People (Discrimination)

59. Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any plans to introduce further legislation further on discrimination against disabled people.

Mr. Scott: No.

77. Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many cases of discrimination against disabled people have been investigated by his Department; and what the results have been.

102. Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if his Department is currently investigating any cases of discrimination against disabled people.

Mr. Scott: Since February 1983, when an invitation was extended by my hon. Friend the Member for Hornsey and Wood Green (Sir H. Rossi) for details of alleged discrimination to be submitted, 33 such cases have been referred to the Department.

In those cases where investigations have been completed:

- in six cases, no evidence of discrimination was found;
- in six cases, insufficient information was available to enable inquiries to be completed;
- there were genuine problems of access in four cases;
- three cases involved judgments by a potential employer that the individual's disability adversely affected their ability to perform the job effectively or safely;
- in three cases the problem was resolved in favour of the complainant during the course of our inquiries;
- two cases involved commercial judgments, the basis of which could not effectively be checked;
- one case concerned maritime regulations laid before Parliament;
- one case was a complaint by a disabled person against an employee who was subsequently disciplined by the employer;

one case involved a conflict of opinion over the application of right-to-buy housing legislation;
in one case the Department requested further information from the complainant but received no response; five cases are under consideration.

Elderly People

62. Mr. Arbuthnot: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the extent of support for elderly people in the United Kingdom; and what equivalent information he has about other European countries.

72. Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what proportion of gross domestic product in the United Kingdom is spent on support for elderly people; and what equivalent information he has about other countries in the EEC.

Mr. Scott: At the latest date for which full comparable information is available, the United Kingdom devoted 9·6 per cent. of its gross domestic product to the support of the elderly, excluding health care. Information for other EC member states is in the table.

Expenditure on programmes for old age as a proportion of GDP at market prices for EC member states (excluding Greece) in 1983

Country	Percentage
Denmark	10·4
France	9·8
United Kingdom	9·6
Italy	9·5
Netherlands	8·6
West Germany	8·6
Luxembourg	7·8
Ireland	6·1
Average	9·3

Source: Eurostat Statistical Bulletin, Social protection Statistics, March 1985.

Note: Figures include state and occupational pensions and cash benefits for the elderly, expenditure on residential and nursing homes, local authority services for the elderly and other expenditure on the elderly, excluding health care and increases in pensions for dependants.

NHS Funding

63. Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the percentage change in (i) National Health Service funding and (ii) employment of medical staff for the years 1980 to 1987 for (a) England and Wales and (b) the west midlands region.

Mr. Newton: The information requested in respect of the hospital and community health service in England and the west midlands region is shown in the table. Information relating to Wales is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

	Percentage change in net revenue expenditure 1980-81 and 1986-87[1]		Percentage change in whole time equivalent medical staff[3] 1980 to 1986
	Cash Per cent.	Real terms[2] Per cent.	Per cent.
West Midlands	54·1	8·0	9·7
England	50·0	6·5	8·1

[1] Figures are based on health authorities' summarised income and expenditure accounts.
[2] Adjusted by the gross domestic product deflator.
[3] Includes permanent paid, honorary and locum staff.

Families (Financial Aid)

64. Mr. David Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many more families with children will be eligible for targeted financial support following implementation of the Social Security Act 1986.

Mr. Scott: When, in April, income support supersedes supplementary benefit the broad number of recipients caring for dependent children is likely to be unaltered. Some new entitlements are, however, expected because there will be a more generous capital rule allowing those with savings of up to £6,000 to claim. Priority will be given to families with children through a system of special automatic weekly premiums.

Help will also be targeted more effectively on need among working families. Thus, whilst 300,000 families may lose entitlement to housing benefit, 270,000 more families are expected to receive the new and more generous family credit when it replaces family income supplement. In total, 470,000 families are expected to receive family credit.

Overall, and in addition to the transitional arrangements providing cash protection for those families who might receive less by way of income support and family credit, the weekly net disposable incomes of low income families with children will rise by around £200 million annually.

Obstetric Units

70. Mr. Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what discussions he has had with the professional bodies representing anaesthetists and obstetricians about maintaining flying squad services to small obstetric units.

Mrs. Currie: Responsibility for determining the pattern of maternity care rests with individual health authorities. General guidelines on clinical operational and medical cover for maternity units are contained in the second and third reports of the maternity services advisory committee, which have been commended to health authorities for action. The guidance further states that the policies should be regularly updated and agreed with senior members of the professions involved.

71. Mr. Fallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will set out the functions currently exercised by regional health authorities.

Mrs. Currie: Under the terms of the NHS Act 1977 (as amended) regional health authorities act as agents of the Secretary of State in contributing to the provision of a comprehensive health service in England. Their specific functions are detailed in various statutory instruments and health circulars, but in general each RHA is responsible, within national guidelines, for the policies and strategic plans for health services in its region. The RHA's allocate resources to and monitor the performance of their district health authorities in achieving agreed objectives. They are the design and contracting authority for major capital developments and provide certain regional services such as the blood transfusion service, management services and in some cases, ambulance services. Regional health authorities also hold the contacts of consultants not working in teaching districts.

Foster Parents

76. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what resources his Department plans to provide to train foster parents dealing with children involved in suspected cases of non-accidental injury.

Mr. Newton: The training of foster parents is a matter for individual local authorities who set their own priorities in relation to available resources. However, we recognise that there may be a need to develop new training materials for use in the preparation of foster parents who will be having abused children placed in their homes, and we are considering this for the inclusion in the Government's central child abuse training initiative.

Staff Shortages

80. Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the representations made by hon. Members concerning staff shortages in local benefit offices of his Department.

Mr. Portillo: The complementing system for local offices aims to match staff and work loads, and I am satisfied that, overall, this aim has been achieved. Inevitably, there will be some local offices where, on occasions, factors such as higher than anticipated turnover of staff will lead to a temporary shortfall. However, I am confident that appropriate steps are taken by local management to make good these shortfalls as soon as possible.

Benefits and Rebates

82. Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the likely effects on the physical and moral well-being of individuals and on family life, of the combined effect of differential rates of social security benefits and proposed community charge rebates, for those aged under and over 25 years.

Mr. Scott: Whereas the present supplementary benefit scheme has differential rates of benefit for householders and non-householders, which may encourage young people to leave home, the new income support scheme will have rates of benefit which will vary according to age and family status. People under 18 will not be liable to pay the community charge. Those young people who are liable will be helped, in the same way as anyone else, through a new community charge rebate scheme and the help towards the 20 per cent. minimum contribution which will be built into income-related benefit levels. The new arrangements are not expected to affect adversely family life or the well-being of individuals.

Southend Office

83. Dr. Michael Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what has been the total value of the benefits administered by the Southend office of his Department during the last 12 months for which figures are available.

Mr. Portillo: I regret that the information is not available. For those benefits administered by the Department's local offices, there is no routine collection of information about the value of benefits paid to beneficiaries in the area; an estimate could be given only after a costly special exercise.

Patient Care

86. Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how much extra money has been made available for patient care as a result of contracting-out National Health Service services.

Mrs. Currie: As at December 1987 cumulative annual savings of some £105 million had been generated from contracts awarded following competitive tendering for domestic cleaning, catering and laundry services. Information is not held centrally on other contracting out.

Hospital Facilities

87. Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any plans to visit Liverpool to inspect National Health Service hospital facilities.

Mrs. Currie: We have no plans at present to visit hospital premises in Liverpool.

Salaries and Wages

88. Mr. Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his latest estimate of the percentage of the total cost of the National Health Service which is allocated to salaries and wages; and what was the overall average percentage increase in salaries and wages in the last 12 months.

Mr. Newton: The summarised accounts of regional and district health authorities in England for 1986-87 (the latest year available) show that 74·5 per cent. of their total revenue expenditure was incurred on gross salaries and wages costs (including employer's national insurance and superannuation contributions and expenditure on non-National Health Service, agency, etc., staff). Between 1985-86 and 1986-87 health authorities' total expenditure on salaries and wages increased in cash terms by 8·0 per cent. Equivalent information for 1987-88 will not be available until the autumn.

Committee on Food Policy

89. Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the current work of the Chief Medical Officer's committee on food policy.

Mrs. Currie: The work currently being undertaken by the Chief Medical Officer's Committee on Medical Aspects of Food Policy through its panels, working groups and sub-committees includes:

- a continuing review of matters relating to infant and child nutrition, with particular reference to ways of promoting breastfeeding; as recommended in the COMA report "Present day practice in Infant Feeding: Third Report" published in February 1988;
- a continuing review of the relationship between diet and cardiovascular disease; as recommended in the COMA report on "Diet and Cardiovascular Disease" published in 1984;
- a study of the rate of growth and achieved height of primary schoolchildren aged 5 to 11, with special reference to inner city and ethnic minority groups;
- special consideration of the nutritional status of children in families in "bed and breakfast" accommodation;
- review of the recommended daily amounts for energy and nutrients, embracing protein, vitamins, minerals, fat, carbohydrate, dietary fibre; this panel was set up on 28 September 1987;
- the relationships, if any, between dietary sugars and disease; this panel was set up on 19 March 1987;
- completion of detailed analysis of data from the 1984 survey of schoolchildren's diets;
- analysis of the data from the 1986-87 survey of adult nutritional status and diets, in collaboration with MAFF and OPCS;
- preparation of the third report of the sub-committee on nutritional surveillance, a summary of which is expected shortly.

We are most grateful to all the members of COMA for their efforts.

Griffiths Report

91. Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he received the Griffiths report; when the report will be published; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether the Griffiths report on community care will be published in full; and if he will make a statement on the delays that have held up his publication of the report.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has yet received the report by Sir Roy Griffiths on care in the community; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moore: I have received Sir Roy Griffiths' report. I am arranging for publication on 16 March and copies will then be placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

The report makes wide-ranging proposals affecting the responsibilities of local government; individuals' social security entitlements; central funding and control of community care services; and aspects of the social fund.

The Government will be considering the proposals, taking account of the report of the committee chaired by Lady Wagner on residential care which the National Institute for Social Work is publishing tomorrow, and of reactions to both reports; and will bring forward their own proposals in due course.

Speech Therapists

92. Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many health authorities are currently unable to recruit their full establishment of speech therapists.

Mr. Newton: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Wolverhampton, North-East (Mrs. Hicks) on 29 February at column 463.

Child Care

93. Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects to be in a position to announce what further action is planned on child care law, following the suggestion contained in the Government's White Paper issued in January 1987.

Mr. Newton: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Surrey, South West (Mrs. Bottomley) on 28 October 1987 at columns 307-8.

No-fault Drug Damage Compensation Scheme

94. Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will initiate discussions with the Association of British Pharmaceutical Industries regarding the establishment of a no-fault drug damage compensation scheme.

Mr. Newton: We have no plans to do so. The Government have already introduced changes, which took effect from 1 March 1988 through the Consumer Protection Act 1987, to remove the need for an individual to prove negligence in establishing liability where it can be shown that a defective medicinal product caused personal injury. It must be for the pharmaceutical industry to decide whether it wishes to set up its own no-fault drug compensation scheme.

Physiotherapists

95. Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps he is taking to encourage the recruitment and training of physiotherapists.

Mr. Newton: The manpower planning advisory group which advises the NHS management board and regional chairmen on NHS manpower issues, has recently established a joint consultative group with the Chartered Society of Physiotherapy which is considering supply and demand in the profession as a matter of priority. When the results of that study are known, consideration will be given to preparation of appropriate advice to NHS authorities on recruitment and training.

Non-accidental Injuries (Investigations)

96. Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what amounts of resources his Department plans to provide to train social workers in investigating suspected cases of non-accidental injury.

Mr. Newton: The Department makes grants available to Central Council for Education and Training in Social Work which has within its programme work to develop child care training. We have also set up a centrally funded interdisciplinary training initiative as announced on 30 October 1986 and 8 April 1987 at a cost of £500,000.

Several of the six projects so far established will be of benefit to social workers. Other projects are under consideration.

Free School Milk and Meals

97. Mrs. Maureen Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what provision has been made for pupils currently entitled to free school milk and free school lunches whose parents will be in receipt of income support after April.

Mr. Portillo: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to her on 26 February 1988 at column 361.

Patient Statistics

99. Mr. Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many patients were treated in National Health Service hospitals in the most recent year for which figures are available; and what was the comparable figure for 1978-79.

Mrs. Currie: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Skipton and Ripon (Mr. Curry) on 24 November at columns 168-69.

State Pensions

100. Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has as to how many countries in the European Economic Community pay a basic pension of equal value to all or most elderly people.

Mr. Scott: Denmark and the United Kingdom pay flat-rate pensions to almost all pensioners, plus earnings-related additions. Ireland and the Netherlands pay flat-rate pensions to those who have satisfied contribution conditions, but do not pay separate pensions to married women without a contribution record of their own. The Netherlands also has an earnings-related top-up. Other EC countries have earnings-related pension systems in which the level of final pension depends on the individual's own average earnings and contribution record. Some have thresholds to ensure that no contributor falls below a minimum regardless of actual earnings-related entitlement. Separate pensions are not available in other EC countries to wives without a contribution record.

New Social Security Legislation

104. Dr. Reid: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received from Strathclyde regional council on the impact of the new social security legislation.

Mr. Portillo: We have no record of any formal representations having been received from Strathclyde regional council during 1988. Last year, Strathclyde regional council made representations on the consultative draft social fund manual.

Transitional Payments

105. Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on preparations for the implementation of transitional payments under the new social security legislation.

Mr. Scott: The assumptions used in estimating the number and level of transitional additions payable at the implementation of income support and family credit are outlined in the explanatory notes to the tables in "Impact of the Reformed Structure of Income-Related Benefits", a copy of which is available in the Library. For income support the data source was the 1986 "Annual Statistical Enquiry;" for family credit it was the family expenditure surveys for 1983, 1984 and 1985.

The estimated number of claimants in Great Britain who will receive a transitional addition at the point of change is 1·4 million.

Young Children (Poisoning)

98. Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what further action is being considered to deal with the continued admissions to hospital of very young children with suspected poisoning.

Mr. Bright: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether in view of the continuing incidents of child poisoning, he will take steps to provide an increased protection for children by establishing safety standards for blister and strip packaging for medical tablets.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) whether, in view of the continuing incidence of child poisoning, he will take steps to provide increased protection for children by establishing safety standards for blister and strip packaging for medical tablets;

(2) whether he will give the statistics from 1977 until the most recent date of young children admitted to hospital for in-patient and out-patient treatment as a result of poisoning or suspected poisoning;

(3) whether he will publish information indicating the results of the introduction of child-resistant closures for medicines and the numbers of children admitted to hospital for treatment for poisoning;

(4) what further action is being considered to deal with the continued admission to hospital of very young children with suspected child poisoning;

(5) if he will receive a deputation from the campaign for safety standards in child-resistant packaging;

(6) whether he will establish a system of monitoring and testing strip and blister packaging to ensure child safety.

Mr. Newton [holding answer 26 February 1988]: The Government have emphasised the importance of preventive services generally and specifically asked health authorities to develop local strategies for reducing accidents in the home. We also fund the child accident prevention trust, which collects and disseminates information about accidents to children including information on accidental poisonings. We consider that future action must continue to concentrate on prevention and education.

Our proposals for improved labelling of medicines include a clearer reminder to parents that all medicines should be kept away from children.

The present arrangements are as follows. Under the Medicines (Child Safety) Regulation 1975, as amended, solid dose aspirin and paracetamol are to be supplied retail only in reclosable child resistant containers complying with BS 6652 or in dark or opaque strip or blister packs.

The Pharmaceutical Society has since 1981 advised pharmacists to apply the same arrangements to all dispensed solid-dose medicines, unless the patient specifically requests otherwise. In addition, all aspects of safety including quantity, labelling, and packaging are considered before decisions are taken to licence medicines for the market.

Information about the effectiveness of child-resistant packaging has already been published in "Accidental Poisoning in Childhood: A Multicentre Survey" (Human Toxicology, Vol. 6, No. 4, p. 293-31, July 1987). This also emphasised the importance of secure home storage away from children and called for the development of standards of child resistance of packs.

The industry has communicated its guidelines for the design of unit dose packs to the British Standards Institution which is considering them with a view to development of a standard or code of practice. We shall take a close interest in the progress of the work at the institution and will consider actively its conclusions when available.

Should the campaign to which the right hon. Member refers, wish to put particular proposals to us, I should be happy to examine them and to consider whether a meeting might be helpful.

Available information about in-patients aged 0 to 4 treated for the effects of poisoning is given in tables 1 and 2.

Information about out-patients is not available centrally.

Contract Cleaning

58. Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he last met representatives of the contract cleaning industry.

Mr. John Moore: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Fylde (Mr. Jack) earlier today.

Hospital Waiting Lists

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what are the current waiting lists for (a) examinations, (b) operations and (c) beds in each specialty in each hospital in (i) the Crewe, (ii) the Chester and (iii) the Halton health districts.

Mr. Newton: I am sorry I cannot give my hon. Friend all the information he seeks. The available information is given in the table. It should be noted that in certain specialities a clinician may maintain a waiting list which is common to more than one hospital within a district health authority.

NHS (Administrative Costs)

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will show the total expenditure on National Health Service administrative and clerical staff for each of the years 1974, 1984, 1985 and 1986; and if he will also estimate National Health Service administrative overheads for each of these years.

Mr. Newton: Following is information, covering both hospital and community health services and family practitioner services, derived from annual accounts submitted to the Department:

	Expenditure on headquarters administration £000	Expenditure on salaries and wages administrative and clerical staff £000
1974-75	128,788	210,628
1984-85	444,016	797,761
1985-86	479,047	839,180
1986-87	516,624	905,833

Sources:

Annual financial accounts of:

(i) regional and district health authorities and the special health authorities for the London postgraduate teaching hospitals. (predecessor authorities for 1974-75);

(ii) family practitioner committees;

(iii) the Dental Estimates Board and the Prescription Pricing Authority.

Notes:

1. Expenditure on headquarters administration includes all current expenditure on the pay and pay related costs of staff of all disciplines (including general managers) employed at headquarters levels and their office costs and overheads. It excludes the cost of clerical and secretarial support staff employed in departments at hospital and unit levels: such costs are regarded as operational.

2. The figures for headquarters administration also include the total expenses of the Dental Estimates Board and the Prescription Pricing Authority which are regarded as wholly administrative.

3. The figures for expenditure on the salaries and wages of administrative and clerical staff include:

(i) the gross pay and employers' national insurance and superannuation contributions for all grades of National Health Service administrative and clerical staff employed at all levels;

(ii) the total expenditure on the employment of all non-National Health Service (agency, etc) administrative and clerical staff;

(iii) the total pay costs of the Dental Estimates Board and the Prescription Pricing Authority which are predominantly for administrative and clerical staff but include a small element for other staff categories which is not separately identifiable.

4. All expenditure by other bodies and special health authorities providing central services to the National Health Service (eg the Central Blood Laboratories Authority) and expenditure met centrally by the Department is excluded.

Staff

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the cost of employing (a) directly employed staff, (b) temporary directly employed staff and (c) agency staff as (i) nurses, (ii) midwives, (iii) junior doctors and (iv) ancillary staff.

Mr. Newton: Following is information derived from summarised annual accounts of health authorities in England for 1986-87 (the latest year available):

	Expenditure £000
Total directly employed National Health Service staff salaries and wages	7,532,513
Non NHS staff (agency etc.)
(a) All nursing staff (including midwives)	70,788
(b) Medical staff (all grades)	26,064
(c) Ancillary staff	6,359

Supplementary information within the accounts of health authorities show that of the total directly employed National Health Service staff salaries and wages for medical staff (£1,067·5 million) and dental staff (£54·6 million) some £42·3 million and £0·8 million respectively related to locum staff. Otherwise, the annual accounts do not separately identify the costs of directly employed staff engaged on a temporary basis nor the costs of agency midwives and junior doctors.

Midwives

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give, for each district health authority, regional health authority and special health authority, and the total for England as a whole (a) the number of agency midwives employed and (b) the amount spent on agency midwives in the latest available year, for the previous year and for 1979.

Mr. Newton: The number of agency midwifery staff in each region, special health authority and England at September 1979, 1985 and 1986 is given in the table. Similar information for September 1987 is not yet available. Information by district health authority is available only from 1982 and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Expenditure specifically for agency midwives is not available centrally.

Charing Cross Hospital

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the saving to the district health authority which was estimated in the original feasibility study on the re-building of Charing Cross hospital; and what has the eventual saving actually been.

Mrs. Currie: Responsibility for the planning and construction of health buildings is delegated to regional health authorities. The hon. Member may wish to approach the regional chairman of the North-West Thames regional health authority to inquire what information is available.

Long-term Disabled

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what special arrangements he is making to assist the long-term disabled when the new benefit system comes into effect in April.

Mr. Scott: Under the new benefit system, income support replaces supplementary benefit from 11 April. Claimants who, or whose partners receive attendance allowance, mobility allowance, invalidity benefit or severe disablement allowance or are blind, will qualify for the disability premium, as will claimants who have been sick for at least 28 weeks. The premium will be £13·05 for a single person and £18·60 for a couple. Claimants who are, or whose partner is, aged 60 or over and receive one of these qualifying benefits or are blind, will qualify for the higher pensioner premium which is payable at the same rate; so too will claimants who, immediately before their 60th birthday, were receiving the disability premium. People entitled to the disability premium who work part-time will be entitled to the higher (£15) earnings disregard. In addition, the severe disability premium will be paid to claimants who receive attendance allowance, live independently in the community and are not cared for by someone receiving invalid care allowance. This premium is £24·75 for a single person and £49·50 for couples both of whom satisfy the conditions. The same provisions will exist in the new housing benefit cheme.

There will be no limit on the number of hours mentally or physically disabled people can work and remain entitled to income support if their earning capacity is reduced to 75 per cent. or less of what they would otherwise earn. Normally people who work 24 hours or more a week on average will not be entitled.

We also intend to establish a special fund to enable very severely disabled people to live independently.

We will look again at provisions for disabled people when the results of the survey into disability being carried out by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys are known.

Spending Power

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish tables similar to his Department's tax/benefit model table showing the net weekly spending power for each of (a) a single person, (b) a married couple with no children, (c) a couple with a child aged 11 years, (d) a couple with two children aged eight and 11 years, (e) a couple with three children aged eight, 11 and 15 years and (f) a couple with four children aged three, eight, 11 and 15 years, with weekly earnings of (i) £60, (ii) £70, (iii) £80, (iv) £90, (v) £110, (vi) £120, (vii) £130, (viii) £140, (ix) £150, (x) £160 and (xi) £170 under (a) the existing tax and benefit system and (b) the new system to be implemented in April.

Mr. Scott: The information requested is set out in the tables. It should be noted that the results are hypothetical in two senses. First, the results are based on average local authority rents and rates and do not present a balanced picture reflecting peoples actual family circumstances and housing arrangements. For example, larger families composed of older children are not included. Similarly, mortgagors, outright owners and non-householders are excluded. A half of the family credit recipient population are unlikely to be rent payers. Second, the other assumptions used are those set out in "Impact of the Reformed Structure of Income-Related Benefits", October 1987.

Foetal and Genetic Abnormality

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the King's Fund Forum "Consensus Statement on Screening for Foetal and Genetic Abnormality", a copy of which has been sent to him.

Mr. Newton: The King's Fund consensus statement is a timely and informative study which adds to our current consideration of how genetic services including counselling can best be provided from within the NHS.

Industrial Disablement Benefit

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what provision there will be for the storage of thoracic organs by the pneumoconiosis panel, after the abolition of industrial death benefit, in order to allow for subsequent re-examination of the tissue in cases where it was not recognised at the time that death was due to industrial causes.

Mr. Scott: After the abolition of Industrial Death Benefit on 11 April 1988 the medical boarding centres (respiratory diseases)—formerly the pneumonoconiosis medical panels—will cease to have access to thoracic organs except where a coroner seeks the advice of the centre to establish a cause of death. There will be no provision for storage of thoracic organs at the medical boarding centre (respiratory diseases). Any storage of tissue for further examination will be the responsibility of the coroner, and their subsequent disposal is a matter entirely for the coroner to decide.

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what provision there will be for the posthumous payment of industrial disablement benefit in cases of people who are proved to have been suffering from an asbestos-related disease at post-mortem, in the light of the fact that, with the abolition of industrial death benefit from 1 April, there will be no requirement for the pneumoconiosis panel to examine thoracic organs after death.

Mr. Scott: After the abolition of industrial death benefit on 11 April 1988 dependants will continue to be able to claim industrial injuries disablement benefit posthumously if they consider that the deceased may have been suffering in life from a prescribed disease, including an asbestos-related disease. Claims will be decided on the available evidence from post-mortem reports and records in life.

Agency Staff

Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give the latest figures for the number of agency staff supplied to the National Health Service in the following categories: (a) nurses, (b) midwives, (c) professional and technical staff (excluding works staff), (d) works professional staff, (e) administrative and clerical staff, (f) ambulance officers and control assistants and (g) other staff, indicating their distribution by regional health authority; what payments in fees have been made by each authority to each of these groups over the last 12 months; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: Information about the number of agency staff, other than nursing and midwifery agency staff and medical and dental locums employed, in the National Health Service and health authority expenditure specifically for agency staff is not collected centrally.

The table shows the number of agency nursing and midwifery staff employed by each regional health authority at 30 September 1986 and the expenditure on all non-directly employed National Health Service staff, including agency staff, during the financial year 1986-87.

Whilst posts in the National Health Service should ideally be filled with directly employed full and part-time staff, suitably qualified staff are not always available in the particular locality. Where recruitment difficulties are encountered or where an urgent short-term need arises the use of appropriately qualified staff from agencies can provide valuable assistance.

National Insurance Fund

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the most recent advice he has received from the Government Actuary as to the minimum target balance of the national insurance fund as a percentage of annual benefit expenditure; and what was the actual balance in each year since 1979-80.

Mr. Portillo: For the first part of her question I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Bradford, West (Mr. Madden) on 7 March. The remaining information is as follows:

Balance in the national insurance fund at the end of the financial year

	£ millions
1979-80	4,626
1980-81	5,037
1981-82	4,046

1983-84	4,604
1984-85	4,978
1985-86	5,293
1986-87	5,707

Source: Annual accounts of the National insurance fund as presented to Parliament pursuant to section 133(2) of the Social Security Act 1975. The fund accounts for 1986-87 were presented to Parliament on 22 January 1988.

Mr. Ken Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for each year since 1975-76 the balance in the national insurance fund; and also, for each year, if he will express the balance as a percentage of annual benefit expenditure financed by the fund.

Mr. Portillo: The information is as follows:

Balance in the national insurance fund at the end of the financial year expressed as a percentage of annual benefit expenditure

Year	Balance (end of year) £ million	Benefit expenditure £ million	Balance as a percentage of benefit expenditure
1975-76	2,219	6,812	32·6

Annual accounts of the national insurance fund as presented to Parliament pursuant to section 133(2) of the Social Security Act 1975. The fund's accounts for 1986-87 were presented to Parliament on 22 January 1988.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services by how much the contribution income of the national insurance fund for 1988-89 would be reduced if the Treasury supplement were not reduced from 7 to 5 per cent. of gross contributions, the balance in the fund were maintained at the same proportion of benefit expenditure as at the end of 1987-88 instead of rising from 27 to 33 per cent., the proportion of contributions allocated to the National Health Service remained unchanged, and contribution rates were adjusted accordingly.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services by how much the contribution income of the national insurance fund for 1988-89 would be reduced if the Treasury supplement were not reduced from 7 to 5 per cent. of gross contributions, the balance in the fund were maintained at the same proportion of benefit expenditure as at the end of 1987-88 instead of rising from 27 to 33 per cent., the proportion of contributions allocated to the National Health Service remained unchanged, and contribution rates were adjusted accordingly.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 7 March 1988]: It is estimated that to arrive at a national insurance fund balance at the end of 1988-89 of 27 per cent. of benefit expenditure, whilst maintaining the Treasury supplement at 7 per cent. of gross contributions and the present NHS allocation, the fund's income from contributions would need to be £2,000 million lower than currently estimated for the year.

Prescription Costs

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to secure a reduction in the costs of drugs prescribed by the National Health Service; what information he has about the methods by which the Hallwood health centre, Runcorn, Cheshire, has achieved savings in its prescribing costs and about the scale of the savings; what assessment he has made of the scope for applying similar methods throughout the National Health Service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: Through the pharmaceutical price regulation scheme control is kept on the costs of branded medicines. The reimbursement prices to community pharmacists and dispensing doctors of high usage generic medicines are negotiated directly with the generic manufacturers.

The Government are continuing their efforts to encourage general practitioners to prescribe more effectively and economically by measures such as the provision of feedback information about their prescribing to facilitate self-audit, voluntary generic prescribing and the development of practice formularies. In addition, the Department's regional medical service has increased the number of visits it makes to doctors to discuss their prescribing and has recently appointed two specialist prescribing regional medical officers.

The Hallwood health centre research project is investigating the role of the pharmacist in developing a practice formulary. With the Department's financial support, this project is to be extended in 1988/89 to cover a wider cross-section of practices within the Cheshire family practitioner area. When the information is available from this wider study its possible application on a national basis will be assessed.

AIDS

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any plans to ensure that nebulised pentamadine in aerosol form becomes available for prophylactic use by AIDS patients in danger of contacting pneumcystis pneumonia.

Mr. Newton: There is no product licence for nebulised pentamadine in aerosol form. However, clinicians have the right to prescribe medicines for individual patients even if the product is not licensed for use in the United Kingdom.

Rating Reform

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many representations he has received about the requirements for those on supplementary benefit to pay 20 per cent. of their rates.

Mr. Portillo: A substantial number.

Disabled People (Trust Fund)

Mr. Hanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what progress has been made on the proposed trust fund for very severely disabled people; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: The new fund will be called the independent living fund. Its aim will be to provide extra financial help on top of that already available to those very severely disabled people who would otherwise need to enter residential or hospital care. It will also be available to help people in such care who wish, and are able, to live independently in their own homes and to people currently living in their own homes who would face difficulties due to a change of circumstances. The fund should enable such people to support themselves and to retain or achieve their independence in the community. For the year 1988-89 up to £5 million has been set aside; the level of funding for subsequent years will be set in the light of experience.

The trust will be independent of the Department, of the Disablement Income Group and of the Disablement Income Group (Scotland). The trustees will be appointed by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Services, and will include individuals nominated by DIG. Decision on the disbursement of the money will be for the trustees, acting under the trust deed which will include criteria for eligibility. The trust deed will be available for public inspection. Both the Department and DIG will be available for consultation with the trustees as appropriate.

It will be for the trustees to decide how to discharge the requirements of the trust deed but I expect that the sums to be paid will be determined on the basis of individual assessments of need and available resources. Payments are likely to be regular and will be intended to pay for the service of a carer or carers where these cannot otherwise be provided. It will be for the trustees to determine how to deal with cases which have been turned down by the fund and I expect they will wish to consider any representations from or on behalf of such cases very carefully.

In due course, we shall introduce regulations which will enable any payments from the trust fund to be disregarded for the purpose of income-related benefits.

We and DIG are currently discussing details of the eligibility criteria which will broadly define the group to be covered by the fund. The criteria will essentially look at the individual's need for care in relation to their resources. The fund will not be solely for people in receipt of income support but will include very severely disabled people with low incomes.

Commissioned Research

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will detail the circumstances in which his Department forbids the publication of commissioned research.

Mrs. Currie: We have not withheld agreement to the publication of any research commissioned under the amended form of contract introduced in February 1987. Without purporting to list all or any circumstances in which agreement might be withheld, we envisage by way of example that they would be where legal advice was that libel, breach of confidentiality or factual error was likely to result. We would normally expect that the matter be resolved with the co-operation of the researcher.

Written Answers to Questions

Wednesday 9 March 1988

HOME DEPARTMENT

Mr. T. D. Phung

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he now expects to provide a substantive reply to the representations made on 17 March 1987 by the hon. Member for Woolwich in the case of Mr. T. D. Phung.

Mr. Renton: I wrote to the hon. Member yesterday.

Mr. Truong Nguyen Thanh.

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to complete his inquiries into the case of Mr. Truong Nguyen Thanh, originally raised with him by the hon. Member for Woolwich on 1 July 1987.

Mr. Renton: As I told the hon. Member in my written answer on 2 December 1987 at column 588, further inquiries were needed before this case could be resolved. I much regret that there has been some delay in initiating these. A reply is, however, now awaited from Mr. Truong. I shall write to the hon. Member as soon as the case has been fully considered.

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many subject access requests under the terms of the Data Protection Act his Department has received; what was his estimate of this number; whether he is reconsidering the subject access fee charged by his Department as a result; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: During the period 11 November 1987 to 1 March the Home Office received 16 requests for subject access.

It was not judged possible to make any firm advance estimate of likely take-up, but there was an indication, on the basis of experience in other European countries, that requests might be in the range of 0·1 to 1·0 per cent. per annum of records held, that is between 5,000 and 50,000 requests a year to be addressed to the Home Office.

There are no plans to reconsider the subject access fees charged by the Department.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department why he will not hold discussions with the Data Protection Registrar to produce a code of practice covering national security purposes as is possible under the terms of part V of the Data Protection Act.

Mr. Hurd: I can see no advantage in a code of practice in this area.

La Belle Discotheque

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Metropolitan police on their discussions with the West Berlin police regarding the statement by the acting head of the United States police in West Berlin, on 14 April 1986, as to the state of alerts in relation to the bombing of the La Belle discotheque: and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: I have nothing to add to the reply I gave to a similar question from the hon. Member on 7 March, at column 4.

Child Care

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many responses he has received from the voluntary sector to his consultative document on the proposed national unit for disclosure of police information to voluntary bodies concerning those wishing to work with children; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have received 11 responses from the voluntary sector (including eight from bodies representing a number of voluntary organisations).

Police Cells (Escapees)

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about the escape of five category A and two remand prisoners from South West London magistrates court cells on 6 March.

Mr. Hurd: The security of prisoners held in police and magistrates courts cells within the Metropolitan police district is the responsibility of the Commissioner. I understand from the Commissioner that on Sunday 6 March, 12 remand prisoners were being accommodated in court cells at South Western magistrates court, where they were the responsibility of one sergeant and three constables. One prisoner was being returned with an escort from the shower room when several prisoners attacked the police officers and succeeded in overpowering them. Seven of the 12 prisoners then escaped from the premises. The escape was discovered at approximately 10 pm when the night duty police officers arrived to relieve their colleagues. The prisoners who escaped included two who were jointly charged with murder, one who was on remand for possession of firearms, three who were on remand in relation to drug offences and one who was on remand for robbery. No category A prisoner was among those who escaped.

The Commissioner tells me that the incident is now being investigated by members of the Metropolitan Police Complaints Investigation Bureau and that all divisional chief superintendents have been instructed urgently to review security in police and magistrates courts cells within their divisional territories. The cells at the South Western district magistrates court will not be used for remand prisoners, pending a full review of the security arrangements.

I understand that three men, including the two men who escaped having previously been charged with murder, have now been recaptured.

RUC (Chief Constable)

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 10 February, Official Report, column 218, what inquiries he made of persons in (a) Scarborough and (b) Northern Ireland before announcing that the Chief Constable of the Royal Ulster Constabulary, Sir John Hermon, was in Northern Ireland throughout 19 May 1986; on what evidence his statement to the House was based; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: No inquiries were made of any persons in Scarborough. In Northern Ireland an inquiry was addressed to the Royal Ulster Constabulary. I was informed that Sir John Hermon held a meeting in his office on the morning of 19 May, that he attended a medal presentation ceremony in the afternoon, and that in the evening he had a dinner engagement, all these engagements being in Northern Ireland.

Crime Prevention

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is being done to increase the involvement of the public in crime prevention and to provide information on the steps that can be taken to reduce crime.

Mr. John Patten: Following the recent announcement of the "Safer Cities" programme my right hon. Friend today launched a major publicity campaign aimed at encouraging the public to work with the police to reduce crime. The campaign will cost about £3 million in its first phase, and is designed to run for three years. A free handbook is being made available on request which will give practical advice on a wide range of preventive measures. A copy of the handbook has been sent to all hon. and right hon. Members and placed in the Library.

Prisoners' Grievance Procedures (Review)

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the report of Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Prisons' review of prisoners' grievance procedures will be published; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: The report of a thematic review of prisoners' grievance procedures, conducted by Sir James Hennessy before the expiry of his term and Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Prisons, is published today. I am grateful to Sir James Hennessy and to the inspectorate for the work which went into this review and for a report which I hope will stimulate discussion of this important subject.

Sir James Hennessy's principal conclusion is that prisoners' grievance procedures need to be fair, efficient and effective and to inspire confidence among prisoners, staff and the wider community; that the existing procedures do not in all respects satisfy those requirements; and that they need to be overhauled.

Among the specific recommendations in the report are proposals for simplifying the procedures so that, as far as possible, each stage for examining a request or grievance should be exhausted before the next is embarked upon. The report envisages that governors, boards of visitors and the prison department would continue to play a part in the resolution of prisoners' grievances, which however should be distinguished according to whether they are complaints or requests; but it also proposes the establishment of a new prison ombudsman and the discontinuation of prisoners' access to the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration.

Other recommendations include a statutory code of prisoners' rights and duties as a long-term aim; the removal of the restrictions on the ventilation of prisoners' complaints; the withdrawal of the disciplinary offences of making a false and malicious allegation and of repeatedly making groundless complaints; improved information for prisoners about the procedures for making a complaint; and the introduction of time limits for replying to complaints and of a requirement for reasons to be given when complaints are rejected.

Before reaching decisions on the recommendations in this report I want to be able to take into account comments from interested individuals and organisations, both inside and outside the prison service. These should reach the Department by 9 June and should be sent to the Head of P3 Division, Home Office Prison Department, Cleland House, Page Street, London SW1P 4LN.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Under-fives

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he envisages any reduction of educational provision for children under five years of age, following the abolition of the Inner London education authority.

Mr. Dunn: Education for under-fives is provided at the discretion of local education authorities, but the inner London councils will be required to set out their proposed provision for this age group in development plans to be published early next year. Any proposals for significant reductions in current provision would be subject to statutory procedures under the Education Act 1980.

Voluntary-aided and Special Agreement Schools

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what the capital spending allocation for voluntary-aided and special agreement schools was in the London boroughs of Barnet, Brent, Ealing, Enfield, Haringey, Hillingdon and Harrow in each of the years 1982-83 to 1988-89; and how much in each case was allocated to Roman Catholic voluntary-aided schools.

Mr. Dunn: Allocation in these years for each of these London boroughs is as follows:

	1982-83	1983-84	1984-85	1985-86	1986-87	1987-88	1988-89
Barnet	260	192	1,091	1,662	400	880	1,109
Brent	342	298	340	46	12	631	467

	1982-83	1983-84	1984-85	1985-86	1986-87	1987-88	1988-89
Ealing	185	350	340	341	331	762	971
Enfield	81	314	375	620	197	93	383
Haringey	147	58	60	425	323	75	50
Hillingdon	94	131	175	67	40	230	350
Harrow	21	22	10	20	1	25	25

The allocations shown here are those announced before the start of the financial year in question and do not include subsequent revisions.

It is not possible to show separately how much has been allocated to Roman Catholic voluntary-aided schools.

Nottinghamshire Education Committee

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has received a request for a meeting from the Nottinghamshire education committee with regard to its capital allocation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: My right hon. Friend has received no such request.

City Technology Colleges

Mr. Ashdown: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether any of the proposed city technology colleges will be supported by funds from the tobacco industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: The companies which have announced their intention to sponsor a city technology college include Hanson plc, which has interests in the tobacco industry among a number of others.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Lavatories

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Lord President of the Council, how many (a) water closets for (i) men and (ii) women and (b) urinals there are in the Palace of Westminster.

Mr. Wakeham: The information requested, for the Commons area of the Palace of Westminster, is as follows:

Toilet facility	Number of locations
Urinals[1] and water closets for men	38
Water closets for women	15

[1] Urinals alone are provided in 2 locations.

Select Committees (Visits)

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed, as representing the House of Commons Commission, what was the cost of (a) home and (b) overseas visits by each Select Committee since 1979; how many members were involved in each visit; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Beith: All the information requested for Sessions 1985-86 and 1986-87 is contained in the Sessional Select Committee Returns for those years; costs of home and overseas visits in sessions 1979-80 to 1984-85 are set out in the Sessional Returns, but the number of Members involved in each visit in those years could be discovered only at disproportionate cost; information about the anticipated cost of overseas travel by Committees in the current session was given in my reply to a question by the hon. Member for Nottingham, North (Mr. Allen) on 29 February at columns 642-4; the other information requested for this Session is not yet available, but will be included in the Sessional Return for this session.

ENERGY

Combined Heat and Power

Mr. Prescott: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is his Department's policy with regard to the provision of urban sites suitable for combined heat and power stations.

Mr. Parkinson: It is for the promoters of urban combined heat and power schemes to obtain suitable sites for CHP stations and to secure the necessary planning consent.

Mr. Prescott: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is his Department's policy with regard to the encouragement of the further development of combined heat and power district heating in Britain.

Mr. Parkinson: My Department has provided substantial funding towards studies to evaluate the feasibility of combined heat and power-district heating. It is now for the private sector to take its further development forward.

Uranium

Mr. Prescott: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what uranium not covered by either bilaterial or multilateral safeguard arrangements has been imported for civil use into the United Kingdom since 1979; and if he will name the countries of origin of such uranium.

Mr. Parkinson: None. All civil nuclear material in the United Kingdom is subject to our safeguards agreements with Euratom and the IAEA.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what specific provisions exist in each of the current safeguards arrangements covering uranium to ensure that uranium imported into (a) the United Kingdom, and (b) the European Economic Community remains within the safeguardable nuclear cycle; and what is the practice of (a) Her Majesty's Government and (b) Euratom with regard to weight-for-weight direct substitution of safeguarded uranium within the agreed safeguards arrangements.

Mr. Michael Spicer [holding answer 26 February 1988]: All uranium imported into the United Kingdom for civil use is subject to Euratom safeguards and the terms of the United Kingdom-Euratom-IAEA safeguards agreement. In some cases it is subject to special safeguarding obligations agreed between the supplying country and the Community.

Euratom accepts exchanges of safeguards obligations between nuclear material on the basis of strict equivalence in quantity and quality.

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Prescott: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if there are any contractual arrangements currently in force that permit the import or retention of spent nuclear fuel and attendant radioactive wastes to remain in the United Kingdom which are not covered by a return to sender clause.

Mr. Parkinson: Since 1976, BNFL's contracts for the reprocessing of overseas spent fuel have contained options for the return of wastes. The Government intend that these options should be exercised, and that the wastes should be returned. BNFL has a number of reprocessing contracts with overseas customers which were signed before 1976. Those contracts do not contain return of waste options, but wastes from them will represent no more than 10 per cent. of total waste arisings in the United Kingdom by 2000. No facilities in addition to those needed for the disposal of United Kingdom wastes should be required.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Gaza Strip

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the current budget for housing construction and sewage systems within the Gaza strip of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency; what were the equivalent figures for each of the last five years; and what were the contributions to these budgeted figures from (a) the United Kingdom, (b) each of the other four permanent members of the Security Council, (c) Saudi Arabia, (d) Kuwait and (e) Iraq.

Mr. Chris Patten: The UNRWA has not been involved in the construction of housing or sewerage systems in Gaza for many years. The agency has undertaken a modest programme of essential maintenance of shelters for special hardship families and a limited amount of surface drain construction in the eight Gaza camps. Expenditure on these programmes for the period 1983-88 is as follows:

	Shelter maintenance US dollars	Surface drains US dollars
1983	44,000	175,000
1984	104,000	72,000
1985	72,000	33,000
1986	111,000	13,000
1987	129,000	72,000
1988 (Projected)	135,000	94,000

These programmes are funded from the core budget. The UNRWA has not received earmarked contributions for this type of expenditure and cannot therefore provide a breakdown by donor country.

United Nations Children's Fund

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what percentage of Her Majesty's Government's total multilateral aid budget was contributed to the United Nations children's fund in each year since 1978.

Mr. Chris Patten: The information is as follows:

Percentage of gross public expenditure on multilateral aid contributed to UNICEF

Year	Per cent.
1978	3·48
1979	2·87
1980	1·89
1981	2·12
1982	1·45
1983	1·26
1984	1·13
1985	1·70
1986	1·63

The 1987 percentage is not yet available.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was Her Majesty's Government's contribution to the United Nations children's fund (general resources and special appeals) in each year since 1978 at current and outturn prices.

Mr. Chris Patten: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave the hon. Member for Monklands, West (Mr. Clarke) on 21 October 1987 at columns 745-6.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is Her Majesty's Government's percentage share of total contributions to the general resource fund of the United Nations children's fund in the latest available year.

Mr. Chris Patten: Our share of total contributions to the general resources fund of the United Nations Children's Fund was 4·24 per cent. in 1986, the latest available year. The figure is taken from UNICEF's report "Contributions from Governments and Other Sources to General Resources and for Specific Purposes in 1986" a copy of which was placed in the Library in October 1987.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information is available as to the total value to United Kingdom companies of contracts awarded to supply goods and services to the United Nations children's fund for each year since 1982.

Mr. Chris Patten: The following are the latest UNICEF figures available:

	$US
1982	11,658,700
1983	10,392,900
1984	9,205,900
1985	11,136,100
1986	13,901,900

Overseas Aid

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what percentage of Her Majesty's Government's contributions to multilateral aid agencies was made (a) by automatic subscription and (b) by voluntary contribution, in each since 1978.

Mr. Chris Patten: The information in the table covers contributions from the aid programme to United Nations development agencies, international financial institutions, the European Community and Commonwealth aid programmes defined as follows:

i. Agencies where automatic subscription payments follow from agreed administrative budgets (for example the United Nations Industrial Development Organisation and most aid paid from the European Community budget);

ii. Agencies where subscription or contribution payments follow negotiated increases in capital or soft fund resources (for example the multilateral development banks, the International Fund for Agricultural Development, the European Development Funds and the European Community's aid programme towards the Mediterranean states);

iii. Agencies to which we contribute on a purely voluntary basis, year by year, (for example the United Nations Children's Fund, the United Nations Development Programme and the Commonwealth Fund for Technical Co-operation).

Year	(i)	(ii)	(iii)
1978	16	54	30
1979	15	57	28
1980	22	61	17
1981	27	58	14
1982	23	64	13
1983	19	71	10
1984	27	63	10
1985	29	56	15
1986	23	62	15

Figures for 1987 are not yet available.
Note: Percentages may not add to 100 because of rounding.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Police Computers

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Attorney-General what prosecutions (a) are currently taking place, (b) are currently being considered and (c) have been completed in the last year which involve allegations of abuse of the police national computer or any other police computer; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: No separate records are kept by the Crown Prosecution Service of prosecutions involving allegations of abuse of police computers, and accordingly it is not possible to give an accurate answer to the hon. Member's question.

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Attorney-General how many subject access requests under the terms of the Data Protection Act the Lord Chancellor's Department has received; what was his estimate of this number; whether he is reconsidering the subject access fee charged by the Department as a result; and whether he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: The Lord Chancellor's Department has received 700 subject access requests under the Data Protection Act 1984, all but one of which came from members of staff. No estimate had been made of the likely number of requests. No fee is currently being charged by the Department and no change is being considered.

"My Country Right or Wrong"

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Attorney-General if he will make a statement on his decision to apply for the lifting of the interim injunction against the transmission of the first episode of the BBC programme "My Country Right or Wrong".

The Attorney-General: When the Government had reason to believe that the Radio 4 series "My Country Right or Wrong" would include interviews with members and former members of the security and intelligence services, the Government asked the BBC to give details of what would be broadcast from those interviews. The BBC refused to provide that information and so the Government sought and obtained an interlocutory injunction in order to uphold the duty of confidentiality owed by such persons. When in the course of the court proceedings the BBC provided a transcript of the first episode, the Government were able to consider what was to be broadcast from those interviews and concluded that it was no longer necessary for the broadcast of that episode to be restrained by the injunction. The Government were not able to agree to the lifting of the injunction as a whole because the BBC has still refused to disclose what other material from those interviews it is proposed to include in future broadcasts.

WALES

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many subject access requests under the terms of the Data Protection Act his Department has received; what was his estimate of this number; whether he is reconsidering the subject access fee charged by his Department as a result; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: My Department has received one request for subject access, under the terms of the Data Protection Act, and did not attempt to estimate the number of requests which might be received. At present there are no plans to reconsider the level of subject access fees.

TRANSPORT

RAF Boulmer

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether civilian air traffic control will continue to be carried out at RAF Boulmer; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The responsibility for the provision of air traffic control services rests jointly with the Civil Aviation Authority and the Ministry of Defence. I understand from the authority that the civil element of the joint air traffic control unit at RAF Boulmer is to close on 1 October 1988, and the civil air traffic control tasks undertaken by the unit will be transferred to other centres.

Aircraft Safety

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what recent representations he has received from the Heathrow Association for the Control of Aircraft Noise; and what reply he is sending.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Heathrow Association for the Control of Aircraft Noise wrote to my right hon. Friend on 29 February about air safety. I will send the right hon. Gentleman a copy of the reply.

Plutonium (Transport)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if any studies have been conducted by his Department into the environmental contamination implications of an aeroplane carrying plutonium canisters to or from Dounreay nuclear power development establishment crashing into the sea between Caithness and the Orkneys.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The evidence submitted by British Nuclear Fuels to the European demonstration reprocessing plant (EDRP) inquiry at Dounreay showed that in the event of an air crash in the sea there would be no release of radioactivity.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many voyages take place each month of ships transporting plutonium from or to the Dounreay nuclear power development establishment via the Minches to or from British Nuclear Fuels plc's Sellafield site.

Mr. David Mitchell: These movements are in full compliance with national regulations based on the recommendations of the International Maritime Organisation, which do not depend for their effectiveness on a particular route, and do not require individual authorisation. I understand that since the start of this traffic in June 1981 there have been 21 movements of plutonium nitrate from Dounreay to Sellafield, the discharged flasks being returned to Dounreay by the same route. Certain categories of waste are also transported from Sellafield to Dounreay by sea.

Second Severn Crossing

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the progress of the second Severn crossing.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The consultants for the project — W. S. Atkins and Partners and G. Maunsell and Partners — are making good progress. A public exhibition has been held at nine different centres on both sides of the estuary and consultations are now under way with affected parties. These consultations will continue during the coming months. The consultants are proceeding with the further technical investigations needed. We hope to be in a position to finalise the proposals in 18-24 months.

Road Improvements

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what programmes are being initiated to improve road quality standards throughout the United Kingdom; and if he will provide a table listing expenditure figures for all regions from 1979 to the latest available date.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [pursuant to his reply, 7 March 1988, c. 105-7]: The following tables should have been included.

PRIME MINISTER

Middle East (Ministerial Visits)

Mr. Latham: To ask the Prime Minister whether she will list all planned official visits by Ministers to (a) the state of Israel and (b) member countries of the League of Arab States during the current year.

The Prime Minister: A number of visits are under consideration, but details have yet to be finalised.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Nationalised Industries

75. Mr. Summerson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much is the total amount spent on the nationalised industries since 1958 by way of purchase, subsidy, written-off loans and any other similar costs, and interest; and what has been the average rate of return on capital invested over that period.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Nationalised industries have not always been distinguished from other public corporations in available statistical sources. Over the period 1958 to 1987 inclusive, £71 billion in today's price was spent on purchase (£4 billion), grant subsidies (£44 billion) and written-off loans (£23 billion) for those public corporations which have at some point been defined as nationalised industries. The average real rate of return, after subsidies, on capital employed in all public corporations over the period 1958 to 1986 inclusive was approximately one half of 1 per cent. per annum.

Manufacturing Industry

76. Dr. Reid: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what he estimates will be the deficit in manufactured trade in 1988; and what percentage change this represents on the 1987 figure.

Mr. Major: My right hon. Friend will be making a new forecast at Budget time.

Productivity

77. Mr. Wall: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the rise in productivity in (a) nationalised and (b) private industry since 1979.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I refer the hon. Member to table 4.7 of the White Paper, "The Government's Expenditure Plans 1988-89 to 1990-91" (Cm. 288-I).

Cigarettes

Mr. Sims: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many cigarettes were released for home consumption during the six months following the last Budget and the previous two periods of six months; what estimates he has made on the effect on cigarette sales if he had raised cigarette tax in line with inflation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley: The figures requested are as follows:

Clearances of cigarettes for home consumption billion

	Number
April to September 1986	37
October 1986 to March 1987	58
April 1987 to September 1987	41

Clearances of cigarettes for home consumption are subject to significant variations—especially on account of forestalling of Budget or manufacturers' price increases. Clearances do not necessarily therefore reflect consumption during that period.

It is estimated that cigarette consumption would have been about 1 per cent. lower in 1987-88 if the duty had been revalorised in the 1987 Budget (no duty increase).

Economic and Finance Council

Mr. Buswell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the outcome of the Economic and Finance Council meeting on 7 March.

Mr. Brooke: The European Community's Ecofin Council met in Brussels: I represented the United Kingdom.

The Council established the draft Community budget for 1988 and reached agreement on a provisional draft intergovernmental agreement. The Italian delegation made it clear that in the forthcoming discussions on the new own resources decision it will continue to argue that the GNP-based financing of the United Kingdom's abatement should be brought to account against the new fourth own resource (thus in effect increasing the proportion of the budget which would be financed in accordance with VAT shares) rather than (as proposed by the Commission) within the VAT ceiling.

The draft budget proposals for expenditure remain as set out in my written answer on 24 February, at columns 194-6. The budget total remains at 44·7 billion ecu (£31·0 billion) for commitment appropriations and 43·4 billion ecu (£30·1 billion) for payment appropriations. Provision for the United Kingdom's abatement is 2·387 billion ecu (£1·656 billion).

The provisional and indicative amount which member states would contribute under the intergovernmental agreement has been reduced slightly, from some 7·7 billion ecu to some 7·647 billion ecu (£5·304 billion), with a United Kingdom contribution of 1·263 billion ecu (£0·876 billion). This extra financing would be partially offset by smaller VAT payments, leaving total extra financing, compared with the maximum amount available under the existing own resources ceiling, of about 5·4 billion ecu (£3·7 billion) after allowing for a surplus of 0·5 billion ecu (£0·3 billion) carried forward from 1987. As before, all sterling equivalent figures are calculated at the rate of 1·4417 ecu to the pound used by the Commission in its latest budget proposals.

Over lunch the Council considered preparations for the forthcoming discussions on budget discipline with the European Parliament, which were foreshadowed in paragraphs A14 and 15 of the consolidated conclusions of the Brussels European Council (SN 461/1/88).

The Council heard a presentation by the president of the European Court of Auditors of the court's report for 1986. I emphasised the importance which the United Kingdom attaches to obtaining better value for money from Community expenditure. I welcomed the increasing attention which the court is giving to fraud in the Community and I also encouraged the Commission to bring forward cost-effective proposals for combating fraud. The Council approved a resolution recommending that the European Parliament should grant the Commission a discharge on implementation of the 1986 budget.

The Council reviewed the economic situation in the Community and agreed that there was no need to change the policy guidelines set out in the 1987-88 annual economic report adopted last December.

Family Earnings

Mr. Squire: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table setting out for a two-child family on (a) half average earnings, (b) three quarters average earnings, (c) average earnings, (d) one and a half average earnings, (e) twice average earnings, (f) five times average earnings and (g) 10 times average earnings, the increase in net income derived from (i) a 1p cut in the standard rate of income tax in 1988-89, (ii) an increase in personal allowances, over and above indexation, incurring the same cost as (i), (iii) an increase in child benefit incurring the same cost as (i), both assuming and not assuming similar increases in the supplementary benefit children's rates, (iv) the introduction of a reduced rate tax band of 25 per cent. at the same cost as (i) showing what band of income the reduced rate would cover, and (v) the introduction of a reduced rate tax band of 20 per cent. at the same cost as (i), showing what band of income the reduced rate would cover.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 18 February 1988]: The effects of the proposed changes on a one earner, two child, family are shown in the table. The table contains information based on direct revenue or expenditure cost in a full year at 1988-89 levels of income, based on projections from the 1984-85 survey of personal incomes in line with forecasts in the Autumn Statement. On this basis, each of the measures would cost £1·4 billion in a full year—that is the full year figure underlying the first year cost of a 1p cut in the basic rate of income tax, £1·25 billion, shown in the Autumn Statement. The income tax changes are compared with the 1987-88 tax regime indexed to 1988-89 according to the statutory provisions. The income tax calculations assume that all personal allowances and higher rate thresholds would increase by the same percentage and disregard any changes in social security income-related benefits to which the family may be entitled. It has also been assumed that the only tax relief or allowance available to the married couple is the married man's allowance and that the wife has no earnings.

[1] Average earnings assumed to be £244·7 per week, an increase of 6·5 per cent. on 1987-88 in line with the assumptions used by the Government Actuary for reviewing national insurance contributions (paragraph 3.02 of the Autumn Statement 1987).
[2] Assuming no change in income support rates.
[3] Assuming a corresponding change in income support.

Income Tax

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer by how much in real terms the average annual tax payments of a man with no allowances and reliefs other than the married man's tax allowance earning (i) £5,000, (ii) £10,000, (iii) £15,000 and (iv) £20,000 has increased or decreased since 1978-79.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 23 February 1988]: The information is given in the table. The calculations have been made by comparing the tax liabilities under the 1987-88 income tax regime with those under the 1978-79 regime indexed to 1987-88 according to the statutory formula.

Reduction in income tax liability under 1987-88 tax regime

Annual earnings		As percentage of liability under 1978-79 indexed tax regime
£	£	per cent.
5,000	139·00	30
10,000	439·00	21
15,000	739·00	20
20,000	1,045·65	19

It is assumed that the taxpayer has no income other than earned income and no allowances or reliefs other than the married man's allowance.

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer why notices of coding for the tax year 1988-89 are being sent out in advance of the new rates of tax being known.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 29 February 1988]: Notices of coding for the tax year 1988-89 have been issued where, because of changes in taxpayers' circumstances, the taxpayers' codes for the year commencing on 6 April 1988 differ from the code for the current year 1987-88. Apart from prefix F codes, changes to rates of tax do not normally cause any revision to be made to a taxpayer's code. They merely affect the amount of tax to be deducted by the employer in applying that code.

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the cost in the 1988-89 financial year of introducing a reduced rate tax band of (a) 25 per cent. and (b) 20 per cent. on the first £1,500 of taxable income; and what would be the effect on the net income of (i) a single person, (ii) a couple where the wife is not working and (iii) a couple where the wife is working and paying tax.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 3 March 1988]: The full-year cost at forecast 1988-89 income levels of introducing a reduced rate of income tax of (a) 25 per cent. and (b) 20 per cent. on the first £1,500 of taxable income would be £690 million and about £2·5 billion respectively. The estimates are based on a projection of the 1984-85 survey of personal incomes and are therefore provisional.

The net gain to a basic rate taxpayer is given in the table. For the purposes of the calculations the 1987-88 income tax regime has been indexed to 1988-89 in accordance with the statutory provisions.

	Single	Married man
		Wife not working	Wife with earnings liable at basic rate
	£·p	£·p	£·p
(i) reduced rate 25 per cent. on the first £1,500	0·58	0·58	1·15
(ii) reduced rate 20 per cent. on the first £1,500	2·02	2·02	4·04

Exchange Rates

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer in which of the last 10 years changes in the dollar/European currency unit exchange rate have had a European Community budget effect of more than 400 million European currency units; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke [holding answer 7 March 1988]: The Commission has estimated that, in 1988 prices, a 5 per cent. movement in the dollar/ecu exchange rate has an effect of some 400 million ecu on the European Community budget.

The frequency of changes of this magnitude is sensitive to the precise periods compared. On the basis of annual averages, however, the year-on-year change in the dollar/ecu exchange rate has exceeded 5 per cent. in most years since 1978, the exceptions being 1980 and 1985. In three years the dollar depreciated by more than 5 per cent., whereas in four years the dollar appreciated by more than 5 per cent.

DEFENCE

Ammunition (Scorriton Down)

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence why live ammunition was stored at Scorriton Down in the Dartmoor national park; what precautions were taken to protect it; how much was stored there; when the theft was discovered; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Scorriton Down lies in an area used extensively for military training during the second world war. The range was closed in 1947 and clearance work lasted until 1949, at which time the land was returned to the owners. Since the equipment used to locate the munitions at that time was not as effective as its more modern counterparts, some items remained undetected until the discovery last year of some live ammunition. The Royal Engineers were then called upon to conduct what has proved to be a lengthy clearance operation.

During the course of this clearance operation foolhardy members of the public have, quite contrary to common sense, and at considerable risk to themselves and others, deliberately dug up and removed four items of old munitions. These stolen items have since been recovered and destroyed, along with all other munitions found on the site to date.

In the light of this incident the Army is reviewing its operating procedures. Pending the outcome of this review, clearance work on Scorriton Down has ceased and the police have been informed of this. I shall write further to my hon. Friend once the review of procedures is complete.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many members of staff within his Department are located within each region outside London; what percentage this constitutes of staff within his Department; and what were the comparable figures in absolute and percentage terms in 1979.

Mr. Sainsbury: It is not possible to distinguish Ministry of Defence employees employed in London from those in the rest of the south-east prior to 1980. The following table gives the number of full-time equivalent civilian staff, excluding casual staff, employed on 1 January for 1979, 1980 and 1988 in each economic planning region of England, separating London from the rest of the south-east in 1980 and 1988, in Scotland, Wales and Ireland, and overseas and at sea.

For the purposes of consistency and comparability the figures exclude personnel employed at Royal Ordnance Factories, which changed to independent Companies Act status on 2 January 1985.

Some 10,800 of the reduction in numbers in the south-west between January 1980 and January 1988 was due to the transfer of Royal Dockyard Devonport staff to commercial management on 6 April 1987, and some 5,700 of the reduction in Scotland between the same dates was due to the similar transfer of Royal Dockyard Rosyth staff.

Departmental Buildings

Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the location and status of all buildings within his Department located in London and the annual cost of rents, rates and maintenance of each.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer to his question to the Secretary of State for the Environment on 2 March 1988, at column 584. In the case of the Ministry of Defence, the Department occupies accommodation in 39 properties on the Civil Estate in the Greater London area, ranging from its main HQ building in Whitehall through sites, for example at Stanmore and Chessington, to the archives at Hayes and stationery store at Wandsworth.

There are 98 sites on the Defence Estate in the Greater London area, excluding married quarters, residences and recreation grounds, ranging from service careers information offices to airfields as at RAF Northolt and Army garrisons as at Woolwich.

Gurkhas (Gold Recovery)

Mr. Thorne: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps are being taken to seek the recovery of gold taken from former British Gurkha soldiers in Calcutta in 1987 by the Indian customs service.

Mr. Freeman: We are in active discussion with the relevant authorities in India on ways of recovering the gold and on the question of documentation which would enable British Gurkhas to take gold through India en route for Nepal without risk of further such incidents. In the meantime we are seeking to ensure that those Gurkhas who were affected do not suffer hardship as a result of the temporary loss of their gold.

British Forces (Germany)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list for each year since 1979 (i) the total cost of British forces based in Germany, (ii) the amount chargeable to the Government of the Federal Republic of Germany and (iii) the amount paid by that Government; what is the current outstanding amount owing; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The estimated costs of British Forces Germany, excluding equipment, are as follows:

	£ million
1979-80	948
1980-81	1,140
1981-82	1,086
1982-83	1,234
1983-84	1,277
1984-85	1,345
1985-86	1,436
1986-87	1,463
1987-88	1,595

All figures are at Estimates prices and exchange rates for the years stated. Since 1980-81 the Federal Republic of Germany has made no direct financial contribution to the cost of BFG, but it provides various buildings, lands and services free of charge, or at reduced rates.

Aldermaston (Weapons Development)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether any work has been carried out at Aldermaston on new weapons, details of which have not yet been reported to Parliament; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: I have nothing to add to my answer to the hon. Member on 21 January, at column 774.

Nuclear Submarines

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what specific arrangements are made to safeguard the public against the effects of incidents involving British nuclear submarines which could lead to the release of radioactive material when any visit is undertaken to the port of Cardiff;

(2) what steps are taken to ensure the safety of the general public when incidents occur which could involve the release of radioactive material from British nuclear submarines (a) at any time, (b) during entry or leaving port and (c) while in port.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Safety schemes, detailing procedures and protective measures to be implemented in the unlikely event of an accidental release of radioactive material from a submarine are drawn up to cover the areas of all naval bases and other berths used by such vessels in the United Kingdom. These are produced in consultation with the appropriate local authorities, emergency services and other civilian agencies with a direct involvement, all of whom hold copies. The combined Barry and Cardiff special safety scheme covers the arrangements for Cardiff.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many incidents involving British nuclear submarines have resulted in the release of radioactive material since 1978; and whether any of these occurred in Cardiff or in the Bristol channel;

(2) how many incidents involving nuclear submarines and their reactors have occurred since 1978; and how many fell into each of the categories of mechanical problems, operator error or electrical faults;

(3) how many incidents involving the reactors which power Britain's nuclear submarines occurred between 1962 and 1978 in Cardiff or within 10 miles of Cardiff;

(4) how many incidents involving the release of radioactive materials from British nuclear submarines occurred in Cardiff or the Bristol channel, between 1962 and 1978.

Mr. Ian Stewart: It is not our general policy to discuss matters affecting the operation of Her Majesty's submarines. However, maintenance, operating and safety standards are exacting, and, as a consequence, there has never been an incident involving such submarines where there was any radiological hazard to service men, base personnel or members of the public.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many port visits in the United Kingdom have been made (a) by British nuclear submarines and (b) other nations' nuclear submarines in each year since 1962; and how many of these have been to Cardiff in each year.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Visits of United Kingdom nuclear powered submarines to non-naval ports since 1970, when records have been kept, are as follows:

Port	Visits (total)
Hull (to 1981)	8
Barry (to 1978)	4
Liverpool	29
Southampton	5
Cardiff	14

The visits to Cardiff have taken place as follows: 1970; 1971; 1972; 1975; 1976; 1977; 1981; 1983 (2 visits); 1985; 1986 (2 visits); 1988 (2 visits).

In 1986 there were 17 visits of non-United Kingdom nuclear powered submarines to United Kingdom naval bases and in 1987 there were 12. There were no such visits in these years to non-naval ports, including Cardiff.

The other figures are unobtainable except at disproporationate cost.

"Giants of the Glens"

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will obtain for his departmental library a copy of the transcript of the Channel Four television programme, "Giants of the Glens", broadcast on 13 February; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: No. The Channel Four television programme, "Giants of the Glens", concerned hydro-electric power in the north of Scotland and is thus a matter for the Secretary of State for Scotland.

Heavy Water

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what projects have been carried out, or are planned, to produce heavy water in Scotland for military purposes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: None.

Mr. Kurt Waldheim

Mr. Rhodes James: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the nature of the report naming the then Lieutenant Waldheim as a wanted German Army intelligence officer; and if he will consider releasing it.

Mr. Ian Stewart: As I announced on 29 February, at columns 420-21, a comprehensive review of the results of the Ministry of Defence's earlier investigation into the fate of captured British service men and the involvement, if any, of the then Lieutenant Waldheim has been set in hand. However, I am anxious that the review should be able to proceed without diversion of effort into questions of the release of individual documents. It would conflict with the proper conduct and progress of the current review to release documents piecemeal in advance of the final report. It is important that the review team should not be pressed for comments of detail on matters which are being comprehensively addressed in the course of the review and which will be covered in its report.

With regard to the document naming Lieutenant Waldheim, to which my hon. Friend refers, I wish to correct the mistaken suggestion that this is a wanted list, in view of speculation that has arisen since it was referred to by the International Commission of Historians (ICH).

This document was mentioned by the commission in the following terms:

"The Commission also made enquiries regarding a CIA file of 26 April 1945 which according to report contained certain information on Lieutenant Waldheim. Although we were refused access to that file which even now is still a classified document the extract that we were given to look at and that we were assured was the only one relating to Waldheim contained only a personal description of Waldheim. That description is part of a list of a great number of Wehrmacht officers in the Ic Branch".

I can confirm that the document to which the Commission refers was simply a record of a routine interrogation report dated 26 April 1945 on the details of individuals who happened to be known to a German officer. It was not a wanted list as has been alleged in some newspapers. In this interrogation report one of the names mentioned is that of the then Lieutenant Waldheim. The relevant verbatim extract from this document is as follows:

"236 Ob.lt. WALDHEIM
Subordinate officer to WARNSTORFF in SALONIKA.
Height: ca 1·82
Hair: Light
Eyes: Light
Age: ca 28"

The interrogation report contains no other reference to the then Lieutenant Waldheim.

We will consider the possibility of releasing particular documents when the review team's findings are published.

ALARM Project

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make statement about progress on the ALARM project.

Mr. Sainsbury: Following British Aerospace's decision to adopt a new motor for the air-launched anti-radar missile — ALARM — negotiations were concluded last November between the company and my Department for the continuation of the project. I am glad to be able to say that the company is now satisfied with its work on proving the new motor. As a consequence, under the terms of last November's agreement, a revised contract came into effect on 29 February 1988 providing for the project to continue, with responsibility for success placed on the company under tight fixed price conditions.

NATO (Merchant Shipping Needs)

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether NATO has yet launched its proposed study into the Alliance's ability to meet its needs for merchant shipping in times of emergency or war; and when he expects the study to be completed.

Mr. David Mitchell: I have been asked to reply.

NATO is proposing to invite tenders from consultants to carry out the study under the organisation's international competitive tendering procedure. I understand the aim is to complete the study by September 1989.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Iran-Iraq War

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will make a statement on the progress to date in implementing the mandatory United Nations Security Council resolution requiring a cease-fire in the war between Iran and Iraq; what is the latest estimate available to him of the number of deaths in this conflict, including civilian deaths; and how many are believed to have died as a result of the use of chemical weapons officially banned by international agreements.

Mr. Mellor: Despite the efforts of the United Nations Secretary-General, Security Council resolution 598 remains unimplemented after seven months. The Security Council is therefore actively working on enforcement measures to be applied to the recalcitrant party.

It is estimated that approximately 150,000 Iraqi and 500,000 Iranian troops have been killed so far, together with a total of some 200,000 civilians. The number of deaths directly attributable to the use of chemical weapons is not known.

Hostages

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what current steps he is taking, through diplomatic contacts, to bring about the release of Mr. Terry Waite and other British hostages still imprisoned by Arab terrorists; and whether he is pursuing diplomatic initiatives through the United Nations Security Council.

Mr. Mellor: Her Majesty's embassy in Beirut is very active in trying to obtain information about the disappearance and whereabouts of all British hostages held in the Lebanon. We have repeatedly called upon Governments or organisations with influence over the hostage-takers to use their influence to secure the release of all those held. We are also in regular contact with other Governments, including members of the United Nations Security Council, who might be able to help.

Middle East (Christian Worship)

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will give details of the arrangements made by Her Majesty's ambassador in Saudi Arabia, and by the British interests section in the embassy of the protecting power in Libya, for British subjects who wish to attend Christian worship at Easter, in the light of the ban on holding public Christian services in those countries.

Mr. Eggar: The Saudi Arabian Government confirmed recently that Christians are permitted to worship individually according to their conscience. Her Majesty's ambassador in Riyadh has not made any special arrangements for British nationals to attend Christian worship at Easter.

British nationals in Tripoli may attend the weekly religious services at either the Anglican, Roman Catholic or Non-Conformist Union church, and there is also a Roman Catholic church in Benghazi. The Anglican chaplain in Tripoli makes fortnightly visits to the 500-strong British community in Marsa Al Brega and he also regularly visits the Anglican community in Benghazi.

Middle East (British Citizens)

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the number of British citizens currently in (a) Libya and (b) Syria; and what were the equivalent figures before Her Majesty's Government broke off diplomatic relations with those states.

Mr. Eggar: There are estimated to be about 3,250 British citizens currently in Libya and 300 in Syria. The corresponding figures before we broke off relations with those states were 8,250 and 300.

Pakistan

Mr. Millan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations he has made to the Government of Pakistan regarding their treatment of their Ahmadi community.

Mr. Eggar: We regularly make known to the Pakistan Government the extent of concern expressed in this country over the situation of the Ahmadi community in Pakistan.

EMPLOYMENT

RPI (Error)

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will issue a corrected series of the retail prices index for all items and for all items less housing costs for each month from February 1986 until October 1987 inclusive, to take account of the error in the retail prices index.

Mr. Lee: No. It has always been the practice not to revise the retail prices index once it has been published, as doing so would create serious problems for some users. This practice was endorsed by the Retail Prices Advisory Committee in its latest report (Cmnd. 9848, July 1986) and I see no reason to change it.

Extra payments have been made to pensioners in recompense for their small losses at the time of pensions uprating and to ensure that the Exchequer has not benefited from the consequent social security under payment.

Professional and Executive Recruitment

Mr. Couchman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what professional advice he has received about options for transferring Professional and Executive Recruitment out of the public sector.

Mr. Fowler: I announced on 2 December the appointment of Lloyds merchant bank to advise me on the options for transferring PER out of the public sector.

There is extensive private sector provision in the activities which PER provides on a fee-charging basis. It is the Government's view that activities of a clearly commercial nature are better conducted in the private sector.

I have now received Lloyds' advice, which recommends that PER should be transferred out of the public sector through a sale by tender. This recognises, I believe, that the current PER operation is essentially a commercial recruitment business and that it will have the opportunity both to realise its full commercial potential and to develop better in the private sector.

The Government intend therefore to proceed with privatisation. I have asked Lloyds merchant bank to conduct the necessary preparatory work over the next couple of months, with a view to offering PER for sale, through a private tender process open to all interested parties, at the earliest opportunity.

I am keen that PER's staff should have every chance to benefit from the wider opportunities that privatisation will open up for PER. I shall therefore offer all PER's established staff the option of accepting voluntary secondment arrangements. When PER transfers to the private sector, staff who have opted for these arrangements will remain in the business as civil servants on secondment for a limited period on favourable terms. Staff who do not opt for voluntary secondment will be redeployed within the Department of Employment group prior to privatisation.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the current estimates and projections of the population of working age of (a) men aged 16 to 64 years and (b) women aged 16 to 59 years, by standard region including Greater London for 1979, 1983, 1986, 1987 and 1988.

Mr. Lee [pursuant to his rely, 23 February 1988, c. 86]: I regret to say that an error has been discovered in some of the information which was supplied to my Department for use in my earlier reply. The figures affected are the estimates of the population of working age in Greater London. The correct figures are:

Greater London

	Thousands
Men aged 16 to 64 years
1979	2,183
1983	2,185
1986	2,203
Women aged 16 to 59 years

1983	2,026
1986	2,052

SCOTLAND

Firearms Certificate

Mr. Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will issue guidance to chief constables to the effect that no alterations to firearms certificate should be made as a matter of general policy until such time as the Firearms Bill has been enacted and the compensation measures contained therein have been agreed by Parliament; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: No. Under the Firearms Act 1968, the chief constable has a duty to satisfy himself that an applicant for the issue or renewal of a firearm certificate has a good reason for having in his possession, or for purchasing or acquiring, the firearm or ammunition in respect of which application is made, and can be permitted to have it in his possession without danger to the public safety or to the peace. A person aggrieved by the refusal of a chief constable to grant or renew a certificate may appeal to the sheriff.

Family Planning Services

Mr. McTaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the future level of provision of family planning services in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: It is for individual health boards to determine, within the resources available to them, the most appropriate pattern of provision of family planning services in their respective areas.

Abortions

Mr. McTaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many abortions were carried out in the Strathclyde region for each of the last five years, broken down by (a) age of women and (b) period of gestation.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information is given in the table.

Abortions in Strathclyde region 1982-86

Amniocentesis Tests

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his estimate of the number of amniocentesis tests undertaken in Scotland, for the most recent years for which the information is available.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I regret that the information requested is not held centrally.

Spent Fuel Reprocessing

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if there will be any requirement on the Scottish power industry to renegotiate after privatisation the contracts with British Nuclear Fuels plc for spent fuel reprocessing.

Mr. Lang: No.

Electricity Privatisation

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what requirements will be laid upon the Scottish electricity companies to participate in United Kingdom Nirex Ltd. under privatisation plans.

Mr. Lang: Details have yet to be considered, but present expectations are that the SSEB's shareholding in United Kingdom Nirex Ltd. will pass to the successor operator of SSEB nuclear power stations.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what consideration he has given to the present underwriting arrangements in respect of a major incident at a nuclear power plant in his preparation of plans for privatising the electricity supply industry.

Mr. Lang: Arrangements under the Nuclear Installations Act 1965 will continue after privatisation.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what valuation will be put on (a) unreprocessed spent nuclear fuel, (b) uranium arisings, (c) plutonium arisings, and (d) nuclear waste arisings from South of Scotland Electricity Board nuclear fuel reprocessed at Sellafield, under privatisation;

(2) what valuation will be put on low and intermediate level nuclear wastes at South of Scotland Electricity Board plants under privatisation.

Mr. Lang: It is too early to say what the valuation of these materials will be at the time of the privatisation of the electricity supply industry.

Hip Replacement Operations

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the average waiting time for a hip replacement operation using private beds in National Health Service hospitals in each health board area.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 8 March 1988]: The information requested is given in the table. Figures are for 1985 (which is the latest year for which information is available) and for the four health board areas in which hip replacements are carried out on private patients in National Health Service hospitals.

Glasgow Royal Infirmary

Mr. McTaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland which departments of Glasgow Royal infirmary are currently issuing letters to general practitioners stating that patients cannot be given out-patient appointments due to lack of medical staff; how many of these letters have so far been issued; and if he will make a statement on the effects of these shortages on patient care.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 3 March 1988]: In my reply of 24 February, I explained to the hon. Member the temporary difficulties being faced by the ophthalmology department at the Glasgow Royal infirmary. During this period about 180 letters were sent to general practitioners. As I indicated in my earlier reply the Greater Glasgow health board had taken steps to overcome the difficulties at the Department. I regret the inconvenience caused to the patients concerned.

Operations

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if, for 24 February, he will give the total number of operations postponed in Scottish hospitals, the number in each health board and the number in each specialty in each health board;

(2) if he will give the total number of operations performed in Scottish hospitals on 24 February, the number in each health board and the number in each specialty in each health board.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 3 March 1988]: Health boards report that 792 operations were performed in Scottish hospitals on 24 February and that 818 were postponed because of industrial action on that day. (The latter figure differs from that given in reply to my hon. and learned Friend the Member for Perth and Kinross (Mr. Fairbairn) on 1 March because Argyll and Clyde health board's return erroneously included 80 operations which were in fact lost on other days; the remaining small difference is due to health boards revising their preliminary estimates.) Operations were postponed in seven out of the 15 health boards. Details are given in the tables.

ENVIRONMENT

Rating Reform

74. Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimate he has made of the effect on industry in the north-west of the proposed uniform business rate.

Mr. Howard: Had the unified business rate been implemented in 1987-88 it could have saved businesses in the north-west £180 million, 18 per cent. of their present rate bills. These savings would be in addition to the further benefits which the 1990 revaluation is expected to bring to the region. Overall these changes should provide a major boost to the economy of the north-west. The future index-linking of rate increases to no more than the rate of inflation will ensure that this is a continuing benefit. These benefits for businesses would not be at the expense of community charge payers. The new grant arrangements we propose, together with the distribution of the national non-domestic rate income, would have allowed all authorities to provide a standard level of service at the same level of community charge, £178 in 1987-88.

Departmental Staff

95. Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many members of staff within his Department are located within each region outside London; what percentage this constitutes of staff within his Department; and what were the comparable figures, in absolute and percentage terms in 1979.

Mr. Ridley: The following tables show the numbers of staff in my Department located within each of the Department of the Environment and Property Service Agency regional areas[1] outside the London regional area at 1 February 1988, together with the percentages which those numbers represent of my total staff:

Region	Number	Per cent.
Department of the Environment
East	912	2·8
East Midlands	104	0·3
North	112	0·3

There were 3,253 (6·3 per cent.) staff in Scotland, 1,995 (3·7 per cent.) in Wales and 802 (1·6 per cent.) abroad.

[1] The joint Department of the Environment/Department of Transport regions and the PSA regions cover different areas.

These figures cannot be compared directly with those for 1988 as there have been major organisational changes since 1979 including privatisation and hiving-off of functions.

Council House Sales

Mr. Leigh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the number of council homes sold in the East and West Lindsey district council areas; and how many applications to buy are currently being processed.

Mrs. Roe: The numbers of sales from April 1979 to September 1987 reported by each English local authority appear in the table placed in the Library on 2 March 1988 in reply to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Banbury (Mr. Baldry). East Lindsey has reported a further 45 sales in the quarter ended December 1987. East Lindsey is currently processing 222 applications for the right to buy and West Lindsey 131.

Inner City Regeneration

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what his Department has spent since 1979 on grants to private sector companies to aid inner city regeneration.

Mr. Trippier: Expenditure by my Department on grants to private sector companies to aid inner city regeneration totals approximately £150 million since 1979.

Inner Area Programme

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what consultation procedures his Department recommends prior to inner area programme proposals being approved by local authorities.

Mr. Trippier: The ministerial guidelines for the urban programme suggest that the local private sector and local voluntary sector should be consulted on the scope and content of inner area programmes (IAPs). The IAP strategy statement should give an account of the consultation. The form of consultation procedures is a matter for the local authority's discretion.

Water Authorities

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he last met the chairmen of water authorities in England and Wales; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Moynihan: Pursuant to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State on 11 February to the hon. Member for Caernarfon (Mr. Wigley) at column 298, I have also met the chairman of the Water Authorities Association and two of his fellow chairmen on 24 February to discuss a range of issues relating to the privatisation of the water authorities.

Housing Defects Legislation

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any proposals to introduce legislation to amend the rules in the housing defects legislation, which determine whether eligible owners receive reinstatement grant or repurchase; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: We have been consulting local authority associations, home owners groups and other interested bodies on the suggestion that "test d" of section 538(1) of the Housing Act 1985 be dropped. That test requires an authority to repurchase if the direct cost of that is any less than the alternative cost of housing defects grant.

In the light of consultees' responses, which generally supported the change, I have decided that "test d" should be removed from section 538(1) and we will shortly be laying an appropriate order before Parliament to achieve that. The order must be affirmed by resolution of both Houses, but I hope that it will be possible to have it in operation by June. This change will not affect the Act's other "value for money" test which will continue to require an authority to satisfy itself that reinstatement is justified, having regard to the likely freehold value of the property after repair.

Removal of "test d" will give local authorities and home owners some welcome additional flexibility. As things stand, owners have to have their homes repurchased, even where they and the authority would prefer repair, whenever the cost of repair would exceed that of repurchase, even when the margin is very narrow. This change will allow repair where there is agreement this makes sense and is in accordance with the Act's other value-for-money test ("c").

Section 538(4) of the Act provides that such an order does not affect an application for assistance made before the order comes into force. However it is open to owners, if they choose, to withdraw their existing applications and then submit fresh ones, if they wish to take advantage of this change. Owners who are interested in this may therefore wish to discuss the position with their local authority.

European Regional Development Fund

Mr. Burt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give details of the annual European regional development fund infrastructure grant available for national programmes and integrated development operations applications in the north-west region; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: In co-operation with the local authorities and other public bodies, the Government will be submitting to the European Commission applications for the north-west region. These are being prepared in the expectation that ERDF aid of up to £60 million annually will be available for such programmes in that region. On this basis the Merseyside integrated development operation, the Manchester-Salford-Trafford integrated development operation and the Mersey basin II national programmes will be seeking an average annual ERDF grant of £25 million, £20 million and £15 million respectively. In addition, authorities may continue to submit separately applications for infrastucture projects which are not included in the programmes.

Those figures compare favourably with total ERDF grants of £51·6 million committed to the region in 1987, of which £19·8 million was for local authorities. Decisions on actual grant awards are, of course, made by the European Commission.

Local Authorities (Receipts)

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish the information he has collected on the accumulated capital receipts held by local authorities at the end of 1986-87.

Mr. Ridley: My Department has now received accumulated capital receipts returns for 1986-87 from 97 per cent. of English local authorities. On the basis of these it is estimated that at the end of 1986-87 local authorities in England held accumulated receipts giving rise to spending permission in later years of £9·4 billion. Some of these receipts were notional, such as leasing disposals. The cash from much of the remainder had been used for such purposes as repaying debt and financing capitalised housing repairs. After allowing for such factors, only £5·3 billion out of the £9·4 billion spending permission could be converted to cash.

I have today placed in the Library, a table showing for each local authority which has provided a return (a) the accumulated receipts giving rise to spending permission and (b) the amount which could be converted into cash.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Anglo-Irish Agreement

Mr. McCusker: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many views and proposals on the role and composition of bodies appointed by him or by departments subject to his direction and control have been received from the Government of the Irish Republic under article 6 of the Anglo-Irish Agreement; how many recommendations for appointments have been put forward; how many offers or approaches have been made; and how many such offers have been accepted.

Mr. Tom King: There have been several discussions through the Intergovernmental Conference about the role of a number of public bodies in Northern Ireland. The Irish side has to date suggested 39 people who might be considered for public appointments in Northern Ireland; these names include 19 people who were already on the central appointments unit's list; 12 people suggested by the Irish currently hold a total of 20 public appointments.

Property Compensation

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how the sum of £50 is arrived at as an offer of compensation based on site value in an area scheduled for redevelopment, for a property yielding £16 per week rental income; and if he will re-examine the level of compensation currently offered in respect of some properties in Agnes street, Carrickfergus.

Mr. Needham: The redevelopment area referred to was vested under the Local Government Act (Northern Ireland) 1972 and the Housing (Northern Ireland) Order 1981.

The housing order directs that when assessing compensation on the acquisition of a house, classified as unfit for human habitation and incapable of being rendered fit at reasonable expense, then the value to be ascertained is the site value on the assumption that all buildings are removed and available for redevelopment within the building byelaws in force at the date of vesting. In these circumstances, the structure on the site and the rental income generated from that structure are not relevant.

The £50 offer of compensation represented an assessment of the value of a small site in Carrickfergus at 3 July 1986 (the operative date of the vesting order).

A claimant in any case is under no obligation to accept when he believes the compensation offered is unrealistic. Recourse may be made to the Lands Tribunal for Northern Ireland.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will introduce amending legislation to ensure that owners of properties denied access to home improvement grants for a prolonged period because of pending proposals for redevelopment by the Northern Ireland Housing Executive will receive fair compensation for property acquired through voluntary negotiation or after a vesting order.

Mr. Needham: Compensation for property acquired by the Housing Executive is governed by current values in an open market determined on the basis of either the value of the houses or of the sites cleared of all buildings as appropriate under the Housing (Northern Ireland) Order 1981. Consideration is being given to amending legislation which would abolish the site value rule in article 91(1) of the 1981 order.

NI 2000

Sir John Biggs-Davison: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will undertake to place before Parliament the progress reports that he will receive from the chairman of NI 2000.

Mr. Viggers: No, not as a matter of course.

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many subject access requests under the terms of the Data Protection Act his Department has received; what was his estimate of this number; whether he is reconsidering the subject access fee charged by his Department as a result; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Viggers: The Northern Ireland Office and the Northern Ireland Departments have received a total of 20 subject access requests. The estimate for the first year was 3,800 requests. Subject access fees have not been reconsidered.

ACE Funding

Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what consideration he has given to the proposals put forward by the Northern Ireland committee of the Irish Congress of Trade Unions on new procedures to deal with the withdrawal of ACE funding from organisations on grounds of security; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Viggers: I have considered carefully the proposals put forward by the Northern Ireland committee of the Irish Congress of Trade Unions but I am satisfied that for security reasons it would not be possible to adopt them.

Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what consideration he has given to adopting new procedures, which will include the right of reply, when decisions are being made on the possible withdrawal of ACE funding from organisations on grounds of security; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Viggers: I am satisfied that the current arrangements are appropriate in these cases and have no plans to change them. Where funding is withdrawn the organisation concerned is advised that the action taken is in accordance with the Government's stated policy. Representations can be made to the Government by aggrieved bodies and these are considered in light of the circumstances in each case.

Free School Meals

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether free school meals will be available to the children of those receiving family income supplement on 11 April; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: As family income supplement ends on Sunday 10 April 1988 and family credit will be introduced from Monday 11 April 1988, free school meals will not be available to these children on 11 April 1988. To ensure, however, that families do not lose out at this time a transitional payment of family credit, which includes an amount for school meals, will be made on 12 April 1988. This will be in addition to a second payment, covering the period from 12 April to 18 April, which will be paid on Tuesday 19 April 1988.

RUC (Chief Constable)

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the official engagements for 19 May 1986 of Sir John Hermon, Chief Constable of the Royal Ulster Constabulary.

Mr. Tom King: The Chief Constable's arrangements are matters for him.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether the Chief Constable of the Royal Ulster Constabulary, Sir John Hermon, was in touch by telephone at any time on 19 May 1986 with Mr. James Anderton, chief constable of Manchester, or any of the other senior police officers meeting at the Royal hotel, Scarborough, on that date; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tom King: I have no knowledge of such matters.

Public Bodies

Mr. McCusker: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he will answer the question from the hon. Member for Upper Bann which was tabled for answer on 18 February relating to the composition and membership of public bodies in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Tom King: Today.

Libya (Exports)

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make it his policy to seek to end exports from the United Kingdom to Libya, in view of the recent arms discoveries in Northern Ireland believed to have originated in Libya.

Mr. Mellor: I have been asked to reply.

No. We do not operate economic sanctions against Libya, and British firms remain free to use their own judgment on whether to trade with Libya. We do not, however, actively promote trade with Libya. Nor is there any question of the Government issuing licences for defence exports to Libya or of resuming diplomatic relations whilst Libyan involvement in terrorist activity and support for the IRA continues.

Terrorism

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assistance has been given by the Government of France in establishing the quantity of illegal arms shipped to Irish Republican terrorists.

Mr. Mellor: I have been asked to reply.

There has been full co-operation between the French Government and ourselves on all aspects of the Eksund case. As the matter is now the subject of French judicial proceedings, it would be inappropriate for me to comment further.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will indicate the type and calibre of firearms most commonly used by the Irish Republican

Army in attacks on the security forces and the type and calibres of the firearms most commonly used to assassinate members of the security forces when off duty.

Mr. Tom King: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Minister of State on 7 March 1988, at columns 73-74.

Driving Licences

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what information he has as to how many persons resident in Northern Ireland have obtained a Great Britain driving licence by submitting an accommodation address in England, Scotland or Wales at which they can be contacted in each of the last three years.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I have been asked to reply. This information is not available.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if Northern Ireland residents who have had a Northern Ireland driving licence revoked can obtain a driving licence in Great Britain without disclosing details regarding the loss of a Northern Ireland driving licence.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I have been asked to reply. A Northern Ireland licence holder could not obtain a full British driving licence in these circumstances.

Social Fund

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement outlining the staffing arrangements for the social fund, indicating the numbers and grades or titles of officers at each social security office, with an outline of their respective roles.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 8 March 1988]: The arrangements are currently being finalised but broadly speaking, staff engaged on single payments work will be allocated to social fund work from April 1988. Work to determine the mix of grades and the distribution of these staff to each social security office is under way. Job descriptions have been agreed with the departmental trade union side but further discussions are needed on the specific grades and numbers.

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will describe the procedures for appealing or requesting a review of a decision by a social fund officer; what provisions have now been made for such procedures; and what requirements, rights or other factors must be considered in reviewing a decision by a social fund officer.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 8 March 1988]: The procedure for making applications for review of determinations by social fund officers is set out in the Social Fund (Application for Review) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 1988 (SR1988 No. 20) which comes into operation on 11 April 1988. Briefly, the application must be made in writing within 28 days of the decision having been issued and the reason for the application must be stated.

Applications for review will be considered within the social security office by the social fund officer who made the original decision and by a senior officer. If the applicant remains dissatisfied the decision will be reviewed by a social fund inspector who will operate independently from the social security office.

In reviewing a decision a social fund officer must have full regard to all the circumstances which existed at the time of the original decision together with any new evidence or relevant change of circumstances.

Royal Ulster Constabulary

Mr. Mallie: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) how many serving members of the Royal Ulster Constabulary have been charged with murder or manslaughter since 1969;

(2) how many serving members of the Royal Ulster Constabulary have been convicted of murder or manslaughter since 1969, giving the name and date in each case.

Mr. Tom King [holding answers 29 February 1988]: Statistics prior to 1977 are not readily available. Since 1977 four serving members of the Royal Ulster Constabulary have been charged with murder and two with manslaughter. One officer has been convicted of manslaughter. It is not the practice to disclose details of individual cases.

Firearms

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many firearms and of what types have been (a) stolen and (b) recovered from (i) the Regular Army, (ii) the Ulster Defence Regiment, (iii) the Royal Ulster Constabulary and (iv) the Royal Ulster Constabulary Reserve in Northern Ireland in each of the last five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Tom King [holding answer 26 February 1988]: The information is as follows:

SOCIAL SERVICES

NHS Pay

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will list in the Official Report, the percentage increases in average pay levels, in (i) cash terms and (ii) real terms for (a) doctors, (b) nurses and midwives, (c) ancillary staff, (d) administrative and clerical staff and (e) professions allied to medicine, over the periods (1) 1974 to the latest year for which figures are available, (2) 1979 to the latest year and (3) 1980 to the latest year;

(2) what have been the percentage increases in National Health Service staff pay levels for the following groups (a) doctors and dentists, (b) nurses, midwives and health visitors, (c) professions allied to medicine, (d) administrative and clerical staff, and (e) ancillary staff, since (i) 1979-80, and (ii) 1980-81, up to the latest year for which figures are available; and what have been the increases in the retail price index over the same periods.

Mr. Newton: Comparable information about average pay levels over the periods requested is not available. The table gives details of increases in rates of pay. The extent by which basic rates are enhanced by additional earnings varies between staff groups and is substantial in the case of ancillary staff.

Percentages

Period	Staff group Nurses and Midwives	Doctors and Dentists	Professions allied to medicine	Ancillary staff	Administrative and clerical
1974 to 1987
Cumulative average settlement	272·6	317·8	n/a	240·0	250·2
Cumulative change in retail price index	266·1	266·1	n/a	266·1	266·1

Cumulative change in retail price index	49·9	49·9	49·9	49·9	49·9
Real terms increase	9·4	8·5	13·3	(3·0)	(4·6)

Notes:
1. The period covered is from 1 August of each base year to 31 July 1987.
2. The cumulative change in the retail prices index is that from July of the base year to July 1987.
3. The real terms increase is the cumulative average settlement deflated by the increase in the retail prices index over the period.
4. Figures in brackets indicate real terms reductions.
n/a = not available.

Dental Services (Disciplinary Cases)

Mr. Radice: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what were the numbers of disciplinary cases concerning dental services in the years 1982 to 1986 in relation to (a) the number resolved without an oral hearing, (b) the number resolved with an oral hearing, (c) the number, after an oral hearing, where the contractor was found to be in breach of his terms of service and (d) the number where a withholding resulted, together with the average size of the withholding.

Mrs. Currie: Information about the investigation of complaints concerning the family practitioners is not available centrally in the form requested.

In the years 1982-86, the following cases were completed in respect of the dental practitioner services:

	1982	1983	1984	1985	1986
Disciplinary action—
Cases investigated	303	323	421	651	599
Breach found	114	118	196	343	298

It is not possible, from centrally held information, to calculate an average level of withholding concerning all cases. During the period in question the following range of withholdings was applied:

	1982	1983	1984	1985
Decision to withhold remuneration	91	80	145	255
Amount withheld—
Less than £100	40	28	40	69
£100-£249	14	13	31	26
£250 and over	37	39	74	160

In 1986 the form of presentation changed. The figures are:

	Number
Under £500	124
£500-£999	49
£1,000-£1,999	39
£2,000 and over	8

Nurses (Pay)

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how nurses' pay has altered in real terms (a) between 1974 and 1979, (b) between 1979 and 1984 and (c) since the pay review body was set up in 1984.

Mr. Newton: The information requested is as follows:

Pay-round Years (1 August-31 July)	Percentage movement in real terms pay[1]
1974-75—1978-79	−2·1
1979-80—1983-84	+1·5
1983-84—1986-87	+1·6

[1] Percentage movements in real terms pay reflect the percentage cash increase/decrease for the pay round year deflated by the increase in the retail prices index throughout the pay round year.

National Health Service Pay

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) on what basis his Department has not in the past eight years fully funded pay awards in the National Health Service:

(2) what proportion of pay awards to nurses have been met through extra central Government funding for each of the last five years; and what studies have been made and what steps taken by his Department over that period to ensure that the difference between each pay award and the Government allocation for that purpose could be made up without detriment to levels of patient care.

Mr. Newton: Prior to 1982-83 health authorities were funded on a system of volume planning and funds were provided by the Government to meet increases in expenditure. Since then authorities have operated under the cash planning system and are expected to meet all expenditure within the total resources available to them. Nevertheless in three of the last four years we have provided additional funds to help authorities meet the cost of review body awards.

Neither initial allocations nor (except in 1984-85) additional funding was earmarked specifically for the pay of individual staff groups such as nurses. The following proportions are a notional assessment based on the nurses' percentage share of the cost of review body awards and relate to the period since the inception of the nurses review body.

Proportion of cost of nurses' pay award in:

	Initial allocation per cent.	Additional funding per cent.	Total per cent.
1984-85	39·5	46·5	86·1
1985-86	80·4	—	80·4
1986-87	77·1	17·7	94·9
1987-88	39·4	54·1	93·5

Totals do not sum due to rounding.

Although no specific studies of the type described have been undertaken, health authorities are aware of the need to plan flexibly to meet any pay and price pressures that arise and of the additional revenue available to them as a result of savings released by their cost improvement programmes.

Trent RHA

Mr. Alexander: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what were the costs to public funds of the administration of Trent regional health authority in each year since 1982.

Mr. Newton: Following is the information derived from the annual accounts of the health authorities comprising the Trent region.

It would be misleading to interpret a regional health authority's data in isolation from that of the districts it manages. Regions are managed in an integrated way and, therefore, to provide a more accurate picture, regional health authority and district health authority figures should be combined.

Expenditure on headquarters administration

	Trent regional health authority £000	District health authorities £000	Region total £000
1982-83	5,327	26,355	31,682
1983-84	7,773	23,646	31,419
1984-85	8,358	24,484	32,842
1985-86	8,884	21,786	30,670
1986-87	10,683	22,847	33,530

Notes:

1. Expenditure on headquarters administration includes all current expenditure on the pay and pay related costs of staff of all disciplines (including general managers) employed at headquarters levels and their office costs and overheads. It excludes the cost of clerical and secretarial support staff employed in departments at hospital and unit levels: such costs are regarded as operational.

2. Prior to 1 April 1985 many of the district health authorities had an associated family practitioner committee (FPC) and those authorities' expenditure for the years before that date includes elements relating to FPCs' administrative expenses which are not separately identifiable.

Hip Replacement Operations

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will estimate for each district health authority within Greater London (a) the current length of time an individual would be expected to wait for a hip replacement operation and (b) the number of individuals currently waiting for a hip replacement operation who have been on the waiting list for (i) up to one year, (ii) between one and two years, (iii) between two and three years, (iv) between three and four years and (v) over four years.

Mr. Newton: None of the information requested is available centrally. Information on in-patient waiting lists is collected by specialty of treatment and not by intended method of treatment-operation. A one in 10 sample of hospital discharge records provide data about the waiting experience of patients who have been treated, but at district level the sample is too small to provide reliable estimates for hip replacement operations.

Regional information for 1985—the latest year for which data are held centrally—is given in the table.

Hospital Waiting Lists

Mr. Robert B. Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services by how much National Health Service waiting lists have changed between 1979 and 1987 in (a) the North West Thames regional health authority and (b) the North West Hertfordshire district health authority.

Mr. Newton: The in-patient waiting list for North West Thames regional health authority has decreased by 9·3 per cent. from 48,503 to 44,007 between 31 March 1979 and 31 March 1987. The in-patient waiting list for North West Hertfordshire district health authority has also decreased over the same period, from 2,743 to 1,544, a fall of 43·7 per cent.

Dr. Owen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the average waiting time for each specialty by regional health authority and the average for England, Wales and Scotland, respectively.

Mr. Newton: The table shows the median interval between the date an in-patient was placed on the waiting list and the date of admission (estimated centrally using a 10 per cent. sample of anonymised hospital records) for those specialties where most of the sample numbers were large enough to give reliable estimates at regional level.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what are the hospital waiting list figures for England and by English health regions for September 1987.

Mr. Newton: The September waiting list figures are being compiled now and will be published as soon as possible.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give the hospital waiting list figures by specialty for the Nottingham district health authority and the Trent region, for the latest available date.

Mr. Newton: The latest available information about NHS waiting lists is contained in the summary booklet, "Hospital in-patient waiting list—England at 31 March 1987," a copy of which is in the Library.

NHS Administrators

Mr. Conway To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how many administrators were employed in the National Health Service at district health authority level in 1978-79 and 1986-87;

(2) how many administrators were employed in the National Health Service at regional health authority level in 1978-79 and 1986-87.

Mr. Newton: It is not possible readily to distinguish, from staff engaged on administrative and clerical work in the National Health Service, those solely engaged as administrators. The table provides figures for administrative and clerical staff in the respective years:

Administrative and Clerical Staff in Post at Regional Health Authority Level and at District Health Authority Level in England at 30 September.

	Whole-time equivalents [1]
	Regional Health Authority Level	District Health Authority Level
1978	7,500	84,900
1986	7,800	95,500

Source: DHSS Annual Census of NHS Non-Medical Manpower

[1] Figures are rounded to the nearest one hundred (100) whole-time equivalents.

[2] 1978 figures include staff at area health authority level whose functions were devolved to district health authorities as a result of the 1982 reorganisation.

AIDS

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what evidence he has of improved practice in the general population following the AIDS advertising campaign.

Mr. Newton: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to him on 22 February at column 34.

Community Nurses

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will take steps fully to integrate community nurses into the primary health care team.

Mr. Newton: It is for health authorities to determine the organisation and management structure of community nursing services. However, we have long encouraged the development of primary health care teams, in which community nurses are an integral part, and gave fresh endorsement to the team approach in a guidance circular (HC(87)29/HC(FP)(87)10) issued to health authorities and family practitioner committees in November.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects the drugs Ampligen and Imuthiol (DTC) to become available for the treatment of AIDS patients in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Newton: I am not able to say whether these products are likely to become licensed for use in this country. So far no application for a product licence or clinical trial has been received. It should be noted, however, that medical practitioners have the right to import and prescribe medicines for their individual patients even if the product is not licensed for use in this country.

Consultants (Private Practice)

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many National Health Service consultants supplement their income through private practice in the Northern regional health authority area.

Mr. Newton: This information is not available. The hon. Member may wish to write to the chairman of Northern regional health authority for information on the types of contract held by the consultants in its employment.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what are the additional resources that are being made available to the South East Thames regional health authority and the South East Kent health authority in order to finance training and other costs already incurred and likely to occur in connection with ensuring that emergencies and casualties that may arise during the construction and future operation of the Channel tunnel are adequately provided for.

Mr. Newton: In the main the Department does not identify funds for specific purposes. Resource allocations to regions are aimed at securing progress, over time, towards targets which take account of, amongst other things, change in the size and composition of the population served, the relative health care needs of the region and patient flows between regions.

The allocation of resources to districts is a matter for regions. It is for regions and districts to determine, within a national framework of health care priorities, and in the light of local needs and circumstances, how all their resources can best be used.

Foetuses and Foetal Material

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how many nursing homes have his approval to supply foetuses or foetal material to institutions and organisations; and if he will list the purposes for which the foetuses or foetal material are required;

(2) what forms of final disposal of foetuses or foetal material are used by institutions and organisations supplied by nursing homes; and what systems or checks his Department has for ensuring that disposal is done in an approved manner;

(3) how many National Health Service hospitals supply foetuses or foetal material to institutions and organisations; and if he will list the purposes for which the foetuses or foetal material is used;

(4) what forms of final disposal of foetuses or foetal material are used by institutions and organisations supplied by National Health Service hospitals; and what systems or checks his Department has for ensuring that disposal is done in an approved manner;

(5) what fees are charged by National Health Service hospitals or private nursing homes to institutions and organisations for the supply of foetal material and foetuses; and whether such fees are subject to the approval and monitoring of his Department;

(6) what arrangements are in operation for obtaining the consent of parents before the disposal of foetuses or foetal material to institutions and organisations by National Health Service hospitals and private nursing homes; and what steps his Department takes to ensure that such arrangements are followed.

Mr. Newton: The Department approves the arrangements for the supply of foetal material by nursing homes approved under the Abortion Act 1967. Arrangements for the supply of material by NHS hospitals are the responsibility of individual health authorities.

The use and disposal of human foetal material in this country is controlled in accordance with the code of practice recommended in the report of the advisory group on the use of foetuses and foetal material for research (Peel report 1972). The code of practice stipulates amongst other things that a precondition of research should be that there is no objection on the part of the parent and that there is no monetary exchange for foetuses or foetal material. In the private sector the Department satisfies itself that these requirements will be met before approval is granted.

Private sector places currently approved to supply foetal material are as follows:

Approved place and material supplied to	Purpose
Calthorpe Nursing Home
Birmingham Children's Hospital East Birmingham Hospital Birmingham Maternity Hospital	Research on chorionic villus sampling
Park View Clinic
Foetal Tissue Bank, Royal Marsden Hospital	Various projects on virology, immunology, oncology, biochemistry and molecular biology
Robert Nursing Home
Birmingham University Medical School	The study of genetics, umbilical vessels, comparative histology, cancer and foetal development

The final disposal of material is a matter for the receiving organisations themselves.

Medical Consultants

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he has any plans to review the basis on which medical consultants are employed by the National Health Service.

Mrs. Currie: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to the hon. Member for Nottingham, North (Mr. Allen) on 18 January 1988 at column 565.

Welfare of Children

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how much has been spent by social services departments under section 1 of the Child Care Act 1980.

Mr. Newton: The figures are given in the table.

Net current expenditure under Section 1 of the Child Care Act 1980 —England

Year	Cash (£ million)
1982-83	3·358
1983-84	4·184

Special Hospital Patients

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire of 16 February, Official Report, columns 555-56, he will list in the Official Report the length of time each of the patients listed has been waiting for transfer, in numbers of months.

Mr. Newton: The information is as follows:

[1] In the case of patients subject to restrictions under the Mental Health Act, the length of wait is calculated from the date on which the Home Secretary's consent to transfer was obtained. For unrestricted patients, the calculation is from the date on which a placement was agreed between the special hospital and the receiving hospital.

[2] The length of wait is calculated from the date on which the Mental Health Review Tribunal ordered the patient's discharge.

General Practitioners

Dr. Owen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many general practitioners there are per 10,000 of the population in (a) Greater London and (b) the rest of England.

Mr. Newton: At 1 October 1986 the numbers of general medical practitioners per 10,000 population in Greater London and the rest of England were 5·5 and 5·1 respectively.

Dr. Owen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will estimate the cost of training a family doctor.

Mr. Newton: About £110,000 comprising £40,000 for university costs of undergraduate medical education—as defined in my reply to the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras (Mr. Dobson) on 23 November 1987 at column 81—and a further £70,000 for the direct salary costs of doctors during their pre-registration year and three years vocational training for general practice. Since training is basically on-the-job there is an offsetting but unquantifiable value of the service contribution made by these doctors.

National Insurance

Mr. Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his estimated loss of revenue over the last three years for which figures were available arising from employers collecting national insurance contributions but failing to transfer the same to the Department; and whether he has any plans to tighten existing procedures in this respect.

Mr. Scott: Reliable estimates of these losses are not available. We have no plans to change the procedures outlined in my reply to the hon. Member for Tooting (Mr. Cox) on 2 February at column 576. However, these are kept under constant review.

Hypothermia

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how frequently hypothermia is cited as a cause of death; and to what extent the incidence of hypothermia is changing.

Mrs. Currie: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Gravesham (Mr. Arnold) on Tuesday 8 March 1988.

Severe Weather Payments

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any plans to alter the working of the arrangements for severe weather payments so far in the current winter.

Mr. Scott: There are no plans to amend the current scheme for exceptionally cold weather payments before it ends in April. The Social Security Bill currently before Parliament provides for payments in respect of cold weather to be made after this winter from the social fund. The details of the new scheme will be decided later this year.

Internal Examinations

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he has issued guidelines to hospitals to ensure that no internal examinations are conducted upon women under anaesthetic without their written consent; and if he will publish the guidelines.

Mrs. Currie: The Department's guidelines provide that an explanation of the nature and effect of an operation or investigation procedure under anaesthetic must be given to a patient and the patient's written consent obtained. Separate consent should be obtained if patients are to be involved in teaching of medical or other students. The guidelines were issued as circulars HM(73)8 as amended by HC(77)18, and DS30/71. Copies of the circulars are available in the Library.

Meningococcal Septicaemia

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many deaths over the last 10 years have been attributed to having meningococcal septicaemia.

Mrs. Currie: Before 1979, meningococcal septicaemia (ICD (8)[1] 036·1 Meningococcaemia without mention of meningitis) included Waterhouse-Friderichsen syndrome. Since 1979, meningococcaemia (ICD (9)[1] 036·2) and Waterhouse-Friderichsen syndrome, meningococcal (ICD (9)[1] 036·3) have been coded separately. The table therefore, shows both of these latter conditions from 1979.

[1] International Classification of Diseases 8th and 9th revisions.
[2] Provisional—
The 1987 figure for the number of notifications of acute and meningococcal meningitis is provisional as it is based on the notifications reported to OPCS each week. It does not include all late or corrected notifications, and is therefore liable to a small change at a later date.
The annual statistics should be compared with caution as (i) The 9th revision of the ICD was introduced on 1 January 1979.
(ii) A change in coding was introduced on 1 January 1984.
(iii) Figures for 1986 and 1987 exclude deaths in the first 28 days of life.

Out-patient Appointments

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what information he has as to the proportion of out-patient appointments that are not kept.

Mrs. Currie: I regret that this information is not held centrally.

Family Planning

Mr. Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what information he has about the comparative cost of providing family planning advice and services through (a) local health authorities and (b) general practitioners;

(2) if he will make a study of the comparative cost of providing family planning services through (a) general practitioners and (b) family planning clinics; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: We are aware of local studies which have questioned the cost-effectiveness of transferring family planning services from clinics to general practitioners but information collected centrally does not enable a study of comparative costs of the two complementary services to be made. It remains Government policy that people should be able to choose their source of family planning advice, and we have no present plans to commission such a study.

Amniocentesis Tests

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what is his estimate of the numbers of amniocentesis tests which were undertaken in England in the most recent year for which the information is available; and what information he has as to how many of these tests were followed by (a) an abortion, (b) a normal birth, (c) the birth of a disabled child and (d) a miscarriage;

(2) if he will list the routine statistics which are collected centrally by his Department concerning (a) amniocentesis techniques of foetal diagnosis, and (b) chorionic villus sampling techniques; and whether he has any plans for extending the statistical information gained by his Department in these areas.

Mrs. Currie: While information is routinely collected centrally on the number of amniocentesis and chorionic villus sampling operations performed in NHS hospitals on in-patients and day-cases, these procedures are normally carried out as out-patient procedures and no central data are available, although they may be held locally.

There are at present no plans to extend the collection of routine statistics to cover details of out-patient procedures.

Abortion notifications provide details of abortions conducted on the grounds of foetal abnormality but do not indicate what tests or other evidence have been used to make the diagnosis.

It is not possible to link individual cases from the two sets of information. Nor is it possible to link details of the operation with information relating to the subsequent birth of a child nor to a miscarriage unless this occurs within the same consultant episode

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his estimate of the proportion of women who are offered an amniocentesis test and take up such an offer.

Mrs. Currie: I regret that this information is not collected centrally.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services, if he will list those health authorities in England in which foetal diagnosis by amniocentesis and related techniques are available; and if he will indicate for each such area what age thresholds are applied for women with no apparent genetic risk for limiting the availability of amniocentesis.

Mrs. Currie: The information requested on foetal diagnosis by amniocentesis and related techniques can be produced only at a disproportionate cost. No information is held centrally on age thresholds for limiting amniocentesis to women with no apparent genetic risk.

Benefit Appeal Tribunals

Mr. Holt: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the average length of time appellants wait before attending an appeals tribunal for (a) mobility allowance and (b) attendance allowance.

Mr. Portillo: Social security appeal tribunals hear lay questions on mobility allowance and attendance allowance; medical appeal tribunals hear medical questions on mobility allowance and the Attendance Allowance Board reviews medical questions for attendance allowance. The national administrative statistics for social security appeal tribunals show that in Great Britain for the quarter ending 30 June 1987 (the latest available figures), the average time taken between the lodgement and hearing of an appeal is 19·1 weeks for mobility allowance and 30·5 weeks for attendance allowance. I regret that equivalent estimates are not available for medical appeal tribunal hearings or reviews by the Attendance Allowance Board.

Drug Tariff Products

Mr. John Townend: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services on what basis dispensers of drugs tariff medicines and products are reimbursed; and if he will make it his policy to claw back all discounts which effectively reduce the true cost of the drug tariff items to dispensers below the tariff reimbursement price, rather than introducing an averaging system.

Mr. Newton: Pharmacists are reimbursed monthly for the cost of the medicines and other products they dispense on the basis of either a price listed in the drug tariff or the manufacturer's list price. Apart from the payment for some medicines and other products on which no discount is available, a percentage is deducted from the monthly total of these prices in order to take account of the discounts which pharmacists can obtain. The level of discount obtained is established by periodic inquiries, agreed between the Department and the representatives of the profession, and reflected in a graduated discount scale published in the drug tariff. The same principle applies to payments made to dispensing doctors.

Reimbursement on the basis of actual prices paid, rather than through an averaging system, would remove the incentive to purchase as economically as is consistent with good dispensing practice and we have no plans for such a change.

Dental Charges

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many civil servants have been employed administering dental charges in each of the last four years.

Mrs. Currie: About 10 civil servants in the Department are regularly engaged in duties in connection with dental charges, including preparations of forecasts, estimates, legislation and guidance, and dealing with correspondence. None is wholly or mainly engaged in such duties.

Meningitis

Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) whether any evidence is available to his Department regarding a possible link between recent cases of meningitis and imported Greek yoghurt carrying the meningitis bacterium; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what tests have been conducted on imported Greek sheep's yoghurt to establish whether it contains meningitis-carrying bacteria; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: There is no evidence of a connection between meningococcal meningitis and the consumption of any particular foodstuff. Recent cases of meningitis have been mainly meningococcal meningitis, which is caused by a different organism from that which causes listeria meningitis. A recent case of listeria meningitis was associated with a cheese made in this country.

All imported food is subject to routine sampling by port health authorities. We have no evidence to associate imported Greek sheep's milk yoghurt with illness caused by the listeria organism, which is in any case unlikely to occur in an acidic product such as yoghurt.

Social Security Reform

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what proportions of those working families who are eligible for family credit are (a) tenants paying rent, (b) mortgagors, (c) outright owner-occupiers and (d) non-householders; and if he will illustrate the effect on net weekly spending power of introducing the reformed structure of income-related benefits for the following categories (i) a married couple with one earner and two children aged 13 and 16 years and (ii) a married couple with one earner and three children aged three, eight and 11 years, assuming, where appropriate, that the families (A) pay average local authority rent and rates, (B) have a £13,000 outstanding mortgage and pay appropriate weekly mortgage interest, (C) own their own home outright and pay average local authority rates and (D) are non-householders and pay no rent, mortgage interest, or rates, in each example showing both current and post-reform net weekly spending power, and any change between the two, for earnings ranging from £70 to £200 in £10 steps.

Mr. Portillo: The tenure composition of the family credit eligible population is as shown:

Family credit eligible population tenure

	Per cent.
Rent paying tenants	50
Mortgagors	38
Outright owners	8
Non-Householders	4
Total	100

The information on net weekly spending power is provided in the tables. Overall two thirds of family credit recipients are expected to gain or be unaffected.

Notes to tables:
1. All main assumptions as in "Impact of the Reformed Structure of Income Related Benefits", October 1987, copies of which are held in the Library.
2. Net weekly spending power is defined after payment of income tax and national insurance, receipt of benefits, payment of net housing costs and work-related expenses (travel costs).
3. Average weekly local authority rents for these family types are assumed to be £19·12, local authority rates £8·02, water rates £1·78. A £13,000 mortgage is assumed to imply a net (after tax) mortgage interest payment of £18·87 per week.

NHS (Administrative Costs)

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the proportion of administrative costs within the National Health Service as a proportion of current costs in (a) 1978, (b) 1979 and (c) the latest available year.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the total cost of the administration of the National Health Service in each of the last seven years; if he will express this as a percentage of the total annual cost of the National Health Service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton [holding answer 14 January 1988]: Following is information, covering both hospital and community health services and family practitioner services, derived from annual accounts submitted to the Department:

(i) regional and district health authorities and the special health authorities for the London postgraduate teaching hospitals. (Predecessor authorities for the years prior to 1982-83.)
(ii) family practitioners committees.
(iii) the Dental Estimates Board and the Prescription Pricing Authority.

Notes:
1. Expenditure on headquarters administration includes all current expenditure on the pay and pay related costs of staff of all disciplines (including general managers) employed at headquarters levels and their office costs and overheads. It excludes the cost of clerical and secretarial support staff employed in departments at hospital and unit levels: such costs are regarded as operational.
2. The table includes the total expenses of the Dental Estimates board and the Prescription Pricing Authority which are regarded as wholly administrative. Expenditure by other bodies and special health authorities providing central services to the National Health Service (eg. the Central Blood Laboratories Authority) and expenditure met centrally by the Department is excluded.

"Regional Health Authorities (Expenditure)

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will itemise in cash terms the amount spent by each regional health authority on administration in 1979, 1980, 1981, 1982, 1983, 1984, 1985, and 1986."

Mr. Newton [holding answer 7 December 1987]: Tables showing each health authority's expenditure on headquarters administration for the years requested have been placed in the Library.

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will give per capita spending on health and personal social services in cash terms and at 1987-88 prices for each year since 1979 to the latest available date for (a) all ages, (b) up to four years, (c) five to 15 years, (d) 16 to 64 years, (e) 65 to 74 years and (f) 75 years and over, giving the amount spent on (i) hospital and community services, (ii) family practitioner services, (iii) personal social services and (iv) total in England;

Mr. Newton [holding answer 18 February 1988]: Estimates of gross current expenditure per head of population on health and personal social services, in cash and at 1987-88 prices, for each year between 1979-80 and 1985-86, the latest year for which these estimates are available are given in the table.

These figures are derived through successive estimations starting with the Department's programme budget analysis, details of which are provided annually to the Social Services Committee and are published by the Committee in minutes of evidence associated with its report on public expenditure on the social services 1987 (HC 413). Expenditure on each of the services identified is then apportioned to different age groups from data on the use of services derived from a variety of sources. Due to these changes in sources and definitions data for the earliest years may not be fully consistent with those for later years.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services why he will not publish figures for Greater London as a whole, for Health Service expenditure in real terms, using the National Health Service pay and prices deflator.

Mr. Newton: The composition of an individual health authority's expenditure, or that of a group of health authorities in a particular metropolitan area, can differ significantly from the national average. It is therefore not appropriate to revalue such expenditure by reference to centrally assessed movements in pay and prices.

Prescriptions

Dr. Owen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list for each year since 1975 the net ingredient cost per prescription given.

Mr. Newton: The average net ingredient cost of prescriptions dispensed in England for each year from 1975 to 1986 (the latest year available) is as follows:

Average Net Ingredient Cost per Prescription

1975	0·94
1976	1·17
1977	1·47
1978	1·69
1979	1·94

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) why two prescription charges are made for a single course of Cyclo-Progynova tablets;

(2) if he will list all single course treatment where more than one prescription charge is made;

(3) what are the purposes for which a course of Cyclo-Progynova are prescribed;

(4) if he will list those courses of treatment which are similar in purpose or similar in content to Cyclo-Progynova; and in each case what prescription charge or charges are levied;

(5) who are the manufacturers of Cyclo-Progynova tablets; and what similar courses of treatment they provide which are available to National Health Service patients;

(6) what revenue has accrued to the National Health Service from Cyclo-Progynova tablets and other courses of treatment respectively for which dual prescription charges are levied in the last full year for which figures are available.

Mr. Harry Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement about the practice of applying a double prescription charge for Cyclo-Progynova used in the treatment of cancer in women.

Mr. Newton [holding answers 26 February and 4 March 1988]: A prescription charge is payable in respect of each quantity of a drug dispensed. Therefore, where more than one drug is required for a patient's treatment, more than one charge is payable, unless the patient is exempt.

Packs of cyclo-progynova, which is licensed for the treatment of menopausal conditions, and for which the licence holder is Schering Health Care Ltd., contain two separate drugs. More details of the product and its uses may be found in the ABPI Data Sheet Compendium, a copy of which is in the Library. A comprehensive list of every other licensed product of similar purpose or similar content cannot be produced without disproportionate cost, but a list of the more widely used products of this nature may be found in the British National Formulary, which is also in the Library.

I regret that information on the revenue from charges for cyclo-progynova is not available, nor is it possible to say how many courses of treatment result in more than one prescription charge.

Housing Benefit and Rent Rebates

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what were the numbers of people claiming (i) housing benefit and (ii) rent rebates, listing separately (a) standard, (b) certificated and (c) supplement, for each year from 1984 to 1987, for each district council and regional council area in Scotland.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 26 February 1988]: The available information has now been placed in the Library. The figures represent estimated numbers of benefit recipients in each authority. The number of unsuccessful claims is not available.

EC (Health Care Expenditure)

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing health care expenditure per head in each of the European Economic Community countries, expressed in the common purchasing power standard.

Mr. Newton [holding answer 1 March 1988]: The following table shows for 1985 (or for the latest available year) health care expenditure per head in total and for the public and private sectors in EEC countries expressed in terms of pounds sterling using OECD purchasing power parities.

Expenditure on health care per head of population in EEC countries in 1985

[2] Data for 1984.
[3] Luxembourg is excluded from the table due to reported inconsistencies in the national health accounts.

Long-stay Patients

Dr. Owen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the annual cost to the National Health Service of all long-stay patients, respectively, in geriatric hospitals, hospitals for the mentally handicapped and mentally ill, and psychiatric hospitals.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 3 March 1988]: Costing returns submitted by health authorities include returns for the following hospital types, geriatric, mental handicap, and mental illness, but do not separately identify expenditure dependent on length of stay.

In 1986-87, total current expenditure in England on in-patients in these hospitals was as follows:

Geriatric hospitals	275,899,208
Mental handicap hospitals	[1]481,182,993
Mental illness hospitals	[2]795,317,915

[1] Includes expenditure on community units for the mentally handicapped.
[2] Excludes expenditure on psychiatric units within general hospitals etc. which is not separately identifiable centrally.

Whitley Hospital, Coventry

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will call for a report from the chairman of Coventry district health authority about the financial arrangements, including rental payments, entered into with Coventry Church housing association in advance of the formal Secretary of State's decision on the closure proposals affecting Whitley hospital in Coventry, South-East.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 3 March 1988]: All aspects of Coventry health authority's proposal for the future patterns of health services in the district are currently being examined by Ministers, as part of a reference on the closure of Whitley hospital and other service changes.

Abortions

Mr. Lofthouse: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what has been the total number of abortions, under the terms of the Abortion Act 1967, in the Pontefract district health authority area for each year from 1983 up to the latest year for which figures are available; how many of these abortions were performed in emergency to save the life of the pregnant woman; and what is the latter figure expressed as a percentage of the former.

Mr. Newton [holding answer 1 March 1988]: The information is shown in the table.

Number of notifications of abortions performed on usual residents of Pontefract district health authority, and number of mentions of ground 5[1], 1983-86

Year	Number of abortions	Mention of ground 5
1984	339	0

[1] Ground 5 of the 1967 Abortion Act permits abortions to be performed "in emergency to save the life of the mother".

Hospitals

Mr. David Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the average and total change in running costs for hospitals where old hospitals have been replaced by newly built hospitals providing an equivalent or near-equivalent service; and what is the total capital invested in this group of hospitals since 1979.

Mrs. Currie: Since 1979 about 250 hospital building schemes each costing £1 million have been completed at a total cost of nearly £1·5 billion. I regret that comparative information linking running costs and activity data by hospitals of different ages is not available.

Mental Illness Hospitals

Dr. Owen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what are the most recent figures for the number of (a) full-time consultant psychiatrists, (b) adult in-patients, (c) out-patient attendances and (d) day patient attendances in hospitals for the mentally ill.

Mrs. Currie: The information requested is set out in the table.

Mental illness: Consultant staff and hospital attendance England 1986

	Number
Consultants (WTE)[1] in adult mental illness and psychotherapy (at 30 September):
Total	1,128
Whole-time	843
Maximum part-time[2]	141
Other part-time	144
In-patients, aged 16 and over (at 31 December)	59,780
Total out-patient attendances	1,720,895
Day patient attendances in main hospitals	940,167
Day patient attendances in day hospitals	2,770,869

[1] Whole-time equivalents, rounded to nearest whole number.
[2] These are usually treated as whole-time staff to reflect their substantially whole-time commitment.

Telephone Exchange for the Deaf

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to the answer of 19 February, Official Report column 784, what options are being considered for the long-term arrangements for providing the telephone exchange for the deaf; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: Discussions are in train involving the Royal National Institute for the Deaf, British Telecom and Government Departments about setting up a research study which will address a wide range of options.

Family Allowance

Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether any special arrangements will be made to compensate families on income support from 1 April for the loss of family allowance when a son, or daughter, in full-time education reaches the age of 19 years.

Mr. Scott: Transitional protection ensures that families entitled to supplementary benefit during week commencing 4 April and to income support from 11 April, will receive at least as much benefit income under the income support scheme at the point of change. We have no plans to make other arrangements.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Patent Office

16. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what representations he has had from businesses on the transfer of the Patent Office.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I have received just over 100 representations, about half from firms of patent and trade mark agents and the rest from industrial and commercial businesses.

Industrial Revenue Bonds

17. Mr. Steen: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he expects to announce his plans for industrial revenue bonds for the inner cities.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The Government have at present no plans to introduce industrial revenue bonds.

Enterprise Initiative

18. Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what has been the response to his Department's new enterprise initiative.

Mr. Atkins: Response to the enterprise initiative continues to be excellent. More than 42,000 inquiries have been received. We are on course to achieve our White Paper target figure of 1,000 consultancy projects per month.

Regional Assistance

19. Mr. Clelland: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what his Department plans to spend in regional assistance in each of the next four years.

Mr. Atkins: My Department's planned level of expenditure on the main regional assistance measures in the years 1988-89 to 1990-91 is £330 million, £304 million and £265 million respectively. In accordance with normal practice, plans for 1991-92 have not been made.

Pen Tops

20. Mr. Janner: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he expects the technical committee of the British Standards Institute to discuss new safety standards for pen tops.

Mr. Butcher: The British Standards Institutions (BSI) is taking urgent steps to develop this standard. Responsibility for controlling the work will rest with BSI but I understand that the first meeting of the technical committee concerned is likely to take place in April.

Confectionery

21. Mr. Gregory: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what was the value of United Kingdom (a) exports and (b) imports of confectionery in the last year for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: In 1987 exports of confectionery goods were valued at £405 million and imports £330 million.

Training Centres

22. Mr. Rowe: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will consider establishing training centres for people on approved courses which do not qualify for local education authority grants.

Mr. Butcher: This is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Science.

Economic Progress

23. Mr. Stokes: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will take steps to convey to industry that economic progress will only be maintained by greater appreciation of the need for the highest quality, value, and reliable delivery to the customer of goods and services.

Mr. Butcher: The whole thrust of the enterprise initiative is to promote best practice in these and other aspects of performance.

EC (Single Market)

24. Mr. Fallon: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what progress has been made in removing barriers to free trade in the European Community; and what further action is being taken to ensure that by 1992 there is a genuine single market in Europe.

Mr. Alan Clark: The Community is making encouraging progress towards the completion of the single European market by the target date of 31 December 1992. More than 100 individual measures aimed at removing barriers have been agreed in the last 18 months, 48 of them during the United Kingdom presidency in the second half of 1986. Following implementation of the Single European Act, the increased use of majority voting is already speeding up the process of decision taking. Priorities for decisions this year include standards, opening up public purchasing, liberalising capital movements, and freedom of establishment for the professions.

37. Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what representations he has received on the Government's plans to prepare British companies for the completion of the single market in 1992.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Since we announced our campaign the DTI has received an encouragingly large number of representations from all sectors of British business. All have warmly welcomed the priority which the Government are giving to completing the single market and the steps we are taking to make British business aware of the challenge.

Confederation of British Industry

25. Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he last met the Confederation of British Industry; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: My last meeting with the CBI was on 25 January. Our discussions on this occasion were mainly concerned with inner city issues.

European Space Agency

26. Mr. Colvin: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he last met the chairman of the European Space Agency; and what subjects were discussed.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The Director-General of the European Space Agency (ESA), Dr. Luest, called on me when he was in London on 16 February. We discussed ESA matters and United Kingdom involvement in ESA programmes.

Industrial Competitiveness

27. Mr. Allen McKay: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how the international competitiveness of British industry has changed in the last year.

Mr. Butcher: In the third quarter of 1987, the latest period for which data are available, relative unit labour costs in manufacturing were broadly unchanged from their level in the corresponding quarter of the previous year.

Industry-School Links

28. Mr. Irvine: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what steps he is taking to forge closer collaborative links between industry and schools.

Mr. Butcher: A number of measures to forge closer collaborative links between industry and schools were announced as part of the enterprise initiative in the White Paper "DTI-the department for Enterprise" published on 12 January 1988. Three new targets were set:

every year 10 per cent. of teachers should have the opportunity to gain some personal experience of the world of business every young person should have two or more weeks of work experience, suited to his or her ability and needs, before leaving school every trainee teacher should gain an appreciation of the needs of employers and the importance of links between schools and employers.

In addition, the Government's policy statement, "Action for Cities", announced by the Prime Minister on 7 March contained a range of initiatives including the Department of Employment's proposals to develop "compacts", initially in 12 of the urban programme areas. My Department will be working closely with DES and MSC to foster these partnerships and a wide range of other links between schools and business.

Company Liquidations

29. Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many company liquidations there were in Hereford and Worcester in the year 1983 to date.

Mr. Maude: Company liquidations are not analysed by county, but Hereford and Worcester are part of the area administered by the Official Receiver's office in Gloucester, which processed an estimated 351 compulsory liquidations in the years 1983 to 1987. No regional analysis is available of creditors' voluntary liquidations, the other type of insolvent company liquidation.

Tokyo Stock Exchange

30. Mr. Illsley: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster to what factors he attributes the more rapid recovery of the Tokyo stock exchange than the British stock exchange since the crash.

Mr. Maude: Many factors influence the behaviour of prices in different markets; and I do not propose to speculate about them.

Film Industry

31. Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what measures he plans to take to encourage the revival of the British film industry.

Mr. Butcher: The Government maintain the view that the provisions of the Films Act 1985 offer a framework within which the commercial film industry can develop successfully. British Screen Finance Ltd., which received Government funds under the terms of the Films Act, has in just over two years supported over 35 feature and short films. In addition, more than 20 projects have received Government finance under the development scheme managed by the National Film Development Fund.

Uniform Business Rate

32. Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what effects he expects the uniform business rate to have on his Department's regional policy.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The introduction of the uniform business rate will mean that firms throughout the country with premises of the same rateable value will pay the same rates. This will be of enormous benefit to my Department's policy of encouraging enterprise in the regions.

Mergers Policy

33. Mr. Battiste: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what representations he had received on Her Majesty's Government's mergers policy.

Mr. Maude: The Department has received a large number of representations during the course of the recent review of law and policy on mergers and restrictive trade practices and these are listed in the Department's recent publication, "Mergers Policy" which is available in the Library of the House.

Association of Innovation Centres Executives

34. Mr. Stott: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he next expects to meet Dr. Donaldson, secretary of the Association of Innovation Centres Executives, to discuss Government funding for industry.

Mr. Butcher: My right hon. and learned Friend has no plans to meet the secretary of the Association of Innovation Centre Executives, Dr. Donaldson. However, I recently met Dr. Donaldson and other members of AICE to discuss the work of innovation centres, and ways in which these centres might be able to contribute to DTI's new innovation policies. I have agreed to visit the north-east innovation centre later in the year.

Financial Services Act

35. Mr. Wallace: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what percentage of investment firms have registered with the Securities and Investments Board or self-regulatory organisations by the deadline laid down in the Financial Services Act.

Mr. Maude: The Securities and Investments Board calculates that, on P-Day, approximately 5,100 firms were already members of recognised self-regulating organisations and around 9,140 applications were in the course of consideration. It is not possible to say what percentage of investment firms such a figure constitutes.

36. Mr. Morgan: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what representations he has received requesting the postponement of implementation of section 9 of the Financial Services Act.

Mr. Maude: Section 9 of the Financial Services Act was brought into force in June 1987. No representations requesting postponement of the section were made.

52. Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he is now able to announce the date of authorisation under the Financial Services Act.

Mr. Maude: Section 3 of the Financial Services Act will require any person carrying on investment business in the United Kingdom to be authorised or exempted. It remains my intention that this section and other key investor protection provisions of the Act should be commenced in April, but the precise date has not yet been determined.

Competition Policy and Consumer Protection

38. Mr. Dykes: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what recent representations he has received from heavy industry on competition policy issues and consumer protection matters; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: The Department is in regular contact with both individual firms and representative groups from all sides of industry, including heavy industry; in the course of these contacts, industry's views on a range of matters, including competition policy and consumer protection are discussed.

ICI Teesside

39. Mr. Holt: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many automatic grants under the regional aid programmes have been made to ICI Teesside in each of the past 10 years; and what was their value.

Mr. Atkins: Details of regional development grant payments made to ICI and its subsidiaries above £25,000 are published in British Business. The dates of publication were as follows:

(i) original RDG scheme: individual payments which exceed £25,000;

(ii) revised RDG scheme: payments to individual undertakings in a travel-to-work area which cumulatively exceed £25,000 in any one quarter.

Information Technology

40. Mr. Henderson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is his latest estimate of the balance of trade in information technology for 1987.

Mr. Maude: The crude trade deficit (1) in the products of the information technology and electronics industries (2) in the first nine months of 1987, not seasonally adjusted, was £1·7 billion.

(1) Imports (cif) less Exports (fob)
(2) Activity headings 3301, 3302, 3441, 3442, 3443, 3444, 3453 and 3454 of the Standard Industrial Classification (1980)

Audio Cassettes (Levy)

41. Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what recent representations he has received on the need for a levy on blank audio cassette tape.

57. Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many representations he has received (a) for and (b) against the introduction of a blank tape levy.

Mr. Maude: My Department received more than 1,000 responses to the 1985 Green Paper "The Recording and Rental of Audio and Video Copyright Material" and the 1986 White Paper "Intellectual Property and Innovation" both of which addressed the question of a levy on blank tape. A large proportion of respondents commented on that question and the majority were opposed to the introduction of a levy. Since the Copyright, Designs and Patents Bill was published in October 1987, my Department has dealt with 80 further representations on the matter and of these, 42 were in favour of a levy and 38 against.

Product Improvement

42. Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what has been the response to his Department's initiative to help developing firms improve the quality of their products.

Mr. Butcher: The national Quality Campaign was launched in April 1983 with the aim of providing a wider awareness of the importance of quality. Since its launch, it is estimated that the campaign has reached more than 70,000 firms. There is continued high demand for the comprehensive range of campaign booklets and videos. Quality-related events have been developed on a regional, company-supplier or sectoral basis. Around 20 such activity programmes have been held with the most recent one in Brighton last month for the south-east region.

There are around 9,000 company entries in the latest edition of the "Register of Quality Assessed United Kingdom Companies," a 50 per cent. increase on the previous edition. In addition, the level of demand for assisted quality consultancy advice has been significant —more than 5,000 so far. This help continues to be available through the enterprise initiative. From this it is clear that more and more firms are adopting the positive approach to quality which is so vital to the United Kingdom's competitiveness.

Aerospace Industry

43. Mr. Page: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the export performance of the aerospace industry in 1987 and on its prospects for the coming year.

Mr. Atkins: Final figures for 1987 are not yet available but provisional estimates indicate that the British aerospace industry exported some £5·5 billion of goods during the year. Prospects for the coming year are good with expected exports of around £6 billion.

Manufactured Imports and Exports

44. Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what has been the growth in manufactured imports and exports in the last 12 months and in the last eight years.

Mr. Alan Clark: The information is as follows:

Change in the volume of trade in manufactures in the last twelve months
Overseas trade statistics basis seasonally adjusted 1980 = 100

	Import volume	Export volume
Index, February 1986 to January 1987	148·8	114·6
Index, February 1987 to January 1988	165·4	124·1
Percentage change	+11	+8¼

Volume of trade in manufactures 1980-1987
Overseas trade statistics basis 1980 = 100

	Import volume index	Export volume index
1980	100·0	100·0
1981	97·9	94·4
1982	107·3	96·4
1983	121·4	95·8
1984	133·9	104·5
1985	140·6	110·8
1986	148·2	114·1
1987	162·6	123·8

Loan Companies (Advertising)

45. Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what plans there are to seek to protect the consumer from misleading advertising by loan companies.

Mr. Maude: It is already an offence under section 46 of the Consumer Credit Act 1974 to publish an advertisement which is false or misleading in a material respect. In addition the Consumer Credit (Advertisements) Regulations regulate the form and content of advertisements for credit in some detail and ensure that consumers are given full and accurate information on relevant matters, including the total cost of credit. I believe, nevertheless, that there is scope for improving the protection provided by the current regulations and my Department will shortly circulate revised draft regulations which simplify and clarify the existing provisions and contain additional safeguards for borrowers, particularly in the area of secured lending.

Shipbuilding

46. Mr. David Porter: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what representations he has had recently from the British shipbuilding industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: Representations have recently been made about the competition faced by United Kingdom private sector merchant yards from other yards in the Community. The particular case has been drawn to the attention of the European Community.

Consumers Association

47. Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he next intends to meet the Consumers Association; and what matters he intends to discuss.

Mr. Butcher: I intend to meet the director general of the Consumers Association on Wednesday 23 March to discuss a number of topics relevant to consumers.

Credit Cards

48. Mr. Morley: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he has any plans for the further regulation of credit cards.

Mr. Maude: No. I believe that the legal framework established by the Consumer Credit Act 1974 already ensures that credit card users are adequately protected.

Manufactures

49. Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is his latest estimate of the balance of trade in manufactures for 1987.

Mr. Alan Clark: For 1987 there was a deficit of £6·5 billion in trade in manufactures.

Business (Marketing Skills)

50. Mr. Day: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what has been the response to his Department's initiative to help developing businesses improve their marketing skills.

Mr. Butcher: Response to the interprise initiative continues to be excellent. More than 42,000 inquiries have been received. We are on course to achieve our White Paper target figure of 1,000 consultancy projects per month.

Manufactured Goods

51. Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what was the value in real terms of manufactured goods imported to, and exported from, the United Kingdom in June 1979 and the last month for which estimated figures are available.

Mr. Alan Clark: The information is as follows:

United Kingdom trade in manufactures for June 1979 and January 1988 at 1980 prices

£ million

	Imports	Exports
June 1979	2,695	3,061
January 1988	4,693	3,429

Regional Development Grant (Tourism)

53. Mr. Pike: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how much regional development grant has been paid to the north-west region in respect of the tourism industry in the past 12 months.

Mr. Atkins: Data on payments of regional development grants are held by reference to the 1980 standard industrial classification. There is no specific code for tourism under this classification. The main activities which make up the tourist industry are not eligible for RDG. It is possible that projects involving activities which are eligible for RDG, such as central services, may be submitted by applicants who are active in the tourist industry, but information on grant paid in such circumstances is not available.

National Association of Citizens Advice Bureaux

54. Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he last met the chairman of the National Association of Citizens Advice Bureaux; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Butcher: I met the chairman of the National Association of Citizens Advice Bureaux on Monday 7 March when we discussed a number of current issues including the funding of the services provided by the citizens advice bureaux.

Takeovers

55. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what steps he intends to take to reduce the scale of takeover activity and the consequent loss of jobs in Wales, Scotland and the north of England.

Mr. Maude: Mergers policy has been under review. The main conclusions were announced in the recent White Paper "DTI—the department for Enterprise"; and more detailed conclusions were set out in the Department's policy document "Mergers Policy" published on 3 March. The Government's policy is that the main—though not exclusive—consideration in determining whether mergers should be referred to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission will be their potential effect on competition. Where competition is not affected, the Government believe that it is normally right for proposed mergers to be decided by the market without intervention by official agencies. But mergers may occasionally raise other issues which affect the public interest and the discretion to refer them to the MMC is to be retained.

Balance of Trade

56. Mr. Thornton: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what was the contribution to the United Kingdom balance of trade in 1986-87 of (a) the aerospace industry, (b) information technology and (c) pharmaceutical industries.

Mr. Atkins: The crude balance of trade for the sectors listed for the financial year 1986-87 is:

	£ million
(a) Aerospace	+2,106
(b) Electronics and Information technology[1]	−1,894
(c) Pharmaceuticals	+850

[1] The "electronics and information technology" sector has been taken to comprise activity headings 3301/2, 3441-4 and 3453/4 of the Standard Industrial Classification (Revised 1980).

Research and Development

59. Mr. Franks: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what information he has as to what percentage of turnover is invested in research and development by (a) the electronics industry, (b) the chemical industry and (c) the pharmaceutical industry.

Mr. Maude: In 1985, expenditure by United Kingdom industrial enterprises on research and development they performed and financed from their own resources as a percentage of sales and work done, was as follows:

	Per cent.
Products of the electronics industry, including office machinery and electronic data processing equipment	6·5
Products of the chemical industry, excluding pharmaceutical products	1·7
Pharmaceutical products	10·2

65. Mr. Ingram: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what proportion of gross domestic product was spent on non-military research and development in Britain for the last year for which figures are available; and what is the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development average.

Mr. Maude: The latest available information relates to 1985 and is shown in the table. It was published in table 5.10 in the 1987 "Annual Review of Goverment Funded Research and Development (R and D)". The Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD) does not compile information on gross expenditure on R and D (GERD) for non-defence purposes for member countries. The figures given are rough estimates for certain countries. They are based on GERD, which is published by OECD for member countries, adjusted to eliminate expenditure on R and D for defence purposes, with the result expressed as a percentage of gross domestic product (GDP).

Estimated GERD for civil purposes as a percentage of GDP in 1985

	Percentage
United Kingdom	1·7
United States of America	1·9
Federal Republic of Germany	2·5
France	[1]1·8
Japan	[2]2·5

[1] 1984 estimate.
[2] 1983 estimate.

66. Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what plans he has to encourage a higher level of research and development expenditure by British industry.

Mr. Butcher: A major objective of my Department's recently announced innovation policy is to encourage industry to fund more of its own R and D, as well as to encourage co-operation between companies and the academic science base. The Government have created the right climate to enable industry to invest more in R and D.

70. Mr. Cran: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the code approved by the Accounting Standards Committee requiring disclosure in company accounts of spending on research and development; and what further plans he has to encourage greater commitment by companies to research and development.

Mr. Maude: The Accounting Standards Committee is considering the responses to its exposure draft 41 which proposed changes to its "Statement of Standard Accounting Practice 13", including a new requirement that company accounts should disclose expenditure on research and development. The Government support this proposal and we are hopeful that a revised standard will be agreed later this year.

Steel Industry

60. Mr. Moss: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what representations he has received on the decision to return the British Steel Corporation to the private sector.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I have received a small number of letters from various parties about points of detail. I have so far received a few representations about the principle of privatisation itself. I regard this as a matter which is no longer particularly controversial except within a narrow political circle.

Airbus Project

61. Mr. Burt: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he will meet ministerial colleagues from France and Germany to discuss the Airbus project.

Mr. Atkins: My right hon. and learned Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster met his French and German colleagues on 1 March to discuss the Airbus project, and expects to be in regular contact with them on this issue.

Export Initiative

62. Mr. Hind: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what has been the response to his Department's export initiative.

Mr. Alan Clark: Since the launch on 12 January, nearly 9,000 export initiative booklets have been requested. While it is too soon to provide detailed figures on the take-up of the various schemes, considerable interest has been shown by exporters in the marketing initiative which provides access to independent consultancy advice on, among other things, how companies should approach and plan for their business abroad.

Manufacturing Investment

63. Mr. McFall: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what was the level of manufacturing investment in 1987 and in 1979.

Mr. Maude: The provisional estimate of investment in manufacturing industry, including leased assets, for 1987 is £7·4 billion at 1980 prices. The corresponding investment in 1979 and 1983 was £8·2 billion and £5·6 billion respectively at 1980 prices.

Inner Cities (New Businesses)

64. Mr. Andrew Hargreaves: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what are the latest figures for the establishment of new businesses in inner-city areas.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: A total of 46,000 new businesses were registered for VAT in urban priority areas in 1986. That is the latest year for which complete figures are available. The number of VAT registered businesses in the inner cities was 307,000 at the end of 1986—2·3 per cent. higher than the two years before.

We have no accurate figures for the number of new businesses below the threshold for VAT in urban priority areas. However about one third of all enterprise allowance scheme applicants come from these areas and we expect to have 110,000 entrants nationally in 1988-89.

Consumer Credit

67. Sir Fergus Montgomery: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he has any plans to seek to change the level of protection afforded by the Consumer Credit Act.

Mr. Maude: The Consumer Credit Act already provides comprehensive protection for consumers. I have no plans to change the basic framework of protection provided by the Act although I propose amendments to the Act, when there is a suitable opportunity, to simplify and clarify certain provisions which have caused difficulty both for lenders and their customers. I also propose amendments to the Act to remove all business hire and credit from its scope. These changes have been supported by organisations representing unincorporated businesses and sole traders who are at present within the scope of the Act. I am also proposing to amend the Consumer Credit (Advertisements) Regulations to clarify and simplify the existing provisions and provide additional safeguards for borrowers, particularly in the area of secured lending. I believe that these changes would enhance the present level of borrower protection while at the same time reducing the burden on business.

Information Technology and Science Graduates

68. Mrs. Maureen Hicks: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what information he has on the trend for information technology graduates and those with science degrees to take employment in the City rather than in manufacturing industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: My Department regularly receives information on the first employment destinations of UK university graduates from the Department of Education and Science. Whilst many jobs in manufacturing are open to graduates of any discipline, others require specific expertise, graduates in subjects which are less strongly attracted to careers where a general level of academic attainment is required, including some in the financial and commercial sectors. It should be noted that only a small proportion of such jobs are in the City.

The tables illustrate the recent trends in the first employment of engineering and science university graduates:

Table 1

[1] The university subject classification changed in 1986. The apparent short fall in electrical and electronic engineering is due to a major part of this subject group being transferred to other categories in the classification, where they are not readily identifiable.

Television and Radio Programmes (Publication)

69. Mr. Speller: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will take steps using his powers in relation to monopolies, to facilitate the publication of advance television and radio programmes by newspapers and other periodicals.

Mr. Maude: No. The policies and practices of the British Broadcasting Corporation and of Independent Television Publications Ltd. of limiting the publication by others of advance programme information have already been investigated by the Monopolies and Mergers Commission. In a report published on 11 September 1985 the Commission concluded that these policies and practices did not operate against the public interest.

Inner City Task Forces

71. Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he has any plans to expand the number of inner city task forces.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Not at the moment. The eight new task forces are establishing themselves very well but I see no reason to expand the numbers further. I wish to retain the close contact between Ministers and task forces, the informality, short lines of command and ability to innovate and experiment which have been the main advantages of the task force initiative so far.

Car Manufacturing

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will estimate the number and geographical spread of firms which are dependent upon the car manufacturing industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: There are no data on which to provide an estimate of the number and geographical spread of firms which are dependent upon the car manufacturing industry. However it is estimated that there are some 2,000 firms supplying components to the vehicle industry generally of which 20 or so of the largest firms account for over 75 per cent. by value of United Kingdom annual vehicle component production. For many suppliers the vehicle industry represents only one of their markets. There is a traditional concentration of vehicle components suppliers in the west midlands.

Motor Vehicles (South Korea)

73. Mr. Speed: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the current amount of motor vehicle exports to and imports from South Korea, together with the duties and tariffs levied by the United Kingdom on Korean vehicle imports and those levied by South Korea on United Kingdom vehicle exports.

Mr. Alan Clark: Exports of motor vehicles to South Korea for the 11 months January to November 1987 amounted to £0·5 million; imports for the same period amounted to £16·9 million.

The tariffs levied by the United Kingdom on Korean vehicle imports range from 10 per cent. to 22 per cent. Passenger vehicles are also subject to 10 per cent. car tax, and 15 per cent. VAT is levied on all vehicles.

Tariffs levied by the Republic of Korea on United Kingdom vehicles exports range from 15 per cent. to 30 per cent. Additional duties include a special excise tax, ranging from 10 per cent. to 40 per cent. and a defence tax of 30 per cent. In addition 10 per cent. VAT is levied on the total.

Managed Workshops

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he will announce the first managed workshop in an inner city area.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: There are already many managed workshops in inner cities, but I believe that more are needed to provide premises and advice for people starting new businesses.

English Estates is leading the new DTI-funded programme announced on 7 March and is already involved in negotiations with private sector companies. We should be able to announce specific new projects in the near future.

Restrictive Trade Practices

72. Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he expects to be able to make a statement about the Government's policy on restrictive trade practices.

Mr. Maude: The Government published a Green Paper on restrictive trade practices policy yesterday. I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave yesterday to my hon. Friend the Member for Hertfordshire, South-West (Mr. Page).

Written Answers to Questions

Thursday 10 March 1988

WALES

Amniocentesis Tests

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his estimate of the number of amniocentesis tests which were undertaken in Wales in the most recent year for which the information is available.

Mr. Grist: The information is not available centrally.

Forestry

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give details of the numbers of forestry grant or felling licence applications currently referred to him by the Forestry Commission and the dates when they were so referred; when he expects to be able to announce a decision for each one; and for which cases further consultation is still being considered.

Mr. Peter Walker: I am considering two forestry planting grant applications to which objections have been raised. The sites are at Bwlch-y-Garreg and Bara Ceirch in Dyfed, and relate to the proposed planting of some 97 hectares in each case. These applications were referred to me on 30 December 1987 and I intend to advise the forestry commissioners on my views shortly.

Higher Education (Welsh Language)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales which courses at each of the institutions of higher and further education in Wales are available to students to study (a) partly and (b) entirely through the medium of the Welsh language.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The board for Welsh medium teaching of the University of Wales has reported that in 1986-87 students of the university were pursuing courses partly or entirely through the medium of Welsh as follows:

University College of Wales, Aberystwyth
Degree courses in Education, Drama, History, Welsh History, Philosophy, French, Geography, Religious Studies, Music and Politics, Post-graduate teacher training.

University College of North Wales, Bangor
Degree courses in Education, Drama, History, Welsh History, Biblical Studies, Theology, Music and Sociology. Post-graduate teacher training.

St. Davids University College, Lampeter
Degree courses in Archaeology, History, Theology and Religious Studies.

University College Cardiff
A degree course in Home economics.

The University of Wales is also able to provide tuition partly or wholly through the medium of Welsh, in a range of other subjects. They are centred mainly at the University college of Wales, Aberystwyth and the University college of North Wales, Bangor, with some provision at University college, Cardiff, St. Davids University college Lampeter, and University college, Swansea.

In the public sector courses of advanced further education are available wholly or partly through the medium of Welsh as follows:

Trinity College Carmarthen
Degree courses in the Rural Environment and 19th and 20th century Studies, a Bachelor of Education course, and Post-graduate teacher training in Religious Education.

Bangor Normal College
Degree courses in Communications, Administration and Environmental Studies, a Bachelor of Education course and Post-graduate teacher training course for primary school teachers.

Gwent College of Higher Education
Teacher training course in Craft, Design and Technology.

South Glamorgan Institute of Higher Education
Degree course in Speech Therapy and Post-graduate teacher training courses in Art and Phyical Education.

Welsh College of Librarianship
A Degree course and Post-graduate course in Librarianship.

In 1986 public sector colleges reported that courses of non-advanced further education were available partly or entirely in the Welsh language as follows:

Institution	Secretarial	Business/ Commerce	Nursery Nursing (NNEB)	Agriculture	Home Economics/ Community care	Health studies	Hairdressing	Communication	Technician

[1] Including a post-graduate course.

Information on the funds allocated at institutions specifically for the promotion of teaching through the medium of Welsh is not held centrally.

Education Reform

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimates his Department has made of the additional teachers required in (a) the primary sector and (b) the secondary sector in each local education authority area in Wales to teach each of the foundation and core subjects outlined in the Education (Reform) Bill at present before Parliament.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: It is too early to make precise estimates. Local education authorities will be expected to plan on the basis of the national curriculum being implemented incrementally over a number of years broadly within the framework of the present planned resources. That framework includes plans for the overall pupil to teacher ratio to continue to fall from its present level to reach 17:1.

Within primary schools where the majority of teachers teach right across the curriculum supply is not expected to be a problem. In secondary schools measures will be necessary and plans are in hand to boost teacher numbers in particular subjects, but an increase in teacher numbers overall may not be necessary.

PRIME MINISTER

Community Care

Q7. Mr. Allen: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make a statement on the co-ordination of the Government's policy for community care of the elderly, mentally ill and mentally handicapped.

The Prime Minister: All the relevant Departments work closely together to achieve the necessary co-ordination for community care policies.

British Standard Time

Q131. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister what action she intends to take in response to the representations she has received in favour of putting the clock forward by one hour to restore British standard time and double British summer time.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Home Department (Mr. Hogg) to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy (Dr. Thomas) on 2 March 1988, at column 567.

Stabilisers

Q146. Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister if the European Council has now received the necessary assurances on stabilisers to enable it to finalise the provisional agreement reached on 11 and 12 February; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The meeting of the Foreign Affairs Council on 22 February endorsed the non-arable stabilisers proposals (paragraph 4-11 of annex 1 to document SN 461/1/88, a copy of which is in the Library of the House), thus enabling the overall agreement reached by the European Council on 11-12 February to be finalised, subject to detailed legal texts being agreed on all points.

Thurlaston

Q161. Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Prime Minister if she has any plans to make an official visit to Thurlaston, north Rugby.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Engagements

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 10 March.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 10 March.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 10 March.

Mr. Stern: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 10 March.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 10 March.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided over a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House I shall be having further meetings later today, including one with a delegation from the National Pensioners Convention. This evening I am attending a reception for the winners of the 1987 Queen's awards for export and technology.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Legal Aid

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Attorney-General if legal aid will still be available to women suffering from violence in the home, following the changes proposed in the Legal Aid Bill [Lords].

The Attorney-General: Yes, subject, as now, to the applicant's means being within the qualifying limits and to the application being judged reasonable by the legal aid authorities.

"Spycatcher"

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Attorney-General if he will bring up to date the information provided in his answer to the hon. Member for Newham, North-West (Mr. Banks) on 22 October 1987, Official Report, column 839, on legal actions in respect of "Spycatcher"; and if he will provide details in the same form in respect of Mr. Anthony Cavendish's memoirs.

The Attorney-General: The information is as follows:

Spycatcher

The High Court of Australia has today reserved judgment in the Government's appeal in the action brought against Heinemann (Australia) and Mr. Peter Wright. The total amount of costs expended to date by the Government in these proceedings is about £485,000.

In England and Wales the House of Lords will hear on 7 June the Government's appeal in the action brought against The Guardian, The Observer and The Sunday Times newspapers. The total amount of costs expended to date by the Government in these proceedings is about £43,000.

In New Zealand the Court of Appeal has reserved judgment in the Government's appeal in the action brought against The Dominion newspaper. The total amount of costs expended to date by the Government in these proceedings is about £74,000.

In Hong Kong an interim injunction was obtained last August against The South China Morning Post newspaper. No date for the hearing of the substantive action has yet been set. The total amount of costs expended to date by the Government in these proceedings is about £1,200.

Cavendish

In England and Wales interim injunctions were obtained in January against The Observer and The Sunday Times newspapers, and later varied, to restrain the publication of material from Mr. Cavendish.

In the same month in Scotland an interim interdict to the same effect was obtained against The Scotsman newspaper, but later recalled. A fresh application for an interim interdict failed, and the Government's appeal against that refusal is due to be heard on 15 March.

To date no costs have been expended by the Government in these proceedings.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Education Standards

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received about the standards in education.

Mrs. Rumbold: We have received over 10,000 responses to our consultation paper on the national curriculum. A number of respondents have noted that many children now fail to do as well as they could and should, and recognise the importance of a curriculum which sets clear and appropriate objectives for all pupils.

Special Educational Needs

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he expects to publish proposals to extend the support of special educational needs into the 16 to 19 years further education sector.

Mr. Dunn: Clause 81 of the Education Reform Bill puts beyond doubt the duty of local education authorities to provide full-time education for all who seek it up to the age of 19, including those with special educational needs.

Daily Worship

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list for each local education authority the number of schools which do not have a daily act of worship.

Mrs. Rumbold: This information is not collected by the Department.

Teachers of the Deaf

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many teachers have been seconded for training as teachers of the deaf in the academic year 1988-89 under the new grant related in-service training scheme; and what steps he has taken to ensure that at least the minimum number of teachers necessary to maintain the current supply will be trained in that year.

Mrs. Rumbold: Figures are not yet available for courses starting in September 1988. We have made provision through the LEA training grants scheme to support the training of 110 specialist teachers of the deaf through in-service training. This, with the numbers qualifying through initial training, is sufficient to maintain supply broadly at current levels. LEAs have, however, forecast that they will spend some 50 per cent. more in 1988-89 than the sum allocated under the training grant scheme to provide for the 110 trainees.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many qualified teachers of the deaf are employed in maintained and non-maintained schools; and how many teachers not having a specialist qualification are employed to teach hearing-impaired children.

Mrs. Rumbold: Information in the form requested is not available. The available information, which covers England and Wales as at March 1986, is as follows:

In maintained and direct grant special schools there were 704 full-time teachers who were recorded as holding qualifications for teaching the hearing-impaired. In maintained nursery, primary and seconday schools there were 692 full-time teachers teaching classes for hearing-impaired or visually handicapped children. Of these, 477 were recorded as holding qualifications for teaching the hearing-impaired, 26 for teaching the visually handicapped and 189 had neither type of qualification recorded.

Higher Education

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many students from (a) Northern Ireland, (b) countries within the EEC and (c) countries outside the EEC are currently attending higher education courses in (i) Scotland, (ii) England and (iii) Wales.

Mr. Jackson: The information is shown in the following table:

Full-time and sandwich students in higher education, 1986
Great Britain Thousands

	England	Wales	Scotland
Domiciled in Northern Ireland	4·9	0·3	1·5

	England	Wales	Scotland
Other United Kingdom	430·5	29·2	73·6
European Community	7·4	0·3	0·8
Other Countries	38·3	3·1	6·3

Chiropody

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many schools of chiropody will remain under local education authority control following the establishment of the Polytechnics and Colleges Funding Council; what proportion of state registered chiropodists in England and Wales they account for; what safeguards will be introduced to ensure that funding of the chiropody course will not be adversely affected at these schools as a result of the new proposals and that the numbers of chiropody students will be maintained; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: In England and Wales there are 11 institutions which offer courses leading to qualification as a state registered chiropodist. One school falls within the National Health Service. Of the 10 schools at educational institutions, six will remain in local authority control. In the current year the students enrolled at these six institutions represent about 70 per cent. of the total. Under long-standing guidance by education departments to local education authorities, the non-clinical elements of courses in chiropody at educational institutions are a charge to the education service. I do not expect that arrangement to change. LEA institutions will settle the levels of funding of their courses within the total resources made available by the authority. But authorities' expenditure on such courses of higher education will score as grant-related expenditure.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Civil Defence, Swindon

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he is satisfied with the provisions for civil defence in Swindon; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: Responsibility for civil defence planning rests with county councils which are assisted by district councils. We are satisfied that Wiltshire county council, and the district councils within the county, are making good progress towards meeting their statutory obligations.

Driving Disqualification

Mr. Holt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people have been disqualified from driving in each of the past 10 years; and what is the present total number of disqualified drivers.

Mr. John Patten: The number of disqualifications imposed by the courts in each year from 1977 to 1986 is published in table 16 of Home Office statistical bulletin, issue 36/87, "Offences Relating To Motor Vehicles, England and Wales 1986", copies of which are in the Library. It is estimated on the basis of records held on the police national computer that about 240,000 persons are currently disqualified from driving in Great Britain.

Convicted Murderers

Mr. Holt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many convicted murderers in prison now have served (a) 30 years, (b) 25 years, (c) 20 years, (d) 15 years, (e) 10 years, (f) five years and (g) under five years.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Information on the time spent under sentence in prison department establishments in England and Wales by sentenced murderers held in such establishments on 30 September 1987 is given in the table. More detailed information about all life sentenced prisoners is given annually in "Prison Statistics, England and Wales", table 1(f) of the latest issue, for 1986, (Cm. 210), a copy of which is in the Library.

Sentenced murderers held under their original sentence[1] in Prison Department establishments in England and Wales on 30 September 1987: by time spent under sentence in such establishments

Years spent under sentence[3]	Number of prisoners[2]
Under 5	794
5 and under 10	646
10 and under 15	247
15 and under 20	68
20 and under 25	23
25 and under 30	5
30 and over	1
Total	1,784

[1] Excluding 68 murderers recalled following an earlier release on licence.

[2] The figures are those recorded centrally and are approximate.

[3] Excluding any time spent on remand in custody or in non-prison department establishments.

Football Matches (Policing Costs)

Mr. Fallon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will estimate the net annual costs to public funds of policing Football League matches.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The information on which to base such an estimate is not available centrally. It is for police authorities to determine the charges for providing police officers for duty inside the ground and to ensure that, so far as possible, they recover the full cost.

Young Offenders (Fines on Parents)

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many orders have been made by the courts imposing financial penalties on parents for crimes committed by children in their care, in each of the last five years.

Mr. John Patten: The readily available information, which may be incomplete, is given in table 7.16 of "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales 1986" (Cm. 233), a copy of which is in the Library.

EC (Time Zones)

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the member states of the European Community which broadly operate on the same time zone as the United Kingdom and those one and two hours in advance, respectively, together with their total respective populations and the total population living in advanced time zones in Europe west of the Greenwich meridian.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The information requested is as follows:

	Population (million)
Same Time Zone as United Kingdom
Republic of Ireland	3·5
United Kingdom	56·1
	59·6
One hour in advance of United Kingdom
Belgium	9·9
Denmark	5·1
France	54·6
Germany	61·0
Italy	57·1
Luxembourg	0·4
Netherlands	14·5
Portugal	10·2
Spain	38·6
	251·3
Two hours in advance of United Kingdom
Greece	9·9

It is not possible to estimate, save at disproportionate cost, how many people in Portugal and parts of Spain and France live to the west of the Greenwich meridian.

Equal Opportunities

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will list all the complaints made to the Equal Opportunities Commission of discrimination against women in the last five years, together with the names of the complainant and the organisation complained against and the subsequent outcome; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will list all the complaints of discrimination in employment made to the Commission for Racial Equality in the last five years, together with the names of the complainant and the organisation complained against and the subsequent outcome; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: Information about complaints made to the Equal Opportunities Commission and the Commission for Racial Equality is, consistent with considerations of confidentiality, included in the commissions' annual reports, copies of which are in the Library. It is not possible to list details of the complaints because in many cases this would involve a breach of confidentiality between the individual and the commission.

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list for the past five years for which figures are available the bodies investigated by (i) the Commission for Racial Equality and (ii) the Equal Opportunities Commission, and the subsequent outcome.

Mr. John Patten: Information about the formal investigations conducted under the powers contained in section 48 of the Race Relations Act 1976 and section 57 of the Sex Discrimination Act is included in the annual reports of the Commission for Racial Equality and Equal Opportunities Commission, copies of which are in the Library.

Fires in the Home

Mr. Clelland: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he has taken, following publication of the report in the "Fire and Safety Journal 12 (1987)" on housing factors and fires in two metropolitan boroughs, to reduce the incidence of fires in the home.

Mr. John Patten: The findings of the report corroborate the approach which the Home Office has followed in directing its fire precautions publicity primarily at those groups most at risk from fire in the home. Local authority fire brigades use Home Office printed publicity extensively especially when associated with television, radio or press advertising campaigns designed to target selectively the most vulnerable groups. New ways of directing fire precautions advice to those most at risk are being explored.

Fire Services (Clwyd)

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will increase funding for fire services to Clwyd county council to a level sufficient to ensure that the Buckley fire station does not close and that the Queensferry station does not suffer cutbacks; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to his question on 8 March, at column 109, by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Panamanian Consulate, London

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis as to who was in possession of the Panamanian consulate premises in London when the police responded to an alleged bomb scare; what advice was given to them; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis as to the date and the time at which the message was received by the Metropolitan police that a bomb had been placed in the Panamanian consulate premises in London; who received the message; who was consulted; what action was taken; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: A telephone call was received by British Telecom at 11 pm on 2 March from an unknown male who stated that there was a bomb at the Panamanian consulate in Tudor street, London, EC4. The message was passed at 11.2 pm to New Scotland Yard and the City of London police were alerted immediately. There were two security guards on the premises who were advised in accordance with normal practice that the decision whether the consulate should be evacuated and searched, with police assistance, rested with them.

RUC (Chief Constable)

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what communications Sir Lawrence Byford, the Chief Inspector of Constabulary, had with Sir John Hermon, the Chief Constable of the Royal Ulster Constabulary, in May 1986; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hurd: I understand from Sir Lawrence Byford that there were none.

RUC (Stalker Inquiry)

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he received up to 31 May 1986 about the implications for the morale and efficiency of the Royal Ulster Constabulary of the inquiries being conducted by Mr. John Stalker; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: None. My right hon. Friend has no responsibilities for either the morale or the efficiency of the Royal Ulster Constabulary.

Criminal Injuries Compensation Board

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if there has been any improvement since the answer of 20 November 1987, Official Report, column 716, in the length of time taken by the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board to process cases; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: The latest annual report of the board, (Cm. 265), copies of which are in the Library, shows at paragraph 7 that 50 per cent. of cases resolved in the financial year 1986-87 were decided within a year of application. The increase in the time taken to resolve cases reflects the backlog of cases caused by a large rise in applications over recent years.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if, when he next meets the chairman of the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board, he will raise with him the reasons for the number of apologies sent to applicants because of delays in dealing with cases; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: Delays in dealing with applications arise from the board's substantially increased work load over the last few years. The number of applications received in 1986-87 was about 42,300, higher than in any previous year and about 2,500 more than in 1985-86. To help reduce the delays in dealing with applications the Government provided £77 million for the criminal injuries compensation scheme in the Estimates for this financial year — an increase of £33 million over previously planned provision — and plan to make £81 million available in 1988-89 and £89 million in 1989-90. This increased privision will finance a rise in the number of compensation payments and has enabled the board to recruit 90 additional staff at its new office in Glasgow who will help to deal with the backlog of claims.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Miss Elena Gurevich

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will raise the case of Miss Elena Gurevich of Moscow with the Government of the Soviet Union; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: We regularly raise the plight of refuseniks with the Soviet authorities and shall continue to do so. We understand that Elena Gurevich may already have received permission to leave the Soviet Union.

Panama

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions have taken place between Her Majesty's Government and the Government of the United States of America in respect of the current situation in Panama.

Mr. Eggar: The situation in Panama has been discussed in the course of our normal contacts with the United States Government.

Antarctic Treaty

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his policy for consolidating Britain's long-term presence in the British Antarctic territory in advance of the revision of the Antarctic treaty in 1991; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: There is no automatic requirement for the Antarctic treaty to be reviewed in or after 1991. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Science announced on 13 November 1987, at column 322, additional funding totalling £30 million over the period 1988-89 to 1990-91 for the British Antarctic Survey (BAS), funded through the Natural Environment Research Council. The greater part of this provision will purchase a research and supply ship to replace RRS John Biscoe. The new vessel will make important contributions to research in the Southern ocean and will support more scientists in Antarctica. Halley and Signy stations will be rebuilt, and a fourth Twin Otter purchased to augment the BAS fleet.

Moscow (Ministerial Visit)

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if, pursuant to his answer of 7 March, he will list the eight individuals whose cases were raised by Mr. Shevardnadze during his recent visit to Moscow.

Mr. Mellor: It is not our practice to reveal details of individual prisoners without their consent.

DEFENCE

Greenham Common

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what action he proposes to take to compensate Greenham Common peace women who have been convicted through the use of Ministry of Defence byelaws which have been ruled by Mr. Justice Lait at Reading Crown court as being invalid.

Mr. Freeman: I have nothing to add at this stage to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen) on 3 March 1988 at column 687.

Dual-capable Aircraft

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 23 February Official Report, column 142, if he will list the three types of dual-capable aircraft currently in service with the Royal Air Force.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The three types of dual capable aircraft currently in service with the Royal Air Force are the Tornado, the Buccaneer and the Nimrod.

Ferry Dispute (Use of Naval Vessels)

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the circumstances in which Royal Navy vessels were used to convey passengers to the Isle of Arran during the current ferry dispute; on whose authority they were used; and at what cost.

Mr. Ian Stewart: On 5 March a request was received from a field study centre on the Isle of Arran for RN assistance in transporting to the island a group of schoolchildren who had travelled from all over the United Kingdom to participate in a course at the centre.

This was a last minute request as, it was claimed, an industrial dispute had prevented the children from travelling on the Caledonian MacBrayne ferry. Commodore Clyde authorised the use of RMAS fleet tender Cricklade which was already in the area and able to fit the task into its planned programme. There was, therefore, no extra cost to public funds.

Vanguard Submarine (Loss)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when, pursuant to his answer of 7 March, Official Report, column 60, he expects his inquiry into the loss of pieces of a Vanguard submarine on 5 to 6 February to be completed.

Mr. Sainsbury: The inquiry referred to is being carried out by the company concerned and not by my Department, but I expect to be able to give further information shortly.

Racial Discrimination

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many complaints of racial discrimination have been taken to the Commission for Racial Equality in respect of soldiers serving in the British Army; and how many have been found to be proven;

(2) how many complaints of racial discrimination have been taken to the Commission for Racial Equality in respect of soldiers serving in the Prince of Wale's Division; and how many have been found to be proven.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 9 March 1988]: Under the Race Relations Act 1976 the Race Relations Board and the Community Relations Commission were replaced by the Commission for Racial Equality. Section 75(8) and (9) of that Act provides that a complaint of racial discrimination which is made by a person subject to the Service Discipline Acts and which is concerned with any aspect of that person's service in the armed forces will be dealt with under the redress of grievance machinery provided for in the Service Discipline Acts. There have been no cases of redress of grievance of a racial nature which have been referred to the Ministry of Defence.

TRANSPORT

British Rail (Financial Support)

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to change present levels of financial support for British Rail in the light of increasing demand for rail services.

Mr. David Mitchell: The objectives agreed with the chairman of the British Railways Board in October 1986 provide for a reduction in public service obligation grant to the board to £555 million (at 1986-87 prices) in 1989-90. Increasing demand reflects well on the board's efforts to improve the quality and marketing of its services, and rising revenues from passengers make a valuable contribution towards reducing the cost to the taxpayer.

EC (Rail Transport)

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what response the Government are making to the call by the Economic and Social Committee of the European Economic Community in April 1987, repeated at the Mannheim conference in October 1987, for member states to quantify and apply in their transport policies the environmental, energy and safety advantages of rail over road transport; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: The Government do not at present intend to respond formally to the views expressed by the Economic and Social Committee, since it is for the EC Commission to decide whether to submit proposals for Community legislation to the Council of Ministers.

However, the Government accept that where investment in the grant-aided passenger railway would have significant benefits for the community, for example in reducing road congestion by attracting more passengers to the railway, and which could not be paid for through fares, those benefits should be included in the project appraisal. Furthermore, the Government recognise the substantial environmental benefits that the transfer of road freight to rail can give in certain circumstances. Grants are available from the Government under section 8 of the Railways Act 1974 for consignors towards the capital cost of the necessary facilities, where without grant the proper decision would be to use road.

Public Service Vehicles

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if his Department proposes to seek to amend the requirements for a public service vehicle licence for vehicles so as to include those carrying 11 or more people; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: I have no plans to amend the current requirement that anyone who operates a vehicle with more than eight passenger seats has to comply with the licensing requirements for public service vehicles unless they are specifically exempted.

Departmental Contracts

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has any plans to monitor the ethnic and gender composition of staff employed by companies contracted to provide goods and services to his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: No.

Rail Freight

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give the total value and tonnage of freight carried by British Rail in Scotland (ScotRail) in each of the years from 1979-80 to 1986-87; what percentage of this was from the supply of coal to Scottish power stations: and what percentage of British Rail's (a) total income and (b) freight income this represents for each of these years.

Mr. David Mitchell: This information is not available.

Brockworth Bypass

Mr. Marland: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he is yet able to announce the date for the public inquiry into the Brockworth bypass.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Recent work has indicated that there may be a need for some redesign to the junction layouts, on account of both objections received and the latest estimates of traffic growth. I have deferred the arrangements for an inquiry while these points are considered further. I shall make a further statement as soon as I can.

Ferry Safety

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on his discussions with British ferry owners about the safety of ferries.

Mr. Channon: My officials hold regular meetings with British ferry owners to discuss the Government's ferry safety programme. I am glad to say that the General Council of British Shipping, and British ferry owners generally, have been co-operating fully with the Government in the implementation of this programme.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport which recommendations of Mr. Justice Sheen regarding older ferries he has decided not to implement; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Channon: None. I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Dover (Mr. Shaw) on 3 March, at column 653, in which I stated the current position in relation to roll-on/roll-off ferries built before 1980.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give details of the number of inspections performed by marine inspectors (a) in the two years prior to the sinking of the Herald of Free Enterprise and (b) since that date to the latest date for which information is available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Channon: In the two-year two-month period prior to the sinking of the Herald of Free Enterprise 1,501 inspections of United Kingdom ships and 5,823 inspections of foreign ships were made. From 6 March 1987 to 29 February 1988, 1,178 inspections of United Kingdom ships and 2,256 inspections of foreign ships were made.

Settle-Carlisle Railway

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what recent representations he has received on the future of the Settle to Carlisle railway line; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: I continue to receive many representations from Members of this House, local authorities and others with an interest in this Line. I expect that a decision will be announced very shortly now.

CIVIL SERVICE

Management Reform

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service if he will make a statement on the effects upon the delivery of service to the public of the recently announced reforms in the management of the Civil Service.

Mr. Luce: The aim of the "Next Steps" proposals is to produce a better service to the public and the Government by improving management in the Civil Service. Better management should lead to improved value for money for the taxpayer.

Former Crown Servants

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service whether he will publish a further report on business appointments of former Crown servants.

Mr. Luce: I have today placed copies of a statistical report entitled "Acceptance of Outside Appointments by Crown Servants—1987" in the Libraries of Parliament.

Discretionary Pay

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service if he will make a statement about the discretionary pay scheme for grades 2 and 3 staff in the home Civil Service.

Mr. Luce: My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister announced on 23 April 1987 the introduction of a scheme of discretionary increments for staff in grades 2 and 3 and said that the increments would be in payment with effect from 1 October 1987. Awards have been made to 27 Grade 2s and 84 grade 3s (respectively 20 and 17 per cent. of all those in each grade). The cost of the awards in the current financial year is £117,750, equivalent to £235,500 in a full year, or about 1 per cent. of the annual pay bill for the grades concerned.

THE ARTS

East Durham Arts Committee

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he will visit the county of Durham to meet the East Durham Arts Committee.

Mr. Luce: I have no immediate plans to do so.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Departmental Buildings

Mr. Cran: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list the location and status of all buildings within his Department located in London, and the annual cost of rents, rates and maintenance of each.

Mr. Butcher: I would refer my hon. Friend to the answer given on 3 March, by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Environment. In the case of the Department of Trade and Industry, the Department occupies accommodation in 23 buildings in the London postal area, ranging from its main HQ building at 1-19 Victoria street, down to the small offices of the inner city task forces. The following list gives the name and location of these buildings.

Department of Trade and Industry

GEC-Plessey Merger

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the merger of GEC and Plessey.

Mr. Maude: On 29 January my right hon. and noble Friend the Secretary of State announced his decision not to refer to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission the proposal by GEC and Plessey to establish a joint venture company to handle the telecommunications interests of both companies. His decision was in accordance with the advice of the Director General of Fair Trading.

My right hon. and noble Friend has asked the Director General to negotiate with GEC modifications to the undertakings given by GEC following the MMC's report of August 1986 on the proposed merger between GEC and Plessey, to the extent that such modifications are necessary in order to allow the proposed joint venture to proceed.

Clothing Industry (Grants)

Mr. Jack Thompson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list the Government grants available to the clothing industry in areas with full development and intermediate development status.

Mr. Atkins: The clothing industry is eligible for a range of Government assistance which is available to firms through my Department in development and intermediate areas, namely, regional selective assistance, and in development areas (as from 1 April 1988) investment and innovation grants for firms with fewer than 25 employees. (Until 31 March 1988 firms in development areas may apply for regional development grant.)

In addition, the clothing industry is able to benefit from assistance which is available on a national basis under the enterprise initiative: grants towards consultancy under the business development initiatives (available at a higher rate in assisted and urban programme areas); and support for exporting, collaborative research, and partnerships between manufacturing companies and higher education institutions.

Business Development Initiative

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) if he will estimate the amount of expenditure on the business development initiative (support for consultancy services) to be paid out in Scotland for each year 1988-89, 1989-90 and 1990-91;

(2) if he will estimate the amount of expenditure of the business development initiative (consultancy services) to be paid out in each of the standard English regions and Wales, for each year 1988-89, 1989-90 and 1990-91;

(3) if he will estimate the amount of expenditure on the business development initiative (consultancy services) in assisted areas and non-assisted areas for each of the years 1988-89, 1989-90 and 1990-91.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Spending on the consultancy initiatives in each region will depend on the response of firms to them. We are giving additional encouragement to firms in assisted areas and urban programme areas through a higher rate of support. The public expenditure White Paper (Cm. 288) does not make provision for spending in regions separately. Total provision is £74 million in 1988-89, £91 million in 1989-90 and £109 million in 1990-91.

Business Innovation Grant Scheme

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) if he will estimate the amount of expenditure on the businesss innovation grant scheme to be paid out in Scotland for each year 1988-89, 1989-90 and 1990-91;

(2) if he will estimate the amount of expenditure on the business innovation grant scheme to be paid out in each of the standard English regions and Wales for each year 1988-89, 1989-90 and1990-91;

(3) if he will estimate the amount of expenditure on the business investment grant to be paid out in each of the standard English regions and Wales for each of the years 1988-89, 1989-90 and 1990-91.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The new grants for small firms employing fewer than 25 to help finance investment and innovation projects will be available from 1 April in the development areas (DAs) of Great Britain. My Department is responsible for expenditure on investment projects in English DAs and for expenditure on innovation projects in DAs in England, Scotland and Wales. The public expenditure White Paper includes provision of £14 million in 1988-89, £42 million in 1989-90 and £55 million in 1990-91 for DTI expenditure on new incentives for the development areas which form part of the enterprise initiative. The provision for Wales is contained within the Welsh Office expenditure plans for industry, energy, trade and employment, which are £194 million for 1988-89, £180 million for 1989-90 and £180 million for 1990-91.

The amount of expenditure which will be paid out in any particular area will depend on demand for the scheme and the appraisal of individual applications.

Shipbuilding (State Aid)

Mr. Page: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what action has been taken by the European Commission on the state aid offered by the French authorities to secure a contract to build a ship for Brittany Ferries in a French yard.

Mr. Atkins: In January 1987 we asked the European Commission to investigate any state aid the French authorities might offer to secure an order for a cross-Channel ferry for Brittany Ferries from Chantier Navales de L'Atlantique. The opportunity for this was article 4(5) of the new sixth directive on aid to shipbuilding. British Shipbuilders Govan yard was bidding for this order, as was a Dutch yard. French entry late in the competition followed the loss of another order by its yard.

The Commission has now written to the French authorities to say that the aid that they proposed to make available in support of this order contravenes the sixth directive and must be trimmed to the level that would have been available in support of an order from Holland. The result is that the French yard is set to suffer a significant loss, since it decided to proceed with building in advance of the Commission's decision. Although the Commission is not in a position to prevent orders being taken, the result is a salutary warning to other yards of the dangers of contracting in advance of decisions on cases referred to the Commission. I welcome the decision as an important step in securing fair competition among Community shipbuilders.

Motor Auctions

Mr. Allen McKay: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what action he intends to take to protect the interest of consumers attending motor auctions in circumstances which preclude many of the civil claims which purchasers would otherwise enjoy against fraudulent dealers.

Mr. Butcher: No action is being contemplated. Vendors at auction who are acting in the course of business are subject to the requirements of the Sale of Goods Act 1979 and the Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977. Such vendors cannot restrict or exclude a purchaser's rights in respect of faulty goods by reference to a contract term, unless the term satisfied the requirement of reasonableness set out in the 1977 Act.

Mr. Allen McKay: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what measures exist to ensure that motor auctioneers maintain sufficiently accurate records to enable police and trading standard officers to carry out their statutory duties relating to dangerous, misdescribed or stolen vehicles.

Mr. Butcher: Although there is no specific legal requirement for motor auctioneers to maintain records about the vehicles which pass through their hands, I understand that the majority of them do so, and the Society of Motor Auctions requires this of its members.

Motor Trade (Abuses)

Mr. Allen McKay: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what action he proposes to take arising as a result of his meeting with the Director General of Fair Trading, representatives of the local authority organisations, the motor industry and consumer groups.

Mr. Butcher: It was agreed at that meeting that it was desirable to amend section 60 of the Road Traffic Act 1972 to make it easier for trading standards officers to deal with the sellers of unroadworthy vehicles. It was also agreed that a number of other suggestions to help combat the sale of unroadworthy vehicles and the fraudulent alteration of odometers would be examined further. My Department and the Department of Transport are keeping in touch with the Office of Fair Trading and the various interested parties will be kept informed of progress on this matter.

Mr. Allen McKay: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what legislative measures he intends taking to control fraud dishonesty and negligence in the used car trade as highlighted in recent reports published by local authority associations and the Consumers Association on abuses in the motor trade.

Mr. Butcher: Fraud, dishonesty and negligence are already extensively controlled by the criminal and civil law and I do not consider that any major new legislative measures are necessary or desirable. However, my Department and the Department of Transport are looking at a number of suggestions for making the existing law easier to enforce and apply.

Regional Aid

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will publish in the Official Report the amount of regional preferential assistance paid to each standard region of England, Scotland and Wales in 1986-87, identifying separately the main forms of assistance; and if he will publish equivalent data for each year since 1978-79.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 8 March 1988]: The information requested is as follows:

[1] All figures are gross and include payments to nationalised industries.
[2] The Great Britain total for individual forms of assistance may not always equal the sum of the component parts due to the inclusion of items which cannot be allocated to regions, and because of rounding.
[3] Includes expenditure in Cumbria, otherwise shown within the totals for the northern region.

The items included in the expenditure are: regional development grants and regional selective assistance; expenditure on land and factories by the English Industrial Estates Corporation, the Scottish and the Welsh Development Agencies; and expenditure on land and factories and grants by the Development Board for Rural Wales, and the Highlands and Islands Development Board.

EMPLOYMENT

Industrial Accidents

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) how many people suffered industrial accidents from which they were (a) temporarily and (b) permanently injured (i) in the Northern regional health authority area and (ii) nationally, during the period 1979 to 1987;

(2) how many people died as a result of industrial accidents (a) in the Northern regional health authority area and (b) nationally, during the period 1979 to 1987.

Mr. Nicholls: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Oldham, West (Mr. Meacher) on 16 December 1987, at column 578, in which I gave the available national information on reported industrial accidents. Figures for the Northern regional health authority could be provided only at disproportionate costs.

Industrial Diseases

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people died as the result of recognised industrial diseases (a) in the Northern regional health authority area and (b) nationally, during the period 1979 to 1987.

Mr. Nicholls: The latest statistics available show 7,181 deaths in Great Britain during the period 1979 to 1986 which can be attributed to recognised industrial diseases. This figure has been obtained by combining figures for death benefit awards under the industrial injuries and pneumoconiosis, byssinosis and miscellaneous diseases benefit schemes with figures of certifications that death was due to pneumoconiosis made under the workers' compensation scheme. I regret that there are no separate figures for the Northern regional health authority.

Wages

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information he has as to the annual percentage increase in real wages in (a) the United Kingdom, (b) France, (c) Germany, (d) the United States of America, and (e) Japan in each year since 1979; and what has been the aggregate percentage increase in real wages in each of these countries over the period 1979 to 1987.

Mr. Lee: The following table sets out the available information published by the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development covering real earnings in manufacturing industry. Figures for 1987 are not yet available.

Real Hourly Earnings in Manufacturing[4]
Year to Year percentage changes

	1979	1980	1981	1982	1983	1984	1985	1986	Aggregate percentage change 1979-86

Notes:
[1] United Kingdom figures are based on average weekly earnings.
[2] France's figures are based on hourly rates of pay.
[3] Japan's figures are based on monthly earnings.
[4] International comparisons of real hourly earnings in the economy as a whole are not available.

Labour Costs

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information he has as to the percentage annual change in unit labour costs in manufacturing in each year since 1979 in (a) the United Kingdom, (b) France, (c) West Germany, (d) the United States of America and (e) Japan.

Mr. Lee: The following table sets out the available information. Annual figures for 1987 are not yet available:

Unit labour costs in manufacturing
Percentage change on previous year

	United Kingdom	France	Germany	United States	Japan
1979	18	8	3	10	0
1980	22	15	8	12	0
1981	9	12	5	7	4
1982	3	11	3	6	−1
1983	1	8	−1	−2	−2
1984	2	6	1	−2	−4
1985	3	5	2	0	−2
1986	4	2	3	0	1

Notes:
1. The percentages are calculated from index series produced by the International Monetary Fund, except for Great Britain, figures for which are published in the Employment Gazette.
2. The source index series are in local currency and are not adjusted for exchange rate changes.

Middlesbrough and Hartlepool (Dock Labour Scheme)

Mr. Gregory: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many permanent registered dock workers in the Middlesbrough and Hartlepool dock labour board area in each year from 1980 to 1986 have been dismissed by their employer for an offence justifying summary dismissal under the disciplinary provisions of the dock labour scheme; how many of these men have been reinstated by order of the local dock labour board and appeal tribunals; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls [holding answer 7 March 1988]: The figures requested are as follows:

	1980	1981	1982	1983	1984	1985	1986
Permanent workers dismissed for offence justifying summary dismissal	4	13	1	—	—	—	—

	1980	1981	1982	1983	1984	1985	1986
Reinstated by order of Middlesbrough and Hartlepool Dock Labour Board and Appeal Tribunals	1	2	1	—	—	—	—
Dismissal upheld by Middlesbrough and Hartlepool Dock Labour Board and Appeal Tribunals	3	—	—	—	—	—	—

[1] 1 worker resigned before his case was considered.

Community Programme

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give the number of places on the community programme sponsored by the voluntary sector, local authorities and private industry for each of the years 1986-87 and 1987-88 and for Scotland, England and Wales.

Mr. Nicholls [holding answer 25 February 1988]: The information requested is provided in the following table. The table shows the approximate numbers of authorised community programme places at November 1986 and at October 1987, the latest date for which figures are available.

Numbers of authorised community programme places

		Voluntary Sector		Local Authorities		Private Sector
	County Total	Total	Percentage	Total	Percentage	Total	Percentage
Scotland November 1986	36,900	12,900	35	22,900	62	150	0·4
Scotland October 1987	35,300	14,100	40	20,100	57	210	0·6
Wales November 1986	25,900	13,000	50	12,100	47	260	1
Wales October 1987	24,800	11,900	48	12,200	49	300	1
England November 1986	223,100	124,900	56	87,000	39	4,910	2
England October 1987	210,400	113,600	54	82,100	39	6,100	3

Note:
The totals in the three categories do not sum to 100 per cent. because small numbers of places are sponsored by other types of organisations.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Republic of Ireland (Students)

Mr. McCusker: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many students from Northern Ireland are presently studying in the Irish Republic; and what is the estimated cost of their tuition fees for 1987-88.

Dr. Mawhinney: Some 489 such students attend full-time further and higher education courses at an estimated cost of £505,000.

Police Authority

Mr. McCusker: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he hopes to announce a reconstituted Police Authority for Northern Ireland; if any of the nominations have been made by the Government of the Irish Republic; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tom King: The reconstitution of the Police Authority for Northern Ireland will be announced before the term of office of the present authority expires on 28 June 1988. The process of obtaining nominations is not yet complete.

Mr. Brendan Burns

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give the reasons why the request for the extradition of Brendan Burns failed.

Mr. Tom King [holding answer 7 March 1988]: The original warrants for the extradition of Brendan Burns were held to be defective.

Factory (Shrigley, Co. Down)

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what efforts he is making to secure a new tenant for the factory at Shrigley, county Down, owned by Pettard Garnor plc; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will list the dates and amounts of Government grants made by the Industrial Development Board, Northern Ireland, to Garnar Booth plc in the fiscal year 1986-87, and in the period from 1 April 1987 to 28 February 1988;

(3) what discussions he has had or proposes to have with Pittard Garnar about the proposed closure of its factory at Shrigley, Killyleagh; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Viggers [holding answer 8 March 1988]: No grants have been made by the Industrial Development Board for Northern Ireland to either Garnar Booth plc or Pittard Garnar plc in relation to the wholly owned subsidiary Atlantic Tanning Company Ltd., Killyleagh. However, in the period mentioned a total sum of £225,803·11 was made direct by the Industrial Development Board to the Atlantic Tanning Company Ltd. under two separate offers of financial assistance agreed in 1986.

Pittard Garnar plc and the Industrial Development Board are co-operating in the search for alternative uses for the site at Shrigley, Killyleagh. A number of discussions have already taken place with interested parties and more are scheduled. It is too early yet to say if any of these discussions will prove fruitful. All avenues will be explored.

I have not had any discussions with Pittard Garnar plc. I was fully aware of the negotiations which the Industrial Development Board was conducting with Pittard Garnar plc and of its offer to support any viable recovery plan for the Atlantic Tanning Company Ltd. In the event Pittard Garnar plc has made it clear that the decision to cease production at its operation in Killyleagh was taken for wholly commercial reasons.

Environmentally Sensitive Areas

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland why the designation of environmentally sensitive areas in Northern Ireland has been delayed; when he expects the first formal designation to be made; and what plans he has for further designations in the Province.

Mr. Viggers [holding answer 8 March 1988]: The delay in designating environmentally sensitive areas (ESAs) in Northern Ireland has been caused by the need to introduce primary legislation to enable such designations to take place, and by the lengthy consultations with the EC Commission to ensure that the proposals for the Province's first ESA would be acceptable for approval under EC regulation 797/85. A statutory rule is presently being prepared and it is expected that the Mourne mountains and Slieve croob ESA will be formally designated in the near future.

One more ESA is planned in the present round of designations. Recommendations that an area of north-east Antrim (The Glens) is worthy of ESA status are being considered.

Social Security Reform

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what will be (a) the last date of payment of family income supplement and the period covered by such payment, (b) the first date of payment of family credit for those currently in receipt of family income supplement and the period covered by such payment and (c) the first date of payment of family credit to those not presently in receipt of family income supplement and the period covered by such payment.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 9 March 1988]: The last payment of family income supplement will be made on 5 April 1988 to Sunday 10 April 1988. Although the period covered is six days, the payment will be a full week's benefit.

The first payment of family credit for those currently in receipt of family income supplement will be made on 12 April 1988. This will be a full week's payment but will in effect be made simply to cover the transitional gap of one day (11 April).

The first payment of family credit for those not currently in receipt of family income supplement will be made on 19 April 1988 and this payment will cover the period from Tuesday 12 April 1988 to Monday 18 April 1988.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Expenditure

Mr. Allen: To ask the Lord President of the Council what steps he has taken to satisfy himself of the cost-effectiveness of expenditure in connection with the House for which Ministers are responsible.

Mr. Wakeham: The cost-effectiveness of expenditure on departmental votes incurred in relation to the work of this House is the responsibility of the individual Ministers concerned. Any proposals for such expenditure are subject to normal parliamentary scrutiny and control.

Efficiency Scrutiny

Mr. Allen: To ask the hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed, as representing the House of Commons Commission, if the House of Commons Commission will arrange for an efficiency scrutiny of the House; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Beith: The efficient working of the staff of the House is scrutinised on a continuing basis by the Board of Management, and by the Staff Inspectorate and the Internal Auditor, both of whom report directly to the Commission. Authority for additional expenditure or services must be obtained from the Accounting Officer and be approved by the Commission.

After a comprehensive series of inspections, a unified pay and grading structure has been agreed with the trade unions representing staff of the House, which contributes to the requirements of the House of Commons Administration Act that pay and conditions of staff of the House are kept broadly in line with those in the Home Civil Service.

The Staff Inspector has now been instructed to conduct a rolling programme of reviews of specific areas of the work of the House Departments; and this rolling programme will be reviewed every six months. An important part of the Staff Inspector's reviews is, of course, to examine the efficient and economical use of resources.

Group Accident Insurance

Mr. Wallace: To ask the hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed, as representing the House of Commons Commission, what changes have been made to hon. Members' group accident insurance arrangements.

Mr. Beith: The death and capital benefits available under the terms of the policy have been increased to £113,000 as from 1 January 1988. The memorandum by the Accountant, which gives details of the cover and exclusions, is held in the Library.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Economic Policy

12. Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what criteria he uses in deciding the relative priority to be accorded to (a) cutting income tax rates; (b) increasing expenditure on overseas aid to the level of the United Kingdom commitment to 0·7 per cent. of gross national product.

Mr. Major: The latest plans show increased provision for the overseas aid programme, which is now projected to grow by 3 per cent. in real terms between 1986-87 and 1990-91.

25. Sir John Farr: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of the economy he estimates will remain in public hands at the end of the next parliamentary Session.

Mr. Norman Lamont: No decision has yet been taken on the timing of future asset sales.

Group of Five

15. Mr. Haselhurst: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he next expects to meet his counterparts in the group of five major industrial countries; and what matters will be discussed.

37. Mr. Harris: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he next expects to meet his counterparts in the group of five major industrial countries.

51. Mr. Yeo: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he next expects to meet his counterparts in the group of five major industrial countries.

Mr. Lawson: I expect to see my Finance Minister colleagues at the IMF Interim Committee in Washington next month.

VAT (Hospital Radio Equipment)

16. Mr. Amess: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent representations he has had on value added tax on hospital radio broadcasting equipment.

Mr. Lilley: My right hon. Friend has received no further representations since the reply I gave to my hon. Friend on 12 February.

Special Car Tax

17. Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received seeking the abolition of the special car tax.

Mr. Lilley: My right hon. Friend has received a number of representations on this subject.

North Sea Oil

18. Mr. Doran: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest estimate of North sea oil revenue from all sources for each year up to 1991.

61. Mr. Worthington: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest estimate of North sea oil revenue from all sources for each year up to 1991.

Mr. Major: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor will be publishing revised projections at the time of the Budget.

Nationalised Industries

19. Mr. Gill: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a comprehensive list of the subsidiary and associate companies of the 10 major industries remaining in state ownership.

Mr. Norman Lamont: This information can be found in the annual report and accounts of the industries which are available in the Library.

EC Council of Ministers

20. Mr. Knox: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he next proposes to have discussions with the European Community Council of Ministers about European monetary matters.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The next meeting of the European Community's Council of Economic and Finance Ministers is expected to be on 18 April. The agenda for the meeting has not yet been decided but is expected to cover the liberalisation of capital movements in the Community.

Pay Increases

21. Mr. John M. Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what level of pay rise would be required by the average employee paying tax in order to compensate for price increases over the past year.

Mr. Lilley: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer my right hon. Friend the Chancellor gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Dover (Mr. Shaw).

Budget Policy

22. Mr. Turner: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received concerning cuts in the higher rate of income tax and expenditure on the National Health Service.

57. Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received concerning cuts in the higher rate of income tax and expenditure on the National Health Service.

Mr. Norman Lamont: My right hon. Friend has received a large number of representations on a wide variety of subjects.

67. Mr. Bidwell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received from organisations urging priority for an emergency programme of public expenditure over further cuts in income and corporation tax.

Mr. Norman Lamont: My right hon. Friend has received very few.

Alcohol (Duty)

23. Mr. Colvin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has any plans to discuss with the Council of Finance Ministers of the European Community duty on alcoholic beverages; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley: The Economic and Finance Council will discuss the European Commission's package of proposals for tax approximation, which includes provision for the harmonisation of excise duty rates, in the light of the report of its Economic Policy Committee which is expected in the spring.

Business Expansion Scheme

24. Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has recently received in relation to the taxation provisions for investment under the business expansion scheme.

Mr. Norman Lamont: My right hon. Friend has received a number of representations.

VAT

26. Mr. Archer: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has made to the European Commission on the subject of the proposed harmonisation of value added tax; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lawson: I refer the right hon. and learned Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Wrexham (Dr. Marek) on 8 December at column 73.

Confederation of British Industry

27. Mr. Murphy: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he last met the director general of the Confederation of British Industry; and what was discussed.

48. Mr. Mullin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he last met the director general of the Confederation of British Industry; and what matters were discussed.

96. Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he last met the director general of the Confederation of British Industry; and what was discussed.

Mr. Major: My right hon. Friend last met the director general of the Confederation of British Industry at the meeting of the National Economic Development Council on Wednesday 13 January. The council discussed the outlook for the economy; a report on the knitting industry; and international competitiveness, research and development.

Manufactured Goods and Services

28. Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has a revised figure for the anticipated balance of trade in (a) manufactured goods and (b) services for the United Kingdom for the current year; and what was the figure for 1979.

Mr. Major: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer will be making a new forecast for the current year at Budget time. In 1979 the balance of trade in manufactured goods showed a surplus of £2,698 million and services a surplus of £3,815 million.

Balance of Payments

29. Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on his current estimates of the balance of payments for the United Kingdom in the present, and the next, financial years.

Mr. Major: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer will be making a forecast at Budget time.

Income Tax

30. Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many representations he has received in the last six months regarding the top rate of income tax; and, of these, how many favoured a reduction.

Mr. Norman Lamont: My right hon. Friend has received a number of representations favouring a reduction.

49. Mr. Hardy: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the total annual benefit from reductions in direct taxation for a taxpayer with gross annual earned income of £100,000 since 1980.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The tax liability of a married man earning £100,000 per year with no allowances or reliefs other than the married man's allowance is £44 less in 1987-88 than it would be if the 1980-81 tax regime had been retained and indexed by the statutory formula to 1987-88.

Economic Growth

31. Mr. Hanley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest estimate of the growth in the non-oil economy in 1987.

80. Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest estimate of the growth in the non-oil economy in 1987.

Mr. Major: Preliminary estimates suggest that non-oil output rose by over 5 per cent. in 1987 compared to 1986.

Inflation

32. Mr. Andrew MacKay: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the average figure for retail price inflation over the past five years.

38. Mr. Colin Shepherd: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the average figure for retail price inflation over the past five years.

Mr. Lilley: About 4·6 per cent.

Budget Statement

33. Ms. Abbot: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many representations he has received from local authorities and local authority associations regarding his financial statement; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: My right hon. Friend has received very few.

Credit Cards

34. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has any plans to seek to control the use of credit cards.

Mr. Lilley: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer that I gave the hon. Member for Western Isles (Mr. Macdonald) on 14 January at column 386.

Gross Domestic Product

35. Mr. Ashby: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the growth of gross domestic product over the latest full year for which figures are available.

56. Mr. Hayward: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the growth of gross domestic product over the latest full year for which figures are available.

Mr. Major: We do not have estimates for the income and expenditure measures of GDP for the whole of 1987. In the first three quarters of 1987 the average measure of GDP was 4 per cent. higher than in the same period a year earlier.

41. Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how the growth of real gross domestic product in the United Kingdom compares with that of the other major industrial countries over the latest year for which figures are available.

81. Mr. Stevens: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how the growth of real gross domestic product in the United Kingdom compares with that of the other major industrial countries over the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Lilley: Total output in the United Kingdom grew by more than 4 per cent. over the year to the first three quarters of 1987. This is faster than any other major industrialised country.

Industrial Investment

36. Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what action he proposes to take to stimulate investment in British industry.

89. Dr. Moonie: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what action he proposes to take to stimulate investment in British industry.

Mr. major: The Government's economic policies will continue to encourage capital investment by promoting an environment in which business can prosper.

Forestry

39. Mr. Pike: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has recently received in relation to the taxation regime for forestry development.

42. Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent representations he has received concerning the present taxation status of forestry development.

46. Mr. Darling: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent representations he has received concerning the present taxation status of forestry development.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I refer the hon. Members to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Denton and Reddish (Mr. Bennett) on 11 February at column 490.

84. Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate for the past five financial years of (a) the revenue lost to the Exchequer from tax incentives for the plantation of forestry and (b) the cost to the Exchequer of grants made available to landowners for agreements under the Wildlife and Countryside Act to conserve land by not developing commercial forestry.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The income tax forgone is estimated to be some £10 million a year for the past five financial years. No information is available on which to base an estimate of the cost of capital tax reliefs.

The estimated costs of payments made by the Nature Conservancy Council during the five years to December 1987 under management agreements arising under the Wildlife and Countryside Act to conserve sites of special scientific interest from commercial forestry is £1·8 million. This includes payments to conserve woodland as well as payments to prevent afforestation.

Customs and Excise (East Anglia)

40. Mr. David Porter: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received from business and individuals in East Anglia recently complaining about actions of customs officers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley: Four representations have been made recently.

Economic Prospects

43. Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he intends to meet the director general of the Confederation of British Industry to discuss the prospects for the economy.

52. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he next intends to meet the director general of the Confederation of British Industry to discuss the prospects for the economy.

54. Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he next intends to meet the director general of the Confederation of British Industry to discuss the prospects for the economy.

73. Mr. Fallon: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he next intends to meet the director general of the Confederation of British Industry to discuss the prospects for the economy.

Mr. Major: My right hon. Friend meets the director general of the Confederation of British Industry from time to time. But he has no specific plans to meet him in the foreseeable future.

Economic Forecasts

44. Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he makes of the accuracy of his own and other economic forecasts.

Mr. Major: Treasury forecasts always include an analysis of errors on past forecasts. The accuracy of Treasury forecasts compares favourably with other economic forecasts.

Small Firms (Paperwork)

45. Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what further steps he plans to take to alleviate the burden of paperwork on small firms.

Mr. Norman Lamont: We are continually looking at ways of reducing the burden of paperwork on small firms.

For example, as announced by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer in his Budget statement last year, from July companies with a turnover below £250,000 a year will be able to make only one VAT return a year, instead of four at present. On the income tax side, form P11D, on which employers report expenses and benefits, will be reduced from four pages to two, in a more easily understood format, from next month. The amount of material being sent to employers operating PAYE for the first time is also being reduced.

Personal Borrowing

47. Mr. McFall: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his current estimate of the level of personal sector borrowing; and what it was in real terms in the previous five years.

Mr. Major: In the third quarter of 1987 total personal sector borrowing is provisionally estimated to have been £11,008 million. No figures are published for borrowing in real terms.

Exports and Imports

50. Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the growth in the volume of United Kingdom exports in the last financial year; what was the growth in the volume of imports; and what was the effect on the balance of payments.

Mr. Major: In the financial year 1986-87 the volume of exports of goods grew by 6½ per cent. on the previous year while the volume of imports of goods grew by 8¼ per cent. The current account of the balance of payments moved from a surplus of £3·8 billion in 1985-86 to a deficit of £1·1 billion in 1986-87.

VAT (Health Service Charges)

53. Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much annual income to the Exchequer is generated through value added tax on health service charges from the public to the private sector.

77. Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much annual income to the Exchequer is generated through value added tax on health service charges from the public to the private sector.

Mr. Lilley: I regret that the information is not available.

Close Companies

55. Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many close company apportionments were made by the Inland Revenue in 1986-87.

Mr. Norman Lamont: 1,525 close company apportionment notices were served on companies in 1986-87.

Invisible Earnings

58. Mr. Wood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the balance of invisible earnings.

65. Mr. Sackville: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the balance of trade in invisible earnings.

95. Mr. Quentin Davies: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the balance of trade in invisible earnings.

Mr. Major: The United Kingdom's net invisible earnings remain in very substantial surplus.

Common Agricultural Policy

59. Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a White Paper setting out in detail the effect on the economy and employment of the common agricultural policy, as set out in the Treasury economic progress report of February.

Mr. Brooke: I have no present plans to do so. The economic progress report drew on various studies by reputable international bodies of the consequences of agricultural support and protection policies. Full references for these studies, which concerned Japan, the United States and the other O E C D countries as well as the E C, were given in the article. In addition, a National Consumer Council study of the CAP, commissioned by D T I, will be published later this year.

Public Expenditure

60. Mr. Watts: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much general Government expenditure as a percentage of gross domestic product has fallen since 1982-83.

85. Mr. Soames: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much general Government expenditure as a percentage of gross domestic product has fallen since 1982-83.

Mr. Major: The 1988 public expenditure White Paper (Cm. 288) showed that general Government expenditure (excluding privatisation proceeds) as a percentage of gross domestic product has fallen from 46¾ per cent. in 1982-83 to 42½ per cent. in 1987-88.

79. Mr. Beith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the objective of his policy of reducing public expenditure annually as a proportion of gross domestic product.

Mr. Major: Our policy of reducing public spending as a proportion of G D P over the medium term, which does not imply particular targets for individual years, will enable a low level of borrowing to be combined with reductions in the burden of taxation, thus encouraging enterprise and efficiency and the growth of output and employment.

Privatisation

62. Mr. Morgan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the Government's privatisation priorities.

76. Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the Government's privatisation priorities.

Mr. Norman Lamont: No.

Lost Revenue

63. Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the latest estimate of annual revenue lost to the Exchequer from United Kingdom companies and individual residents moving to Jersey, Guernsey and the Isle of Man.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I regret that it is not possible to provide such an estimate.

Personal Credit

64. Mr. Battle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the latest figures he has for the growth of personal credit over the last three years.

86. Mr. Martlew: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the latest figures he has for the growth of personal credit over the last three years.

Mr. Lilley: Over the three years to the end of 1987, consumer credit has grown at an annual rate of about 18 per cent.

Investment Statistics

66. Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the latest figures that he has for the current level of investment in (a) manufacturing industry and (b) the service sector.

Mr. Major: Investment in manufacturing in 1987 is provisionally estimated to be 3½ per cent. higher than in 1986. Investment in the construction, distribution and financial industries is estimated to be 10 per cent. higher in 1987 than a year earlier. For these industries as a whole the volume of investment in 1987 was the highest level yet recorded.

International Debt

68. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if any further meetings are planned with other Finance Ministers regarding world debt; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave on 11 February at column 337.

74. Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a further statement setting out the Government's policy on international debt.

102. Mr. Nicholas Baker: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a further statement setting out the Government's policy on international debt.

Mr. Lilley: We are continuing to press the initiative which my right hon. Friend announced last spring for the poorest, most heavily-indebted countries by the easing of terms of official debt in the Paris club. In addition, we have agreed to make a large contribution, by way of subsidy, to the enhanced structural adjustment facility at the IMF.

We warmly welcome the recommended increase in the capital of the World Bank of US$74·8 billion which will enable it to increase its annual lending level from around $14 billion to $20 billion by 1992. This will benefit in particular the middle income debtors.

Labour Statistics

69. Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer in how many regions adult unemployment has fallen over the past year.

70. Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer in how many regions adult unemployment has fallen over the past year.

97. Mr. Wolfson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer in how many regions adult unemployment has fallen over the past year.

Mr. Major: Over the past year, unemployment has fallen in all regions of the United Kingdom.

82. Mr. Couchman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer for how many successive quarters total employment in the British economy has risen.

Mr. Major: Employment in Great Britain has risen for 18 successive quarters since March 1983, the longest period of continuous employment growth for nearly 30 years, and by over 1½ million in total.

Personal Ownership

71. Dr. Goodson-Wickes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the growth of personal ownership in Britain since 1979.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer which I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Darlington (Mr. Fallon) on 29 October, at column 435.

Supplementary Benefit

72. Mr. McLeish: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received concerning income tax reductions and the level of public expenditure on supplementary benefits.

Mr. Norman Lamont: My right hon. Friend has received a large number of representations concerning income tax reductions but very few which mention supplementary benefits.

Works of Art (Fiscal Allowances)

75. Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what submissions he has received concerning fiscal allowances for donations of art works to the nation.

Mr. Norman Lamont: My right hon. Friend has received none.

National Debt

78. Mr. Chapman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the changing level of the national debt, and the interest payable on it as a proportion of total public expenditure.

Mr. Major: The stock of public sector debt has declined as a share of GDP in recent years. This has reduced the burden of debt interest payments, enabling more expenditure on priority programmes while still reducing public spending as a proportion of GDP. Latest estimates of debt interest payments and public expenditure in 1987-88 will be published in the financial statement and Budget report on 15 March.

Small Landlords

83. Mr. Bowis: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what tax incentives are available to encourage the small landlord; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The tax rules relating to rental income apply equally to all landlords. I will bear in mind the suggestion my hon. Friend is making.

NHS (Finance)

87. Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many Treasury staff are responsible for the oversight of National Health Service finances.

92. Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many Treasury staff are responsible for the oversight of National Health Service finances.

Mr. Brooke: Treasury business regarding the National Health Service is principally the responsibility of Health Services division which has a total of 13 staff (whole-time equivalents) including specialist support.

Income Tax—Revenue Receipts

88. Mr. David Martin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what studies he has made of the relationships between levels of income tax and resultant revenue.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Many factors influence the yield of income tax. Since 1985-86 the basic rate of income tax has been reduced from 30p to 27p, but growth in the economy and other developments have led to the yield of income tax increasing in both nominal and real terms.

Manufacturing Industry (Investment)

90. Mr. Nellist: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the current level of investment in British manufacturing industry; and what it was in real terms in 1979.

Mr. Major: The provisional estimate of capital expenditure in manufacturing at 1980 prices was £7,389 million in 1987 compared to £8,229 million in 1979.

Vending Machines

91. Mr. Speller: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his policy to compensate or pay a modification charge to owners of coin-operated vending machines when the new and changed size 5 pence and 10 pence coins are introduced from 1991 onwards and while the old shape and weight coins are still in circulation.

Mr. Brooke: No. It has not been Government policy in the past to pay compensation when new coins were introduced, and I see no reason to change now. The Government have, however, taken full account of representations from the vending industry in designing the new coins, and have given plenty of notice of the change.

Voluntary Trust Funds

93. Mr. Ashley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what criteria he uses, in deciding whether to introduce legislation to give tax concessions to voluntary trust funds.

Mr. Lawson: I am not sure what the right hon. Member has in mind. If he would care to write to me giving further details, I shall let him have a full reply.

Self-employment

94. Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the increase in self-employment in the British economy since 1979.

Mr. Major: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Feltham and Heston (Mr. Ground).

Profits

98. Dr. Twinn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the latest figures for the level of industrial and commercial profitability.

Mr. Major: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given earlier today by my right hon. Friend the Financial Secretary to my hon. Friend the Member for Keighley (Mr. Waller).

Forestry (Taxation)

99. Mr. Henderson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of revenue forgone by the Exchequer in the last financial year as a result of taxation incentives for forestry development.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The income tax forgone is about £10 million. No information is available on which to base an estimate of the cost of capital tax reliefs.

Manufacturing (Fiscal Incentives)

110. Mr. Strang: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he is satisfied with the operation of the current system of fiscal incentives for investment in manufacturing industry.

Mr. Major: The current fiscal regime has created a climate which encouraged an increase of 3½ per cent. in manufacturing investment in 1987, and manufacturing investment is projected to grow by 11 per cent. in 1988 in the Department of Trade and Industry's latest investment intentions survey.

Inward Investment

101. Mr. Jack: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the sources, level and economic effect of inward investment during the current financial year.

Mr. Major: In the second and third quarters of 1987 —the latest period for which information is available— international confidence in the United Kingdom economy led to inward direct and portfolio investment of £9½ billion. Information on the geographical sources of recent capital inflows is not available.

European Community (Indirect Taxes)

103. Mr. Dykes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has had further discussions with his European Economic Community counterparts in the Finance Council and with members of the Council of Ministers on matters affecting European Economic Community indirect tax recommendations following the European Court announcement of 23 February.

Mr. Lilley: No. The decision of European Court of Justice concerns the interpretation of existing VAT law and is an entirely separate matter from the Commission's tax approximation proposals.

Interest Rates

104. Mr. Latham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will make a statement on the level of interest rates.

Mr. Lilley: Bank base rates are 9 per cent.

Economic Policy

12. Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what criteria he uses in deciding the relative priority to be accorded (a) cutting income tax rates, (b) increasing expenditure on overseas aid up to the level of the United Kingdom commitment to 0·7 per cent. of gross national product.

Mr. Major: The latest plans show increased provision for the overseas aid programme, which is now projected to grow by 3 per cent. in real terms between 1986-87 and 1990-91.

"Retail Prices (Inflation)

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the average figure for retail price inflation over the past five years.

Mr. Lilley: Over the past five years the average figure for retail price inflation, as measured by the general index of retail prices, was 4·6 per cent.

CBI

Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he next intends to meet the director general of the Confederation of British Industry; and what matters he proposes to discuss.

Mr. Major: My right hon. Friend meets the director general of the CBI from time to time, and a wide range of subjects are discussed. He has no specific plans to meet him in the foreseeable future.

EC (Finance)

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he hopes to have discussions with the European Community Council of Ministers concerning European monetary matters; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Financial Secretary earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Staffordshire, Moorlands (Mr. Knox).

Income Tax and Supplementary Benefit

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received concerning income tax reductions and the level of public expenditure on supplementary benefits.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received concerning income tax reductions and the level of public expenditure on supplementary benefits.

Mr. Norman Lamont: My right hon. Friend has received a large number of representations concerning income tax reductions, but very few which mention supplementary benefits."

ENVIRONMENT

Mortgage Defaulters

105. Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the latest figures he has for property repossessions arising from mortgage default over the last three years.

Mrs. Roe: Following are the available estimates:

Properties taken into possession by Building Societies United Kingdom

Calendar year	Number	Percentage of mortgage loans outstanding at end of period
1985	16,490	0·25
1986	20,930	0·30
1987	22,630	0·32

Properties taken into possession by local authorities England

Financial	Number	Percentage of mortgage loans outstanding at end of period
1984-85	570	0·10
1985-86	630	0·13
1986-87	490	0·12

Corresponding information is not available from other lending institutions.

Local Authority Assets

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received regarding his policy towards the disposal of local authority assets.

Mr. Chope: I frequently receive calls to encourage better management of assets by local authorities, including substantial sales of surplus or under-used properties. I particularly welcome the Audit Commission's recent report on property management, and I commend it to all local authorities.

House Sales (Basildon)

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many council and New Towns Commission properties have been sold in the constituency of Basildon since 1981.

Mrs. Roe: Information is not available for constituencies.

Canals

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to encourage the greater use of Britain's canals.

Mr. Moynihan: The British Waterways Board is responsible for most canals in Great Britain. Its objectives, which are agreed with Government, are to promote the fullest practicable use of its waterways for leisure, recreation and amenity, and for freight transport where appropriate, while operating as commercially as possible.

Homeless Persons (Cornwall)

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to assist local authorities in Cornwall to meet their statutory obligations under the homeless persons legislation and in housing people on their waiting list.

Mrs. Roe: Local authorities' HIP allocations in Cornwall as elsewhere take account of homelessness and other housing needs. Our proposals to inject more private funding into the housing association sector will make public sector resources stretch further. We have already announced that the Housing Corporation will aim to double the present level of provision by housing associations in rural areas.

Nature Reserves

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he next intends to meet the chairman of the Nature Conservancy Council to discuss the future of nationally owned nature reserves.

Mr. Moynihan: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State attended a meeting with the chairman and other members of the Nature Conservancy Council on 25 February at which a number of matters were discussed including national nature reserves. My right hon. Friend has no immediate plans for a further meeting, but we shall continue to take a close interest in the progress of the review of the NNR policy currently being undertaken by the council.

Severn Estuary

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects scheduling of the Severn estuary as a site of special scientific interest to be completed.

Mr. Moynihan: In 1987, 1,437 hectares of the upper Severn estuary were notified as a site of special scientific interest under the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981. With effect from 5 February this area was classified as a special protection area under the EC wild birds directive and as a wetland of international importance under the Ramsar convention. The Nature Conservancy Council is working on the notification of the remaining areas of special scientific interest and hopes to complete the notification during the summer.

Victoria Park Underpass

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to the answer of 1 March, Official Report, column 558, when and where public notice was given of his intention to issue a certificate under section 19 of the Acquisition of Land Act 1981, for the A650 north-west of Doncaster-Kendal Trunk Road (Airedale Route) (Victoria Park to Crossflatts Section) first Supplementary Compulsory Purchase Order and for the A650 North West of Doncaster-Kendal Trunk Road (Airedale Route) (Victoria Park to Crossflatts Section) Second Supplementary Compulsory Purchase Order.

Mr. William Waldegrave: Notice of the Secretary of State's intention to issue section 19 certificates was published on 4 December 1987 in the following newspapers: the Yorkshire Post, Yorkshire Evening Post, Bradford Telegraph and Argus and the Keighley News.

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to the answer 1 March, Official Report, column 558, when the certificate under section 19 of the Acquisition of Land Act 1981 was issued for the A650 North West of Doncaster-Kendal Trunk Road (Airedale Route) (Victoria Park to Crossflatts Section (Victoria Park Underpass) Side Roads) Order.

Mr. Waldegrave: Section 19 of the Acquisition of Land Act 1981 provides for a certificate to be given only where land is acquired by means of a compulsory purchase order. The A650 North West of Doncaster-Kendal Trunk Road (Airedale Route) (Victoria Park to Crossflatts Section (Victoria Road Underpass) Side Roads) Order is not a compulsory purchase order and does not therefore require such a certificate.

K6 Telephone Kiosks

Mr. Allan Roberts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will raise the target number for listing K6 telephone kiosks above 1,000; and if he will make a statement on his Department's discussions with British Telecom on this matter.

Mr. Moynihan: No. From the knowledge we have built up over the past 12 months, we believe that around 1,000 of the remaining K6 kiosks are of listable quality and my right hon. Friend sees no need to revise this figure at present. Officials of the Department have had a number of discussions with British Telecom and our professional advisers in English Heritage to agree the order in which districts should be surveyed for listable kiosks; but these discussions have not touched on the numbers to be listed, which is a matter for my right hon. Friend.

Local Authority Contracts

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement about his Department's policy towards local authority contract compliance clauses and practices designed to make contractors supplying local authorities employ more ethnic minority staff.

Mr. Chope: My Department's policy on such matters is clearly embodied in the terms of part II of the Local Government Bill as it left this House.

River Thames Flood Plains (Buildings)

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what restrictions exist on building developments on the River Thames flood plains.

Mrs. Roe: Applications for developments on the River Thames flood plains, as elsewhere, are determined by the local planning authority in the light of all material considerations. My Department's Circular 17/82 emphasises that, where land drainage considerations arise, they should always be taken into account in determining planning applications, but arrangements for investigating flood risks will be a matter for local planning authorities themselves.

Housing Association Tenants (House Purchase)

Mr. Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the waiting time for housing association tenants who wish to own their own homes via a transferable discount scheme; what proposals there are to ease the financial controls over the scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Roe: The waiting time for the home ownership scheme for tenants of charitable housing associations depends on the availability of funds for discounts in the Housing Corporation's approved development programme. A waiting list has been in force since 1 October 1986, but a further £19 million has been allocated for 1988-89 to cover outstanding purchases set in hand before 1 October 1986 and a proportion of the applications received since that date. Applications received up to 31 May 1987 are now being allowed to proceed.

Penzance and St. Ives (Sewerage)

Mr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has yet reached any conclusions about the South West water authority's applications for discharge consents in respect of the Penzance and St. Ives sewerage scheme.

Mr. Moynihan: The Department is about to write to all those who made representations at the time these proposals were originally advertised, with copies of the water authority's response to the objections raised. I hope we shall be able to reach a decision on the way forward during May, once this further round of consultation is complete.

Fire Safety

Mr. Clelland: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he has taken, following publication of the report in the Fire Safety Journal 12 (1987) on housing factors and fires in two metropolitan boroughs, to reduce the incidence of fires in the home.

Mrs. Roe: This is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Home Department, and I refer the hon. Member to the answer given today by my hon. Friend the Member for Oxford, West and Abingdon (Mr. Patten), the Minister of State, Home Office.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

European Community (Internal Market)

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the extent and impact of the proposals contained in the European Commission's White Paper, "Europe without frontiers: towards a large internal market", in so far as his Ministry is concerned.

Mr. MacGregor: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Minister for Trade on 3 March at column 643. The proposals in the White Paper in which my Department has a particular interest include those relating to animal and plant health safeguards, animal feedingstuffs, plant varieties and seeds, plant protection products and labelling, composition, packaging and inspection of food.

Sale of Pigs

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if, following his discussions with the hon. Member for Uxbridge and swill pig feeders from Harefield, he has yet reached a decision on the introduction of cheque book licences for the sale of pigs by reputable breeders; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: My officials are currently reviewing the legislation which governs the movement of pigs within Great Britain. One possibility under consideration is a relaxation of the requirements for movements of swill-fed pigs to slaughterhouses to be licensed.

Council of Agriculture Ministers

Mr. Gregory: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the outcome of the Council of Agriculture Ministers' meeting on 7 and 8 March in Brussels; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: The Council of Agriculture Ministers met in Brussels on 7-9 March 1988. I and my right hon. Friend the Minister of State represented the United Kingdom.

The Council discussed legal texts to give effect to the agreement of the European Council on stabilisers and set-aside; and reached agreement on the terms of regulations for all commodities concerned, with the exception of wine. Discussion on wine is to be concluded at the Council's next meeting later this month. I made it absolutely clear that our agreement to this package as a whole is conditional on that being achieved, and that we would not sign up until a satisfactory wine regulation had been agreed. This was accepted by the German presidency.

We had to press hard on a number of issues to secure arrangements satisfactory for the United Kingdom. To secure a proper transitional period for sheep producers the stabiliser arrangement for sheep and any impact on the variable premium price scale will take effect on Monday 23 May. We secured agreement that, under the new arrangements, coresponsibility levy for cereals will not be charged on certified seed. This will avoid an undesirable distortion, and an adverse effect on seed quality. In response to a United Kingdom initiative, the introduction of the extensification scheme for beef will be postponed until 1 January 1989.

I also urged that the arrangements for grazed fallow in the set-aside scheme will include specific limits on stocking density and that the use of land will be restricted to grazing only. This is important for existing livestock producers, especially in the less favoured areas. It is agreed that the scheme will be optional.

I urged the Council to take advantage of the recent European Court judgement overturning the ban on the use of hormone growth promoters in cattle, and not to introduce a new directive in the same terms as before. I emphasised the importance of taking into account the latest scientific evidence, of addressing the problem of a black market in hormones, and the adverse effects on trade in particular with the United States.

I regret that the Council proceeded to re-adopt the directive. But the Council did agree an explicit declaration proposed by the United Kingdom on the problems caused for relations with third countries and called on the Commission to examine possible solutions with urgency.

We called the Council's attention to the need for a more strategic approach to the completion of the internal market in the context of animal health. We emphasised the importance of concentrating effort on the eradication from the Community of major diseases such as swine fever and foot-and-mouth disease; and of not making changes to frontier controls in the meantime that would increase the risk of infection in areas at present free from those diseases. The Council supported our suggestion that the Commission should produce a report on the basis of which the Council could develop this strategy.

Research and Development

Mr. Millan: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received on the review of agricultural research and development which is presently being carried out; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding answer 9 March 1988]: I refer the right hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Falkirk, East (Mr. Ewing) on 3 March at column 674.

SCOTLAND

Hospitals (Ministerial Visits)

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list, with dates, all private and National Health Service hospitals he or his junior Ministers have visited since October 1987.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My right hon. and learned Friend visited the Thomas Clouston clinic, Edinburgh, on 21 December 1987 and the Western general hospital, Edinburgh, on 3 March 1988. Details of my visits since October are as follows:

Hospital	Date
Falkirk and District Royal Infirmary	19 October 1987
Stirling Royal Infirmary	21 December 1987
Royal Hospital for Sick Children, Yorkhill	23 December 1987
Western Infirmary, Glasgow	22 February 1988
Ross Hall Hospital, Glasgow	22 February 1988
Biggart Hospital, Prestwick	29 February 1988

Afforestation (Control)

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he intends taking to prevent uncontrolled afforestation; if he will introduce licensing for forestry grant applications; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Very little planting takes place that has not been fully considered under the Forestry Commission's consultation arrangements. My right hon. and learned Friend has yet to be persuaded that a licensing system is necessary.

Forestry Commission (Newton Stewart)

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the total area of Forestry Commission land in Newton Stewart district in each of the years 1985 to 1987; and what was the area of (a) land under trees, (b) unplanted land, (c) land planted and (d) land harvested in each of those years.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information is set out in the following table:

Year (at 31 March)	Total area of land (hectares)	Land under trees (hectares)	Unplanted land (hectares)
1985	44,124	30,567	13,557
1986	43,958	30,581	13,377
1987	49,388	34,733	14,655

Year (at 31 March)	Planting (hectares)		Timber production [1] '000 m³
	New planting	Restocking
1985	159	185	48
1986	130	264	50
1987	266	99	50

[1] Timber production is measured by volume and not in terms of area.

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the number of staff employed by the Forestry Commission on the Newton Stewart district in 1986-87 in (a) supervisory and administrative grades and (b) industrial grades; and in each category, how many staff are employed in (i) planting and maintenance, (ii) harvesting, (iii) nursery work, (iv) research, survey and environmental work and (v) forestry authority work.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information, which is based on average figures, is as follows:

	Number
Supervisory and Administrative Grades	30
Industrial Grades	109

The figures do not include directly employed private contractors; the number of such contractors at 31 March 1987 was 34.

Most staff are employed on a range of duties in the course of a year. It is not practicable, therefore, to break down the total numbers of staff employed into the listed areas of work.

Prisoners (Suicide)

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many (a) sentenced prisoners and (b) remand prisoners in Scotland committed suicide or attempted suicide whilst in custody in each year since 1975;

(2) how many (a) sentenced prisoners and (b) remand prisoners in Scotland inflicted a serious injury upon themselves whilst in custody in each year since 1975.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The available information is as follows:

Year	Suicide		Self-inflicted[1] injury in custody
	Sentenced Prisoners	Untried Prisoners
1975	..	1	127
1976	2	2	151
1977	2	1	174
1978	2	2	187
1979	..	3	196
1980	1	..	167

Year	Suicide		Self-inflicted[1] injury in custody
	Sentenced Prisoners	Untried Prisoners
1981	3	—	210
1982	2	1	204
1983	4	2	267
1984	1	4	224
1985	5	2	320
1986	4	3	320
1987 (part year)	[2]2	[2]1	[3]—

[1] "self-inflicted injuries" include all cases of injury believed to have been self-inflicted while in custody. Separate figures are not available for cases of self-injury intended or suspected to be "attempted suicide".
[2] Figures for "suicides" in 1987 are part-year and do not include deaths in custody for which a fatal accident inquiry determination is not yet available.
[3] not yet available.

Prisoners (Strip Searching)

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many female prisoners in Scotland were strip-searched during 1986 and 1987; and on how many occasions illegal contraband or smuggled drugs were found.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The number of strip searches of female prisoners carried out at Cornton Vale institution in 1986 and 1987 was 3,270 and 2651 respectively. No record is kept of the number of occasions on which illegal contraband or smuggled drugs were found.

Recidivism

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what percentage of persons who were the subject of a prison sentence in Scotland had been convicted of a further offence within two years of the completion of the sentence, for the latest convenient period.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 8 March 1988]: I regret that the information requested is not available.

Electoral Register

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what he expects the percentage change to be of the number of people on the electoral register in Scotland for each of the next five years.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Forecasts of the numbers on the electoral register are not prepared on a regular basis. An approximation can be obtained using projected population changes for those aged 17 and over, which are as follows:

	per cent.
1988-89	+0·16
1989-90	+0·02
1990-91	−0·10
1991-92	−0·14
1992-93	−0·17

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will state (a) the number of people on the current electoral register and (b) the number of people on the electoral register at the last general election.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Scottish register published last month contained 3,967,377 names, as compared with 3,994,893 in February 1987. Records of additions to the register between February 1987 and the general election were not kept centrally.

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table indicating the percentage change in the number of people on the electoral register in Scotland between (a) October 1974 and May 1979, (b) May 1979 and June 1983, (c) June 1983 and June 1987 and (d) June 1987 and February 1988; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The percentages in the table are based on the number of electors on the registers published in February of each year referred to. Since 1981 it has been possible for names to be added to the register each month but records of such additions have not been kept centrally.

Change in number of names on electoral register	Percentage
(a) 1974-79	+3·57
(b) 1979-83	+2·53
(c) 1983-87	+1·54
(d) 1987-88	−0·69

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing for each Scottish constituency the numerical and percentage change of the number of people on the electoral register between June 1987 and February 1988.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Records were not kept centrally of additions to the 1987 register following its publication in February of that year. The following table compares the registers published in February 1987 and February 1988.

Universities Funding Council

Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how and when the Scottish committee of the proposed Universities Funding Council will be established; and what its remit will be.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Appointment of the Scottish committee must await establishment of the Universities Funding Council, the legislation for which is currently before Parliament. The council will be responsible for appointing its Scottish committee, after consultation with my right hon. and learned Friend. The remit of the committee will also be a matter for the council in the light of its own remit, but I expect it to have regard to the statement in the House on 1 April last year, at columns 1107-8, by my right hon. and learned Friend on publication of "Higher Education — Meeting the Challenge" (Cm. 114).

Charities

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the implications for Scotland of the 16th report of the Public Accounts Committee on the "Registration of Charities in England and Wales", and if he will introduce a system of public registration of charities in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas Hamilton: The report related exclusively to the monitoring and control of charities in England and Wales. My right hon. and learned Friend intends to issue a consultative document on the supervision of charities in Scotland, seeking views on a range of options including the possibility of establishing a public register of Scottish charities.

South of Scotland Electricity Board

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when officials of his Department last met representatives of the South of Scotland Electricity Board to discuss its sources of supplies of coal; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: Officials of my Department are in regular contact, on a day to day basis, with representatives of both Scottish electricity boards over a range of matters affecting the electricity supply industry in Scotland. The Department has been kept informed about developments regarding the question of coal supplies to the South of Scotland Electricity Board.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he or the Minister of State last met the chairman of the South of Scotland Electricity Board; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: My right hon. and learned Friend met the chairman of the South of Scotland Electricity Board on 1 March, in advance of the publication of the White Paper on privatisation of the Scottish electricity supply industry.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether any aspects of the tendering procedure now being undertaken by the South of Scotland Electricity Board for the supply of coal have been scrutinised by his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: The South of Scotland Electricity Board's tendering procedure for the supply of coal for electricity generation is a commercial matter for the board alone and has not involved the Government in any way.

Electricity Supply (Ministerial Responsibilities)

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list his responsibilities for the electricity supply industry in Scotland.

Mr. Lang: My right hon. and learned Friend is responsible for the efficient and economic development, supply and use of electricity in Scotland, in so far as this relates to the operations of the South of Scotland Electricity Board and North of Scotland Hydro-Electric Board. Other matters, affecting the development of energy sources in general, are primarily the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Energy.

Electricity Generation

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list each power station in Scotland, the type of fuel being used, the levels of coal purchased from British Coal by the South of Scotland Electricity Board in 1985-86 and 1986-87, the estimated total amount of coal required by the South of Scotland Electricity Board in 1987-88, 1988-89, 1989-90, and 1990-91 and the estimated proportion of coal, oil and nuclear based generating capacity in 1988-89, 1989-90 and 1990-91.

Mr. Lang: Information about power stations and fuel type in Scotland is contained in the annual reports of the South of Scotland Electricity Board, North of Scotland Hydro-Electric Board, British Nuclear Fuels Ltd. (Chapelcross power station) and the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority (Dounreay), available in the Library of the House. I have asked the chairman of the SSEB to write to the hon. Member about levels of coal purchased from British Coal in 1985-86 and 1986-87, and about the board's requirements from 1987-88 to 1990-91. The proportions of electricity generation met from coal, oil and nuclear sources in the period 1988-89 to 1990-91 will depend upon the availability of these and other fuels and their relative costs at the time.

Scottish Development Agency

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the total expenditure of the Scottish Development Agency in Scotland in each of the years from 1979-80 to 1987-88 in both cash and real terms for each department of the agency; and what are the amounts of planned expenditure for the years 1988-89, 1989-90 and 1990-91.

Mr. Lang: Because of changes in agency structure over the years, it is not possible to provide information on expenditure by each department of the agency on a consistent basis. Total agency expenditure in cash and real terms at 1987-88 prices is set out in the table:

£ million

	Cash terms	Real terms
1979-80	80·7	140·4
1980-81	97·7	143·4

	Cash terms	Real terms
1981-82	97·6	130·4
1982-83	122·7	152·9
1983-84	115·9	138·0
1984-85	117·8	134·2
1985-86	131·1	141·0
1986-87	130·9	136·5
1987-88[1]	135·5	135·5
1988-89[2]	146·6	140·3

[1] Estimated outturn.
[2] Estimate.

The combined planned expenditure for the agency and the Highlands and Islands Development Board for 1989-90 and 1990-91 is given on page 41 of the "Scottish Commentary". These figures are, however, provisional.

Forestry

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give details of the circumstances in which planting grant and felling licence applications are referred to him by the Forestry Commission.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The forestry commissioners seek a ministerial view on any planting grant or felling licence application in respect of which there is an unresolved objection from a consulted authority, except where the commissioners decide to refuse the application on the basis of the objection. This procedure accords with a ministerial direction given to the commissioners under section 1(4) of the Forestry Act 1967.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give details of the outstanding forestry planting grant and felling licence applications referred to him by the Forestry Commission; when each was so referred; when he expects to be able to announce a decision for each one; and for which cases further consultation is still being considered.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. and learned Friend has no forestry planting grant or felling licence applications before him at present.

Greenland White-Fronted Geese

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether the introduction of scaring teams on Islay to prevent damage to crops by Greenland white-fronted geese has been successful; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: They have had limited success. White-fronted geese are difficult to scare and frequently return to the site.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many Greenland white-fronted geese have been killed under licences issued by his Department.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: In the period to 4 March 1988 22 white-fronted geese have been killed under licence.

Common Services Agency (Health Services Unit)

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the remit of the health services unit of the Common Services Agency headed by Dr. David Steel; when the unit was set up; what has been the staffing, and at what grades in each year since its establishment; what the budget of the unit has been in each year since its inception; how it has been funded to date; what plans he has for its future funding; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 9 March 1988]: The function of the joint secretariat headed by Dr. David Steel (which is located with but not part of the Common Services Agency) is to provide secretariat services for the health board and Common Services Agency chairmen's group, the health board and CSA general managers group and the Scottish health management efficiency group. The secretariat was established in 1986 and consisted of the secretary and a higher clerical officer. An assistant secretary was appointed later in the year, and a personal secretary in 1987. Another assistant secretary was added when servicing the general managers group began towards the end of 1987. Financial allocations of £70,000 in 1986-87 and £72,000 in 1987-88 were made from class XVI, vote 14, subhead N10 (7). I propose that from April 1988 this will continue to apply to SCOTMEG; but the secretariat costs of the chairmen's and general managers' groups will be met from vote 14, subhead J1.

Childbirth (Statistics)

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many women in 1986-87 in Scotland were admitted to National Health Service maternity units in each health board area.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 8 March 1988]: Information for 1986-87 is not yet available in precisely the form requested but the numbers of women discharged from specialist obstetric and GP obstetric beds in the year ending 31 March 1987 are set out in the table:

	Specialist obstetric	GP obstetric	Total
Argyll and Clyde	8,152	850	9,002
Ayrshire and Arran	8,838	1,626	10,464
Borders	—	938	938

Greater Glasgow	22,963	—	22,963
Highland	4,324	341	4,665
Lanarkshire	8,197	—	8,197
Lothian	15,010	—	15,010
Orkney	—	256	256
Shetland	—	330	330

Western Isles	295	50	345
Scotland	96,651	9,067	105,718

Gaelic

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the amount of money which he intends to spend on the promotion of the Gaelic language in the next financial year.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 7 March 1988]: The amount of funds to be allocated to promote the Gaelic language in the financial year ending March 1989 are still under consideration.

In the current financial year the Secretary of State has made available £397,000 through the Scottish Education Department and the Highlands and Islands Development Board. In addition, specific grant amounting to £300,000 has been allocated to education authorities in support of Gaelic initiatives.

The Scottish Arts Council has also allocated approximately £120,000 in support of Gaelic arts projects.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Faecal Occult Blood Tests

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many faecal occult blood tests are carried out within the National Health Service each year; what proportion of these tests prove positive; and what proportion of the positive tests are referred for colonoscopy investigation.

Mrs. Currie: I regret that this information is not held centrally. In faecal occult blood tests, samples of a patient's stool are examined: if blood is present this may indicate colo-rectal cancer, and the patient would be referred for further investigation, for example, by colonoscopy. Trials are in progress in Nottingham and abroad in which the faecal occult blood test is used as a method of screening for colo-rectal cancer. On current evidence the rates of false positive results still seem too high for this method to be appropriate for a mass screening programme.

Hospitals

Dr. Owen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what percentage of hospitals in England and Wales were built (a) before 1965, (b) before 1945, (c) before 1918, (d) before 1900, (e) before 1850.

Mrs. Currie: The last review of age structure of NHS buildings in England, which was conducted in 1981, showed the following:

	Approximate percentage
Built before 1890	7
Built between 1891 and 1918	74
Built between 1919 and 1939	5
Built between 1940 and 1964	6
Built after 1964	8

Since 1979 over 300 health building schemes, each costing over £1 million, have been completed.

Information regarding Wales is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Allied Dunbar

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what commercial contracts his Department has with Allied Dunbar.

Mr. Portillo: I am not aware of any.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many members of staff within his Department are located within each region outside London; what percentage this constitutes of staff within his Department; and what were the comparable figures, in absolute and percentage terms in 1979.

Mr. Portillo: Using the boundaries of social security regions departmental staff were located on 1 January 1988 as follows:

Region	Staff Numbers	Percentage
Scotland	9,377	9·2
North Eastern (includes Newcastle Central Office)	22,406	22·0
North Western (includes North Fylde Central Office)	17,332	17·0	Outside
Midlands	12,873	12·6	London Pay
Wales and South Western	9,670	9·5	Area 83.1
London North (outside London pay area)	5,351	5·3
London South (outside London pay area)	7,684	7·5
London pay area only	17,269	16·9
Total	101,920

The Department no longer holds details of the number of staff located within the London pay area in 1979. There has also been a significant realignment of social security regions since that date so there are no comparable figures.

Meningitis

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what levels of funding have been made available for research into meningitis and related illnesses in each of the last 10 years; and what plans for future development he has for research in this area.

Mrs. Currie: The main Government agency for the promotion of medical and related biological research is the Medical Research Council which receives its grant-in-aid from the Department of Education and Science. I understand that in the last three financial years, the council's expenditure on research into meningitis and related illnesses has been as follows:

1984-85	1985-86	1986-87
£58,491	£26,956	£144,057

Figures for earlier years are not readily available.

The council is to convene a meeting of experts to discuss promising lines for meningitis research which may lead to a specific commission from the Department.

Other research in this field funded by the Department has been carried out by the Public Health Laboratory service board at its Manchester laboratory and the Centre for Applied Microbiology and Research, Porton Down. The cost of this cannot be separated from that of other research carried out by these laboratories.

The approximate value of commissions for research into meningitis and related illnesses placed directly by the Department since 1978-79 is:

1986-87	1987-88
£49,000	£17,400

This work mainly relates to support for the Gloucester health authority's meningococcal survey in the Stonehouse area.

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many cases of meningitis have been reported in the last 10 years; and of these how many were fatal.

Mrs. Currie: Meningitis may be caused by many different organisms. The numbers of notifications of acute meningitis (all forms) and of meningococcal meningitis in England and Wales from 1978 to 1987 are shown in the table. I assume that the hon. Member is interested particularly in meningococcal meningitis, and the table also gives deaths from this cause.

From the registration of the death, it is not possible to determine whether the case had been notified.

Number of (a) notifications of Acute Meningitis (all forms) and Meningococcal Meningitis, and (b) Deaths registered with Meningococcal Meningitis (ICD (8,9)[1] 036·0) as underlying cause of death

[1] International Classification of Diseases 8th and 9th revisions.

[2] Provisional. The 1987 figure for the number of notifications of acute and meningococcal meningitis is provisional as it is based on the notifications reported to OPCS each week. It does not include all late or corrected notifications, and is therefore liable to a small change at a later date.

The annual figures for deaths should be compared with caution as

(i) a change in coding was introduced on 1 January 1984;

(ii) figures for 1986 and 1987 exclude deaths in the first 28 days of life.

Mental Hospitals

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will show (a) the number of patients and (b) the number of staff for (i) 1978 and (ii) the most recent year for which figures are available for each mental health hospital and each mental handicap hospital in England.

Mrs. Currie: I have placed in the Library tables giving the information requested.

Annual Changes

Dr. Owen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list for each year since 1979 the annual changes in England, Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland, in the numbers of (a) discharges and deaths, (b) new out-patients and attendances, (c) bottles of blood issued, (d) pathology tests, (e) ambulance journeys and (f) general practitioners' prescriptions.

Mrs. Currie: Available information is given in the tables. Information relating to Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland is the responsibility of my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland and my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Wales and for Northern Ireland.

Departmental Buildings

Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the location and status of all buildings within his Department located in London and the annual cost of rents, rates and maintenance of each.

Mr. Portillo: The Department occupies accommodation in 129 buildings in the Greater London area, ranging from the main HQ building at Richmond house to small offices for social security appeals tribunals. Civil accommodation for all Government Departments is held in the name of the Secretary of State for the Environment and managed by the Property Services Agency. Some properties are held freehold; the rents of leasehold buildings are determined on a strictly commercial, and therefore confidential basis. The total annual rent paid by the PSA to landlords for civil accommodation held in London in 1984-87, the last complete year for which figures are available, was £133 million. The DHSS figures for contributions in lieu of rates, which were paid by the PSA were £14·26 million and the property repayment services costs on these premises was £5·96 million.

Maternity Benefit

Mr. Holt: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many pregnant women were disallowed maternity benefit because they had only 49 contribution stamps credited for the qualifying year, in each year since 1980.

Mr. Portillo: I regret the information is not available. Such disallowances could have occurred only between October 1986 and April 1987. Prior to the abolition of reduced rates of short-term benefits from October 1986, a woman with a record of 49 contributions paid or credited in the relevant tax year would have been entitled to maternity allowance at three quarters of the standard rate. Since April 1987, new tests for maternity allowance have applied.

Smoking

Mr. Sims: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what is his estimate of the cost to the National Health Service for treating diseases caused by smoking for the most recently available 12-month period; and if he will make a statement;

(2) how many days of sickness absence from work were lost in the United Kingdom for the most recent 12-month period because of diseases caused by smoking; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: The cost to the National Health Service for treating smoking-related diseases is estimated at £500 million per year.

Information on working days lost due to smoking is not available in the precise form requested. The table sets out information regarding the main diseases associated with smoking, but not all illness from these diseases is caused by smoking. The statistics, which show days of certified incapacity for sickness and invalidity benefit in Great Britain, exclude periods of incapacity covered by statutory sick pay and working days lost by certain groups of workers who do not claim these benefits. They include days of incapacity for which invalidity benefit was claimed by men aged 65-69 and women aged 60-64.

Together with the nearly 300 deaths per day from smoking, these figures reveal the high cost to the nation of the smoking habit which is the largest single cause of preventable death and disease in the United Kingdom.

Electorates (Hertfordshire)

Mr. Robert B. Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will list the 1988-89 electorates for each parliamentary constituency in Hertfordshire.

Mrs. Currie: Figures relating to electoral registers which came into effect on 16 February 1988 will not be available centrally until April.

Benefit Offices (Staff Safety)

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Bradford, West (Mr. Madden), Official Report, 25 February, column 300, if he will list the local office interview rooms of his Department with protective screens.

Mr. Portillo: In September 1987, the latest date for which information is available, there were 112 private interview rooms containing protective screens within the supplementary benefit caller facilities at 71 local offices. The offices concerned were:

Departmental Services (Contracting-out)

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will place a copy of the Luxton report on the contracting-out of services at his Department in the Library.

Mrs. Currie: I have arranged for copies of the report to be placed in the Library.

Waiting List Fund

Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he is in a position to publish the allocations to regional health authorities from the waiting list fund for 1988-89; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: The allocations to regional health authorities from the waiting list fund for 1988-89 are:

Region	Allocation (£ million)
Northern	1·925
Yorkshire	2·072
Trent	2·845
East Anglian	1·046
North West Thames	2·316
North East Thames	2·637
South East Thames	2·350

Region	Allocation (£ million)
South West Thames	1·853
Wessex	1·609
Oxford	1·163
South Western	1·915
West Midlands	3·304
Mersey	1·633
North Western	2·531

This is the second phase of the waiting list initiative. The allocation I have announced today will build upon the success and experience of the first year and will allow at least 100,000 additional patients to be treated from the waiting lists. We have had some very high-quality bids from regions who have selected for support projects aimed at having the greatest impact on the worst problems.

The regional reports we have received show clearly that the cause of excessive waiting lists varies from district to district and specialty to specialty. Long waiting times have no simple or single cause. Some are capable of improvement within existing resources and district health authorities are already taking action on them.

There are other problems, however, where most progress can be made quickest with the injection of small amounts of additional funding. Already this year we are on course for treating some 100,000 additional patients in this way. For next year we have asked regions to concentrate in particular on patients who have been waiting excessively for treatment, especially for serious and disabling conditions. Some of the projects supported are for cardiac surgery, others for hip replacements and cataract operations. All types of typical waiting list cases are represented from gynaecological operations to ear, nose and throat operations for children.

The waiting list initiative has achieved the active involvement of clinicians, general practitioners, health authorities and health service management. All these people are using their imagination, ingenuity and good will to focus on one of the most long standing problems of the health service. I warmly congratulate them on that. We now have plans to make effective use of the £30 million for next year. We intend the initiative to continue for a further two years after that.

Cancer Screening

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the health authorities which have adequate computer capacity for a call and recall scheme for all women in their district.

Mrs. Currie: All family practitioner committees now have computers installed; the most recent installation was in February. A small number which have had computers in use for this purpose for some time require some augmentation, mainly to take account of the reduction in recommended age to 20.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether pathology laboratory capacity in each district health authority is sufficient to meet the demand from cervical cancer screening programmes; if he will list any authorities where the capacity is not sufficient; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: Our guidance to health authorities states that district health authorities must aim to ensure that laboratories can meet demand and avoid backlogs of cervical smears awaiting examination. The measure of pathology laboratory capacity is their ability to send the results of a smear test to the doctor who submitted it within one month. District health authorities which reported that they had been unable to achieve this target during January are listed as follows. Where laboratory backlogs do exist they are being tackled mainly by the recruitment and training of more staff, by the use of other laboratories and by overtime working.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the district health authorities which have a computerised call and recall scheme for cervical cancer screening.

Mrs. Currie: All health authorities have been required to implement computerised call and recall systems for cervical cancer screening by 31 March. The majority have already done so and the remainder are in the final stages of preparation. We will publish a full list after the target date.

Mentally Handicapped People (Community Village Development)

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on his policy towards the concept of community village development on suitable hospital sites where facilities for the mentally handicapped already exist, along the lines of the Westwood hospital in Bradford, South, and which is outlined in the document submitted to him by the Westwood Hospital Staff and Parents Action Committee.

Mrs. Currie: Any development of village communities for mentally handicapped people on existing hospital sites is a matter for the health and local authorities concerned. In considering proposals on these lines, and in consultation with hospital residents and their families, I have no doubt they will take account of all the factors involved, including the need to avoid the establishment of inward-looking institutions where the residents are isolated from the community, which we recognised in our own statement of policy in paragraph 51 of the Government's response to the report of the Social Services Committee on community care. (Cmnd. 9674).

Memorial Hospital, Woolwich

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps he will take to prevent Greenwich health authority from changing the use of the Memorial hospital, Woolwich, before the consultation exercise has been completed.

Mrs. Currie: Formal procedures involving public consultation govern the action of a health authority proposing a substantial variation in services provided within its district. However, the same procedures empower an authority to institute these changes on a temporary basis immediately and in advance of formal consultation where justified on financial grounds. I understand that Greenwich health authority is aware of these requirements and has formulated its proposals in accordance with them.

Hartley Hospital, Colne

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what guidance he gave to the health authorities concerned, pursuant to the written answer to the hon. Member for Burnley on 18 February, Official Report, column 700, on the timing of the closure of the present facilities provided at Hartley hospital, Colne, in relation to (a) the completion of public consultation exercise and (b) provision of the new Pendle community hospital.

Mrs. Currie: None. Guidance on consultation procedures for closures and change of use is contained in circular HSC (1S)207 (October 1975) supplemented by a "Dear Administrator" letter of 7 December 1979 copies of which are in the Library.

Disabled Persons Act

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any plans to implement section 11 of the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986.

Mr. Scott: I hope that it will be possible to implement this section shortly.

Miss M. R. Barker

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will reconsider the application by Miss M. R. Barker of 17 Woodland, Dewsbury Moor, Dewsbury WF13 3PE, for unemployment benefit, reference RM173P/INS/5999/7931/6, which was rejected on the grounds that she was not an employed earner for at least 13 weeks from the last day she was entitled to that benefit, in light of the fact that credits awarded to carers whilst they are receiving invalid care allowance count towards the relevant contribution conditions for unemployment benefit.

Mr. Portillo: Miss Barker's case is currently under consideration. When inquiries have been completed, Miss Barker will be given an opportunity to make representations before a formal decision is given on her contribution position in relation to her claim for unemployment benefit.

Dental Fitness

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what is the current method and process of consultation in relation to the determination of a definition of dental fitness for general dental services;

(2) if he is considering any changes to the current definition of dental fitness in relation to general dental services; and whether he will make a statement;

(3) how the definition of dental fitness has changed since 1968;

(4) if he has any plans to introduce a scheme for a dental fitness index; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: "Dental fitness" is defined in the NHS (General Dental Services) Regulations 1973 as "such a reasonable standard of dental efficiency and oral health as is necessary to safeguard general health".

The regulations form part of the terms of service under which a dentist provides general dental services under NHS arrangements and it is usual, therefore, for any amendments to be made after consultation with interested bodies including those representative of the dental profession. Although the definition has remained unchanged since 1948 its interpretation has evolved over the years to take account of changes in professional skill and knowledge and patient expectations. There are no immediate plans to change the definition nor to introduce a scheme for a dental fitness index. As announced in the recent White Paper on primary care, however, negotiations are to take place on a new contract for general dental practitioners and these might result in revised contractual obligations.

Fire Safety

Mr. Clelland: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what action he has taken, following publication of the report in the Fire and Safety Journal 12 (1987) on housing factors and fires in two metropolitan boroughs, to reduce the incidence of fires in the home.

Mrs. Currie: I have nothing to add to the reply given today by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Home Department.

Dental Vouchers

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he has any plans to introduce a dental voucher scheme on the lines of that which already exists for spectacles; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: We have no such plans. The Government's proposals for the general dental services were set out in the recent White Paper on primary care.

Income Support

Mr. Ken Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will amend form A14N (Entitlement to Income Support) to include the information that the payment of transitional arrangement moneys will from 11 April have to meet 20 per cent. of general rates and water rates.

Mr. Portillo: Local offices are issuing leaflet TRN 1 to all existing claimants when their cases are converted from supplementary benefit to income support. This leaflet includes the information that they will have to pay part of their general rates and all of their water rates from 11 April. In view of this, we have no plans to amend form A14N.

Mr. Ken Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will instruct staff in local offices to fill in form A14N (Entitlement to Income Support) without abbreviations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: We have issued clear instructions to staff in local offices about the completion of form A14N. These indicate that abbreviations should not be used. If my hon. Friend cares to send me details of specific cases where abbreviations are being used I will be happy to look into them.

Hospital Patients

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any plans to introduce a national standard system for logging hospital admission refusals and unexpected re-admissions; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: We have no present plans to do so.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish in the Official Report the number of patients transferred from private hospitals or beds to complete their treatment under the National Health Service each year from 1979.

Mrs. Currie: This information was not collected centrally prior to April 1987. Information on the source of admission of patients admitted to NHS hospitals during 1987-88 will be available centrally early in 1989.

NHS Hospitals (Income)

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish in the Official Report the income to National Health Service hospitals from charges for private beds by regions for each year from 1979.

Mrs. Currie: Following is the information requested derived from the annual accounts of regional and district health authorities and those of the special health authorities for the London postgraduate teaching hospitals. (Predecessor authorities for the years prior to 1982-83).

NHS Patients (Private Treatment)

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list in the Official Report the number of National Health Service patients cared for and treated under contractual arrangements with the private sector by specialty and regions for each year since 1979 and the cost to the regional health authorities.

Mrs. Currie: I shall let the hon. Member have such information as can be obtained without incurring disproportionate cost as soon as possible.

NHS Review (Manpower Costs)

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the cost in manpower of the Government's current review of the National Health Service.

Mr. Moore: Work on the review is being undertaken as an integral part of the Department's contribution to Government business. The manpower costs involved are not separately identifiable.

Access to Personal Files Act 1987

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when consultation will take place on the social services regulations to be made under the Access to Personal Files Act 1987.

Mrs. Currie: Proposals for these regulations for England and Wales were issued today and a copy of them has been placed in the Library. The proposals have been issued to a wide range of interested bodies including associations of local authorities. Comments are requested by 15 May 1988. The proposals are in line with access to this type of record falling under the data protection legislation and include the safeguard that information may be withheld if access is likely to result in serious harm to the physical or mental health or emotional condition of the individual requesting access or to another person. Authorities would be able to charge a fee of up to £10.

Competitive Tendering

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will detail the savings identified for each district health authority from competitive tendering for support services; and what adverse comment and representations have been made to him as a consequence of the process.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 29 February 1988]: Tables giving the savings information requested have been placed in the Library. They are based on reports from health authorities and set out the cumulative estimated annual savings generated through competitive tendering for domestic cleaning, catering and laundry services. There has been a considerable debate about the competitive tendering initiatives since it was launched some four and a half years ago. It has without a doubt provided a much-needed spur towards improving efficiency in the delivery of services and has helped to maximise the resources for patient care. Total annual savings generated in England currently stand at some £105 million.

In the main these savings, and the associated improvements in service delivery and management, have been welcomed. Some trade unions have expressed official concern about staff pay and conditions of service; they have alleged deterioration in standards and staff morale. Health authorities remain responsible for the standard of service provided whether done in-house or by an outside contractor.

We have also received representations from contractors and trade associations expressing concern that the treatment of capital and other overheads in the costing of in-house services may put outside contractors at a disadvantage in the award of contracts.

ENERGY

Magnox Programme

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what assessment he has made of the implications of the closure of the Magnox reactor at Latina in Italy for the British Magnox programme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The operation of Magnox reactors in this country is a matter for the operators and the Health and Safety Executive's Nuclear Installations Inspectorate.

Bradwell Safety Review

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what information he has received from the Nuclear Installations Inspectorate on the outcome of the Bradwell long-term safety review; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I am advised by the Health and Safety Executive that its Nuclear Installations Inspectorate has completed the assessment of the CEGB's response to the HSE report on Bradwell which was published in July 1987. The HSE will be making a statement about this in the near future.

Miners

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many miners employed by British Coal are (a) members of ethnic minorities and (b) women; and what is the total number of miners employed.

Mr. Michael Spicer: This is a matter for British Coal and I have asked the chairman to write to the hon. Member.

South of Scotland Electricity Board

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he last met representatives of British Coal to discuss the supply of coal to the South of Scotland Electricity Board; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I have regular meetings with the chairman of the British Coal Corporation to discuss all aspects of the coal industry. Arrangements for coal supplies to the South of Scotland Electricity Board by the British Coal Corporation are a matter for commercial negotiation between the two industries.

Mining

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will give the total number of jobs in both opencast and deep mining in Scotland in each of the years 1979-80 to 1987-88; and if he will give the estimated number of jobs in opencast and deep mining in each of the years 1988-89, 1989-90 and 1990-91.

Mr. Michael Spicer: This is a matter for the British Coal Corporation, and I have asked the chairman to write to the hon. Member.

British Coal (Grants)

Sir Ian Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how, in the light of paragraph 69 of the Select Committee on Energy's first report of the 1986-87 Session, the non-deficit grants paid by him to the British Coal Corporation in 1986-87 were accrued in the corporation accounts.

Mr. Parkinson: In accordance with orthodox accounting principles, social cost expenditure is brought into British Coal's profit and loss account as it is incurred; the associated non-deficit (previously "social") grants towards the expenditure are brought into the profit and loss account on the same basis.

On that basis, the amount brought into the 1986-87 profit and loss account for non-deficit grant was £594 million.

But the whole amount was not paid in 1986-87. Payments were delayed mainly because some grants towards the cost of early and enhanced pensions are made in 10 annual instalments (which include an element of interest). In addition, a proportion of non-deficit grants is withheld until the grant claims have been audited.

In accordance with these limitations, the amount actually paid to British Coal in 1986-87 was £279 million. This amount is composed as follows:

	£ million
(a) At the beginning of 1986-87, the Corporation were owed £618 million of the non-deficit grants which had been included in earlier years' profit and loss accounts. £86 million of this was paid in 1986-87 (leaving £532 million carried over for payment in a subsequent year)	86
(b) Interest of £33 million on pension-related grant was also owed to British Coal at the beginning of the year; this was paid in 1986-87	33
(c) Of the £594 million for 1986-87 referred to above, £160 million was paid in 1986-87, leaving £434 million carried over for payment in a subsequent year	160
(d) Total	279

Sir Ian Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how, in the light of paragraph 69 of the Select Committee on Energy's first report of the 1986-87 Session, the deficit grants paid by him to the British Coal Corporation in 1986-87 were accrued in the corporation's accounts.

Mr. Parkinson: British Coal incurred a deficit of £288 million in 1986-87. It was therefore entitled to claim that amount of deficit grant from the Government and, following orthodox accounting principles, this was shown as an "income" item in its 1986-87 profit and loss account.

However, the maximum amount of deficit grant payable in any year is limited to the cash needs of the corporation (defined as the external financing requirement less non-deficit grant payments). As a result, deficit grant is sometimes not paid until a later financial year than that in which the deficit occurred.

In accordance with this limitation, the Government actually paid British Coal £546 million in 1986-87. This amount is composed as follows:

	£ million
(a) At the beginning of 1986-87, the Government still owed British Coal part of the deficit grant which had been brought into earlier years' profit and loss accounts. This balance was paid off in 1986-87.	472
(b) Payments of grant towards the 1986-87 deficit of £288 million were also made in 1986-87 (leaving £214 million carried over for payment in a subsquent year).	74
(c) Total	546

Private Sector Energy Producers

Mr. Rost: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when the Government expect to resolve the difficulties in relation to establishing a rating system for private sector electricity power stations and combined heat and power producers, which will permit them to be assessed for rating on an equitable basis with power stations operated by the Central Electricty Generating Board.

Mr. Parkinson [pursuant to the reply, 29 February 1988, c. 479]: The Government accept that where independent electricity generators, including operators of combined heat and power schemes, are in competition with the public electricity supply industry (esi) they should not be put at a competitive disadvantage as a result of the different methods of rating assessment. The esi has its rateable value determined by a statutory formula while the independent generator is currently assessed by conventional valuation methods. The Government accordingly have agreed in principle that private generators exporting electricity to the electricity supply distribution network should be rated on a comparable basis to the rest of the electricity supply industry.

Although section 34A of the General Rates Act provides for the extension, by order, to other generators of electricity of the formula contained in schedule 7 to the General Rate Act 1967, which provides for the rating of electricity boards, that formula is not in a form which can be applied to independent electricity suppliers. The same is true of the existing formula for Scotland.

The Government have recently put in hand a revaluation of all non-domestic property and as a part of this are reviewing the statutory rating formulae for England, Scotland and Wales. This review will take account of the need for a more broadly applicable basis of assessment in respect of electricity generation. The outcome of the review will be new rateable values to be brought into effect from 1 April 1990 along with the new valuation lists. At that time it is intended that any independent electricity generator or combined heat and power scheme which has the capability to export electricity to the electricity supply industry's distribution network will have its rateable value assessed on a comparable basis. While the review of formula rating is progressing it is obviously not possible to say what this basis will be.

ENVIRONMENT

Atmospheric Pollution

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what contributions are being made by his Department to research into damage to the meteorological stability of the atmosphere by atmospheric pollution; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: The Department has recently started a new programme of research in climate change to improve assessments of the effect pollution (in the form of carbon dioxide and other greenhouse gases) may have on the earth's climate. This is in close co-operation with the programme being carried out at the Meteorological Office and the Natural Environment Research Council, which contribute to the UN world climate programme.

Greenwich Park

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps are being taken to protect visitors to Greenwich park from skateboarders.

Mr. Moynihan: The Royal parks constabulary has been directed to give special attention to this matter and to take action against any use of skateboards which is likely to affect the comfort or safety of park users.

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many accidents have taken place as a result of the use of skateboards in Greenwich park during each of the past 10 years for which figures are available.

Mr. Moynihan: The figures are as follows. Between 1977 and 1985 a special skateboarding area was provided in Greenwich park.

	Pedestrians	Skate-boarders	Skate-boarders in the special area	Total
1977	1	30	3	34
1978	7	26	4	37
1979	5	7	1	13
1980	3	9	1	13
1981	1	3	0	4
1982	0	2	0	2
1983	0	1	1	2
1986	0	1	[2]—	1
1987	1	7	—	8
1988[1]	1	2	—	3

[1] To date.
[2] Special area discontinued.

"Radioactive Britain" (TV Programme)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will seek to obtain for his departmental library a copy of the transcript of the Channel 4 Dispatches programme, "Radioactive Britain," broadcast on 4 March.

Mr. Moynihan: The press office has a video of the programme which has been studied by several of the Department's administrative and scientific staff. There are no plans to obtain the transcript for the Library.

Landlord and Tenant Act 1987

Mr. Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he is now in a position to state when he expects to bring further parts of the Landlord and Tenant Act 1987 into force.

Mr. Waldegrave: My right hon. Friend and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales have now made the second commencement order for the Landlord and Tenant Act 1987 which brings into force on 18 April 1988 the whole of parts II, III and IV, dealing respectively with the appointment by the court of managers; the acquisition of leasehold blocks in certain circumstances; and the variation of leases. We aim to bring the remaining provisions of the 1987 Act into force by the summer recess.

Docklands (Compulsory Purchase Order)

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will issue his decision on the London Docklands (East Docklands) Compulsory Purchase Order 1985.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Department has issued today the letter announcing my right hon. Friend's decisions, taken jointly with my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Transport and for Energy, confirming (with modifications) the London Docklands (East Docklands) Compulsory Purchase Order 1985. A copy of the decision letter has been placed in the Library. Because objections by a local authority and by a statutory undertaker remain outstanding, the order is subject to special parliamentary procedure and will not become operative until the relevant processes have been completed.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Local Authorities (Education Expenditure)

Mr. Raison: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how the share of local authority expenditure taken by education has changed since the passing of the Local Government Act 1958.

Mrs. Rumbold: In 1958, education's share of total authority spending in the United Kingdom was 41·4 per cent. In 1986, it was 41·8 per cent. The comparison is based on calendar year figures representing recurrent and capital spending excluding debt interest and an imputed charge for capital consumption.

Gaelic

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has as to how many Gaelic-orientated courses currently exist in (a) Scottish and (b) Welsh universities.

Mr. Jackson: According to the handbook of the Universities Central Council on Admissions, the number of university institutions in Scotland and Wales offering Celtic languages as subjects in degree courses in October 1988 is as follows:

	Scotland	Wales
Celtic or Celtic studies	3	1
Gaelic studies	1	—
Irish	—	1
Welsh	—	5

HOME DEPARTMENT

Prisoners (Costs)

Mrs. Maureen Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what he expects the projected cost to be for accommodating a convicted murderer for a minimum life sentence of 20 years.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: It is not possible to distinguish the cost of keeping particular types of offender in custody. The average annual cost of keeping a person in a penal establishment in 1986-87 was £13,104. Projections are not made of the average costs of keeping persons in custody in future years.

Firearms

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the firearms working party will report: and when the report will be available to hon. Members.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I believe that the hon. Member has in mind the working party on firearm fees and shotgun security, which was set up in early 1987. Its recommendations on shotgun security were taken into account in formulating the proposals in the White Paper on reform of firearms legislation (Cm. 261). The Firearms (Amendment) Bill has implications for fees, and consideration of this matter will resume once the Bill is enacted.

Association of Chief Police Officers

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what subjects he expects to discuss at the next meeting with the Association of Chief Police Officers.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No arrangements have yet been made for my right hon. Friend's next meeting with representatives of the Association of Chief Police Officers.

Prison Visits

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how much was spent during the financial year 1986-87 on assisted prison visits in England and Wales;

(2) how much it is anticipated will be spent on assisted prison visits in England and Wales during the financial year 1987-88;

(3) how much it is anticipated will be spent on assisted prison visits in England and Wales during the financial year 1988-89.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The sums in question, which do not include administration costs, are as follows:

1986-87	925,629
1987-88	[1]870,000
1988-89	[2]978,000

[1] Most recent forecast outturn.
[2] Planned expenditure, subject to agreement of the Supply Estimates.

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he anticipates any delays or a fall in applications as a result of the changes in the assisted prison visits scheme which will be introduced on 11 April.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No.

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications his Department expects the assisted prison visits unit to receive during its first year of operation.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We expect the unit to receive over 50,000 applications in its first year.

Police

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police officers were in post in England and Wales as at 31 December 1983.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: There were 121,003 police officers in England and Wales as at 31 December 1983.

Television Licence Fee

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his policy with regard to the reimbursement of the balance of unexpired television licence fee to individuals who gave up their televisions on admittance to residential homes for the elderly.

Mr. Renton: They will be eligible for a refund of the balance if they cease to need a licence within 28 days of having obtained one.

Traffic Wardens

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many traffic wardens have been deployed in the London borough of Newham on average in each day during the most recent period for which figures are available.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that 14 traffic wardens are deployed in the London borough of Newham, working in two shifts of seven. Sickness and other abstractions may reduce the numbers slightly on particular days.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many traffic wardens have been deployed in London in each of the past five years.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The number of traffic wardens varies throughout the year but I understand from the Metropolitan police and the City of London police that the strength of the traffic warden service at the end of each of the past five years was as follows:

31 December	Metropolitan police district	City
1983	1,789	57
1984	1,829	79
1985	1,698	79
1986	1,668	65
1987	1,527	71

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received concerning the transfer of London traffic wardens from his Department to local authorities.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Traffic wardens in London are employed by the Metropolitan police and by the corporation of the City of London. We have received representations from the community and police consultative groups for Hillingdon and for Paddington and Marylebone that Metropolitan police wardens should be transferred to local authority control. The Association of London Authorities and the London Boroughs Association have also presented proposals under which local authorities would employ parking control officers to perform the functions currently undertaken by Metropolitan police traffic wardens. These proposals are being considered by a working party on which the Home Office, Department of Transport, the police and the local authority associations are represented.

PRIME MINISTER

NATO Meeting

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Prime Minister if any specific decision was taken on a collective North Atlantic Treaty Organisation view on (a) the future of the anti-ballistic missile treaty and (b) the benefits to the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation of the United States strategic defence initiative, at the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation Ministers and Heads of State meeting on 2 and 3 March.

The Prime Minister: No.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Social Security Commissioners

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Attorney-General during 1987 how many visiting social security commissioners sat in Wales; at what centres they sat; and in each case, what facilities were available at these centres for handicapped claimants and those suffering from industrial injuries.

The Attorney-General: In 1987 10 commissioners sat on a total of 10 occasions in Cardiff to deal with 49 oral hearings of appeals. On nine of those occasions oral hearings were held in the Crown court, where all public facilities are concentrated on the ground floor; these include a waiting area, cafeteria and a toilet for the use of disabled persons. On the remaining occasion, hearings took place in Cardiff county court, where there are no facilities specifically for disabled persons.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Attorney-General how many (a) full-time and (b) part-time social security commissioners there are in (i) London, (ii) Edinburgh, (iii) Cardiff and (iv) Northern Ireland; and whether there are plans to increase the numbers of part-time or full-time commissioners in any of these centres.

Attorney-General: The information is given in the table:

Location	Full-Time Commissioners	Part-Time Commissioners
London	13	1
Edinburgh	2	—
Cardiff	—	—
Northern Ireland	2	—

A commissioner travels to Cardiff to deal with individual cases as required.

In view of the work load in Scotland, the Lord Chancellor has authorised the appointment of an additional full-time commissioner in Scotland who will be based in Edinburgh. He has no plans to make further appointments at the present time.

ENERGY

Nuclear Power Stations

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what statistical and demographic criteria, for each type of nuclear reactor, are used in Her Majesty's Nuclear Installations Inspectorate's assessment of the safety of sites for nuclear power stations; if he will publish a list showing for each existing nuclear power station (a) the relevant limiting criteria compared with (b) the actual population figures in each case; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I am advised by the HSE's Nuclear Installations Inspectorate that the current demographic criteria for assessing potential AGR sites were developed in the late 1960s. These and more restrictive criteria of a similar type are used as guidelines for controlling development in the vicinity of existing AGR and Magnox stations respectively. Once a site has been accepted for a nuclear station arrangements are made to ensure that residential and industrial developments are so controlled that the general characteristics of the site are preserved, and therefore local authorities consult the inspectorate with regard to any proposed development which might lead to an increase in population close to the site and on larger developments further from the site. Limiting criteria based upon population distribution are used only for guidance and the inspectorate would not necessarily insist on rigid adherence to them. Other unquantifiable factors are also taken into account.

The limiting criteria are in the form of cumulative weighted population out to various distances all around the site and in any 30 deg. sector. To assess a site against the criteria at a certain distance, the population for a given distance band is multiplied by the appropriate weighting factor and the values up to the distance being evaluated are added together. The weighting factors and limiting criteria for Magnox and AGR sites are:

Distance (km)	Weighting factors	Cumulative population Magnox	Weighted criteria AGR
Population all around site
0-2	32·0	45,000	290,000
2-3	15·0	69,000	520,000
3-5	7·7	120,000	870,000
5-8	4·0	180,000	1,300,000
Population in 30 deg. sector
0-2	26·0	23,000	96,000

Distance (km)	Weighting factors	Cumulative population Magnox	Weighted criteria AGR
2-3	12·0	37,000	170,000
3-5	5·6	48,000	290,000
5-8	2·8	56,000	430,000

Magnox reactors in concrete pressure vessels such as Oldbury and Wylfa would be allowed some relaxation of the general Magnox criteria if necessary.

The total populations around Magnox and AGR stations and the populations in the most restrictive 30 deg. sector are:

Nuclear Plant (Decommissioning)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what information he has on opportunities for the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority to sell its expertise in nuclear power plant decommissioning to Sweden, in the light of the announcement by the Swedish Energy Minister on 2 March that Sweden is to begin its closure programme for its nuclear plants in 1995.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I understand that the UKAEA has regular discussions with its Swedish counterparts and keeps commercial opportunities under review.

"Radioactive Britain" (TV Programme)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will seek to obtain for his departmental library a copy of the transcript of the Channel 4 Dispatches programme, "Radioactive Britain", broadcast on 4 March.

Mr. Parkinson: No.

Power Plant Safety

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he has received any correspondence from Mr. R. W. Marshall of Cymerau, Dolwen, Blaenau Ffestiniog on the subject of power plant safety and radiation fog, since May 1979.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Mr. Marshall has corresponded frequently with this Department.

Renewable Sources

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what has been the annual gross and net expenditure by the Government on research into renewable sources from 1973 until 1987-88, in both actual prices and 1986-87 prices.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Expenditure by my Department on research into renewable sources of energy since the mid-1970s is set out in both actual prices and 1986-87 prices.

Nuclear Fusion (Research)

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what has been the annual expenditure by Euratom on research into nuclear fusion, including the JET programme, from its inception until 1987-88, in actual costs and 1986-87 prices, indicating the United Kingdom Government's financial contribution to this programme.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The payment appropriations for Euratom are contained in the Official Journal of the European Communities (L series), copies of which are available in the Library of the House. The United Kingdom contribution is not separately identified, but information on our share of the Community own resources is contained in volume 2, chapter III, paragraph 7, of the 1987 public expenditure White Paper.

Agencies (Government Contributions)

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will publish a table indicating the Government's annual contributions to (i) Euratom, (ii) the OECD Nuclear Energy Agency, (iii) the International Energy Agency and (iv) the International Atomic Energy Agency since they were set up, until 1987-88, in both actual costs and 1986-87 prices.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Details of the Government's subscriptions to the OECD Nuclear Energy Agency, to the International Energy Agency and to the International Atomic Energy Agency are published annually in the Supply Estimates, copies of which are available in the Library of the House. The Government's contribution to Euratom is not separately identifiable as it forms part of the United Kingdom's general contribution to the European Community budget.

Spent Magnox Fuel

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy under what system nuclear materials have been deemed to be civil or military after the co-processing of safeguarded and unsafeguarded spent Magnox nuclear fuel at BNFL Sellafield since May 1979.

Mr. Michael Spicer [holding answer 29 February 1988]: The products of co-processing were allocated by dividing the total pro rata to the quantities of uranium and plutonium in the incoming safeguarded and unsafeguarded fuel. From 1987, separate civil and non-civil reprocessing operations have been carried out.

Plutonium

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if any plutonium from (a) unsafeguarded British Nuclear Fuels Limited reactors or (b) safeguarded Electricity board Magnox reactors has been exported to the United States since May 1979 under bilateral or International Atomic Energy Agency safeguards.

Mr. Michael Spicer [holding answer 29 February 1988]: Safeguarded plutonium exports to the United States since May 1979 have been made only by the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority.

DEFENCE

RAF Stornoway

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if the standard operating procedures for all military aircraft taking off from RAF Stornoway include a mandatory instruction to turn right in order to avoid overflying the townships of Tong and Upper Coll;

(2) if the standard operating procedures for all military aircraft performing practice approaches at RAF Stornoway include a mandatory instruction to turn right in order to avoid overflying the townships of Tong and Upper Coll;

(3) if the standard operating procedures for all civilian jet aircraft operating under contract to his Department taking off from RAF Stornoway include a mandatory instruction to turn right in order to avoid overflying the townships of Tong and Upper Coll;

(4) if the standard operating procedures for all civilian jet aircraft operating under contract to his Department performing practice approaches at RAF Stornoway include a mandatory instruction to turn right in order to avoid overflying the townships of Tong and Upper Coll;

(5) if the 70 dbA noise contour for RAF Stornoway incorporates the noise made by aircraft making straight-in approaches in a southerly direction.

Mr. Freeman: Yes.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what account was taken of military jet aircraft carrying out practice approaches, overshoots and practice diversions at RAF Stornoway in the calculation of the 70 dbA noice contour around the airfield.

Mr. Freeman: Full account was taken of military jet aircraft approaching to land in the calculation of the computer — predicted 70 dbA noise contour for RAF

Stornoway. Other manoeuvres, including overshoots, were not included in the calculation but will be measured during the forthcoming noise survey.

Stand-off Nuclear Missile

Mr. Kirkhope: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what work his Department has carried out on the development of a stand-off nuclear missile for the RAF; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I cannot add to the reply which my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence gave to the hon. Member for Sheffield, Hillsborough (Mr. Flannery) on 26 January 1988 at column 167.

Nuclear Short-Range Missile

Mr. Kirkhope: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what work his Department has carried out on the choice of a new nuclear short-range missile.

Mr. Ian Stewart: None. In the first instance this is a matter for the United States Government who are currently considering SACEUR's requirement for a follow-on to the Lance surface-to-surface missile system. No decisions on modernisation as it affects British forces have yet been taken.

Gibraltar Shooting

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what specific branches of the armed services were involved in the shooting of three people in Gibraltar on Sunday 6 March.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I have nothing further to add to the statement made by my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on 7 March at columns 21-22.

Special Air Service

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many prisoners have been taken by personnel of the Special Air Service in their operations in the last 10 years; who those people were; and what was their subsequent fate;

(2) in how many incidents people have been killed in operations by the Special Air Service in the last 10 years; who those people were; and where and in what circumstances they were killed;

(3) what instructions, beyond those applying to other units of the armed forces, govern the use of lethal force by the Special Air Service.

Mr. Ian Stewart: It has been the policy of successive Governments not to comment on the operations or activities of special forces.

NATO/Warsaw Pact (Tactical Aircraft Capacity)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing (a) the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation's total tactical aircraft capacity and that of the Warsaw pact and (b) the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation's tactical aircraft capability devoted to the European theatre and that of the Warsaw pact.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The Statement on the Defence Estimates 1987 (figure 13 of annex A) shows the balance of NATO and Warsaw pact tactical aircraft in Europe from the Atlantic to the Urals. For these purposes, tactical aircraft are defined as including reconnaissance aircraft, fighters, fighter bombers, light bombers and air defence aircraft. It is the imbalance of NATO and Warsaw pact conventional forces in Europe that is of direct concern to NATO, and it is not our practice to publish figures for these forces deployed worldwide.

NATO Summit (Radio Interview)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will seek to obtain for his departmental library a copy of the transcript of the interview given by the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation General Secretary, Lord Carrington, to the BBC Radio Four "World Tonight" programme concerning the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation summit on 3 March.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The library of the Ministry of Defence seeks to obtain all publications relevant to the working needs and interests of the Department where such material can be satisfactorily published on the open market. Transcripts of programmes transmitted by the BBC are deposited with the BBC written archives centre and are not normally available on the open market.

Hong Kong

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his policy with regard to the amount of defence costs in Hong Kong to be borne by the United Kingdom; and what are the implications of the Sino-British joint declaration for those costs.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Negotiations on a successor agreement to the current defence costs agreement with Hong Kong are in hand. Under the provisions of the joint declaration we remain responsible for the defence of Hong Kong until 1997.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Living Standards

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what level of pay rise would be required by the average employee paying tax in order to compensate for price increases over the past year.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what level of pay rise would be required by the average employee paying tax in order to compensate for price increases over the past year.

Mr. Lilley: In the year to January 1988 the living standards of the average employee paying tax would have been maintained by an increase in gross taxable income of about 1¼ per cent.

Retail Prices Index (Error)

Mr. Gregory: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the level of underfunding in total, and expressed per public service pensioner, of the public sector pension bill as a result of the miscalculation of the retail prices index; what is the number of public service pensioners involved; what estimate has been made of the administration costs if the underfunding were to be distributed to each pensioner; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: The underestimation of the retail prices index led to payments to public service pensioners in the main superannuation schemes which the Government administer centrally (teachers, National Health Service, Civil Service, armed forces, and colonial pension schemes) being £7·2 million lower in total than they would otherwise have been, an average of £5·70 for each of the 1,263,000 pensioners in these schemes. The administrative cost of compensating each pensioner would have amounted to over £2·6 million, or more than a third of the total amount of compensation to be disbursed. These estimates underly the decision, announced in my answer of 18 December 1987, at columns 845-46, to make donations to charities, including those active in support of retired or needy public service pensioners, instead of compensating pensioners individually.

Government Publications (Braille Copies)

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will authorise Her Majesty's Stationery Office to release, without charge, or at printed publication price only, computer disks of Government publications, to enable the Royal National Institute for the Blind, or its subcontractors, to produce braille copies of those publications; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: Her Majesty's Stationery Office is ready and willing to enter into negotiations with the Royal Institute for the Blind, or its subcontractors, for the supply to it of those Government publications which are readily available in machine-readable form. Given HMSO's statutory obligations as a trading fund, however, it would be inappropriate for it to supply this material on an on-going basis at less than the extra cost of providing it, though it would be able to supply sample disks or tapes without charge to assist any initial research and development.

Rating Reform

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when and in what form he plans to make announcements about future levels of the national non-domestic rate; and when he proposes to exercise his power, or indicate that he will not exercise his power, to set the national non-domestic rate multiplier under the proposed amendments to the Local Government Finance Bill.

Mr. Major [holding answer 10 March 1988]: Under provisions of the Local Government Finance Bill now before Parliament, the Government will, in 1990, set NNDR multipliers in England and Wales so as to produce the same yield of business rates in each country as if the rate poundages set by local authorities in 1989 had been indexed to the retail prices index and there had been no revaluation. In subsequent years, the presumption will be that indexation of the NNDR multipliers to the RPI provided for in the Bill will take place. Equivalent provisions are already in the Abolition of Domestic Rates Etc. (Scotland) Act. If, however, I decide to use powers in the proposed amendments to increase the NNDR multipliers by less than the RPI in any year, an announcement would be made before the RSG reports for that year had been approved by Parliament.

NHS (Expenditure)

Sir Barney Hayhoe: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest estimated outturn for expenditure on the National Health Service in 1987-88; what increase is planned for 1988-89; and what change this represents over that indicated in the Autumn Statement 1987 and the public expenditure White Paper (Cm. 288-1).

Mr. Lawson [holding answer 4 March 1988]: The estimated outturn for expenditure on the NHS in the United Kingdom in 1987-88 contained in the public expenditure White Paper was £20,569 million. However, this did not include the additional £102 million in health authorities' cash limits announced on 16 December. Expenditure in 1988-89 is planned to rise to £21,818 million, an increase of £1,147 million or 5·5 per cent. over 1987-88 when the additional £102 million for this financial year is taken into account. Revised estimates of the 1987-88 outturn for voted expenditure will be published in the main Estimates on Budget day.

Housing Benefit and Family Credit

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many households are in receipt of housing benefit or family credit; if he will give for 1988-89 for these households the total reduction in the income tax payments resulting from a reduction in the basic rate of tax to 25 per cent.; and if he will estimate the annual saving to the Exchequer in payment of housing benefit and family credit resulting from a reduction in the basic rate of tax to 25p.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 23 February 1988]: I have been asked to reply.

Approximately 6·6 million people are expected to receive housing benefit and or family credit in 1988-89. For those within this group who pay income tax, the reduction in tax payments from a 2p reduction in the basic rate would be £36 million in a full year. The savings in family credit and housing benefit might approach £20 million. Over two thirds of this saving would arise on family credit.

Income Tax

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the net change in the annual income of a married couple with one earner and two school age children living in rented accommodation, for which they pay the average council house rent and average rates, of a cut in the basic rate of tax to 25p (a) before taking account of any change in their entitlement to housing benefit and family credit and (b) after taking account of any change in their housing benefit entitlement assuming the earner is on (i) half average earnings, (ii) average earnings and (iii) one and a half times average earnings.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 23 February 1988]: I have been asked to reply.

The information, for a married couple with two children aged 8 and 11, is shown in the table:

Net change in annual income with 25p basic rate of tax

Earnings (£pw)	Before Entitlement to Housing Benefit and Family Credit	After Change in Housing Benefit and Family Credit Entitlement
£pw	£pa	£pa
122	48·36	14·56
245	176·28	176·28
367	303·16	303·16

All other basic assumptions are consistent with "Impact of the Reformed Structure of Income Related Benefits", October 1987, copies of which are held in the Library.

WALES

Welsh Language

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list those persons, bodies and associations which submitted unsolicited evidence to his Department on the desirability of new Welsh language legislation during the consultation exercise carried out in 1986 and 1987.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: This information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales which primary schools in each local education authority in Wales (a) use the Welsh language as the main language of instruction, (b) use some Welsh as a medium of instruction and (c) undertake little or no instruction through the medium of Welsh.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The following table shows the numbers of primary schools in each local education authority in Wales which, in September 1986, fell into the categories:

(a) schools having classes where Welsh is the sole or main medium of instruction of first or second language pupils;

(b) schools having classes of first or second language pupils where some of the teaching is through the medium of Welsh; and

(c) schools where either no Welsh is taught, or where there are classes where Welsh is taught as a second language but is not used as a teaching medium.

The names of schools falling into each of the categories could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales which of the secondary schools in each of the local education authorities in Wales teach five or more of the foundation subjects outlined in the Education Reform Bill at present before Parliament through the medium of the Welsh language.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Until the national curriculum is implemented it will not be possible to collect information in the form requested. However, on the basis of the statistical returns made by schools in September 1987, the Welsh Office's best estimates are that more than half of the foundation subjects specified in the Education Reform Bill were taught wholly or partly in Welsh in the following secondary schools:

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list all the institutions of (a) higher and (b) further education in Wales, showing what funds were allocated at each of these institutions during the academic year 1986/87 specifically for the promotion of teaching through the medium of the Welsh language.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave to him on Thursday 10 March.

Graham Sutherland Art Gallery

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received concerning the funding of the Graham Sutherland art gallery, Picton castle, The Rhos, Haverfordwest, Pembrokeshire; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: Representations have been received from the owner of Picton castle suggesting that the National Museum of Wales should assume responsibility for running the Graham Sutherland art gallery. The matter is receiving attention.

National Museum of Wales

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what financial assistance is to be provided to the National Museum of Wales for the financial year 1988-89 by his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: Subject to the agreement of Parliament, grant-in-aid to the National Museum of Wales in 1988-89 will be £11,354,000.

Loans and Grants

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give the amount received in Wales in the form of the various loans and grants by the European Economic Community for each of the years of the United Kingdom's membership, in the manner of his reply to the hon. Member for Wrexham of 27 March 1987, Official Report, column 280, updated to the latest available date.

Mr. Peter Walker: Further to the reply of 27 March 1987, at columns 279-80, assistance granted to Wales from the European regional development fund in 1987 was £53·9 million (quota). Details of other indentifiable loans and grants to Wales in 1987 are not readily available.

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give the amount received in Clwyd in the form of various loans and grants by the European Economic Community for each of the years of United Kingdom membership, in the manner of his reply to the hon. Member for Wrexham of 9 April 1987, Official Report, columns 369-70, updated to the latest available date.

Mr. Peter Walker: Futher to the reply of 9 April 1987, at columns 369-70, total European regional development fund granted to Clwyd during the calendar year 1987 was £7·5 million (quota). Details of other EC grants and loans to Clwyd in 1987 are not readily available.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

British Steel (Advertising)

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether the cost of the current British Steel advertising campaign (a) on television and (b) in other media is charged to privatisation publicity costs.

Mr. Atkins: No. The costs of BSC's current advertising campaign are being met entirely by the corporation.

Job Creation

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many jobs have been created by inward investment in the north of England, Scotland and Wales in each year since 1978; and how many are in prospect in each of these regions.

Mr. Atkins: The following are Invest in Britain Bureau figures for the numbers of jobs expected to be created or safeguarded, long term, by inward investment projects announced in each year since 1979 (the earliest for which formal records are available) in the areas specified. The figures are based upon information provided by the companies themselves: not every decision is accompanied by an employment estimate.

Regional Development

Mr. Page: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what financial support he is offering to the regional development organisations in England in 1988-89.

Mr. Atkins: I have offered the five English regional development organisations nearly £2·8 million in grant-aid for inward investment promotion programmes for 1988-89, over £280,000 more than in 1987-88. I have allocated the grant-aid as follows:

	Up to £
Northern Development Company (in the north-east)	935,000
Yorkshire and Humberside Development Association	630,000
Inward Ltd. (in the north-east)	450,000
West Midlands Industrial Development Association	400,000
Devon and Cornwall Development Bureau	375,000

I have also offered the Northern Development Company grant-aid of up to £200,000 for its wider activities aimed at the regeneration of the region. (This compares with £180,000 for 1987-88). In addition, given the NDC's support to the small business sector, a further £30,000 will be offered by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Employment.

Consistent with the thrust of the enterprise initiative, with its strong emphasis on self-help and professionalism, I have been reviewing the Government's future funding policy for the regional development organisations. In future years I shall be looking to the regions' private sector organisations and local authorities to become much more closely involved in both the management and the funding of these bodies.

EMPLOYMENT

Labour Statistics

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list in rank order the parliamentary constituencies in Great Britain according to their ratio of female to male unemployment at the latest convenient date.

Mr. Lee: The following information is available from the Library. The table shows the numbers of male and female unemployed claimants in each parliamentary constituency in Great Britain ranked according to the ratio of female to male claimants, on 14 January 1988.

Mr. Allen McKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give for each year from 1979 to date the numbers unemployed, by categories for (a) the United Kingdom, as a whole, (b) Yorkshire and Humberside, (c) Barnsley metropolitan council area and (d) Barnsley West and Penistone constituency.

Mr. Lee [holding answer 22 January]: I am sending the hon. Member a computer printout showing the numbers of unemployed claimants analysed by sex, age and duration of employment in each of the areas requested and Great Britain at January of each year from 1984 to 1988, the numbers of unemployed claimants in Yorkshire and Humberside and Great Britain at January 1983, and the numbers of unemployed registrants in Yorkshire and Humberside and Great Britain at January of each year from 1979 to 1982. Figures for the United Kingdom are not available as comparable figures for Northern Ireland are not available over the time period requested. Unemployment figures for constituencies and local authority areas are derived from the ward-based system and are available only from June 1983. The information is also available in the Library.

Retail Price Index Items (International Comparisons)

Mr. Higgins: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information he has as to the 10 most important items in the retail price index of each European Economic Community country and the percentage of consumers' expenditure on each of them.

Mr. Lee: Comparative information is not available from national price indices but the statistical office of the European Communities has compiled the following figures on the basis of budget surveys dating from around 1979. Like all international comparisons of consumers' expenditure they should be treated with caution as it is difficult to obtain data for different countries on a consistent basis.

TRANSPORT

Motorways (Surface Water)

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether his Department has recently assessed the effect of surface water on motorways; and if he has any proposals to improve motorway water drainage.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Yes. The Department has recently assessed the effect of surface water on motorways. We are content that the present systems for dealing with it are generally effective. Improved methods of drainage are one of the many aspects of motorways that the Department keeps under constant review. If the hon. Member has information about a particular problem perhaps he would write to me.

Motorways (Pollution)

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what evidence he has of the extent of airborne pollution from motorways and of what contribution this makes towards the build-up of toxic heavy metals in the soil; and what action he proposes to take to ameliorate the position.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Department has collected evidence of the levels of airborne pollution at sites on the M4, M11, M25 and M40 motorways and continues to monitor levels at a site on the M4.

A report prepared in 1974 by the Transport and Road Research Laboratory, "Measurements of Particulate Lead on the M4 Motorway at Harlington", found that lead from vehicle emissions did not significantly affect the composition of the soil at distances in excess of 15 m from the edge of the road. This finding has recently been confirmed by other workers in the field. A copy of this report has been deposited in the Library.

We are beginning to see the beneficial effects of the phased reductions of over 60 per cent. in recent years of the permitted lead content of fuel. The Government have already announced that the vast majority of new cars produced in the United Kingdom after 1990 must be capable of running on lead-free fuel. We expect this action to result in a further substantial reduction of air pollution from vehicles.

M11 (Service Station)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans there are to build a service station on the M11 motorway; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Department has outline planning clearance for a motorway service area at the M11/A120 junction at Birchanger, near Stansted.

A public inquiry is to be held in May into the acquisition of land, local road diversions and improvements. The inquiry will also consider an appeal covering a private proposal for a service station at the same junction.

Second Severn Crossing

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when, pursuant to his answer of 7 March, he expects to make a decision or whether forecast traffic growth warrants the construction of the second Severn bridge; and, if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: My right hon. Friend announced on 21 October 1987 that we had commissioned consultants to undertake detailed engineering and environmental surveys along the recommended route, and to assist in the investigation of the funding, contracting and procedural options. As part of that work the traffic forecasts used in the previous study will be reviewed and revised to take account of the higher traffic levels actually experienced since they were prepared. Their effect on the economic benefits will also be reassessed. When that has been done I hope we shall be able to decide on the timing of its construction.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

"Radioactive Britain" (TV Programme)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will seek to obtain for his departmental library a copy of the transcript of the Channel 4 Dispatches programme, "Radioactive Britain", broadcast on 4 March.

Mr. Donald Thompson: No, but my officials are aware of the contents of this programme.

Sheep (Radioactivity)

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether restrictions on the movement and slaughter of sheep were placed on any farms at Charlesworth, near Glossop after the Chernobyl accident; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding answer 10 March 1988]: No.

SCOTLAND

Homeless People (Mortgage Default)

Mr. McTaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his estimate of the number of people who are homeless in Scotland as a result of mortgage default; and what was this figure in 1983.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The number of people homeless as a result of mortgage default is not held centrally. The number of applicant households, considered by local authorities to be homeless, who quoted a court order for mortgage default as the reason for their application so far recorded for 1986-87 is about 300. This category was not separately identified prior to March 1984.

Blood

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what estimate he has of the percentage of blood donated in the west of Scotland which will be going to private patients in five years' time.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: It is too soon to produce accurate estimates of the amount of blood which will be made available to the private sector in five years time, from whatever part of Scotland it is donated.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any proposals to privatise the blood transfusion service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My right hon. and learned Friend has no proposals to privatise the Scottish national blood transfusion service.

Technical Education

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he is taking to improve the technical curriculum of secondary schools in Scotland and, in particular the techniques and technology of graphics communication.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: A standard grade course in craft and design has been introduced and standard grade technological studies will be available from autumn 1988. Both courses embody a modern approach to design and technology.

The consultative committee on the curriculum is also reviewing the technological activities area of the curriculum, and the need for further courses in graphical communication.

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the specific terms of reference for the review of technical education in secondary schools in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The purpose of the review is to consider subjects, in particular technical drawing and engineering, for which there are currently ordinary grade examinations but for which there is no provision at present in the standard grade development programme; and, in view of the relationship of these subjects to standard grade craft and design and standard grade technological studies, to make recommendations about further courses which might be needed to meet modern requirements.

Grant Thornton

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) whether tenders were invited for the supply of services now provided by Messrs. Grant Thornton to the health services unit in the Common Services Agency headed by Dr. David Steel;

(2) what steps he took to satisfy himself that Grant Thornton does not act as adviser to any person or organisation concerned in the provision or promotion of private health care or services to any part of the National Health Service in the United Kingdom;

(3) what services are provided by Grant Thornton to the health service unit of the Common Services Agency headed by Dr. David Steel; when it was engaged and on whose authority; and what is the amount of its fees rendered to date.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My right hon. and learned Friend was not involved in the appointment of Grant Thornton by health boards jointly.

Technical and Vocational Education Initiative

Mr. McTaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to expand technical and vocational education initiative centres in secondary schools.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The extension of the technical and vocational education initiative to all secondary schools and further education colleges is now under way, with Dumfries and Galloway already participating, and Lothian, Borders, Fife and the Renfrew division of Strathclyde having received MSC approval to do so from autumn 1988. Preparatory projects will also start in Orkney and Shetland on that date, with the result that every education authority in Scotland will then be participating in TVEI either at pilot, preparatory or extension stage.

Scottish Bus Group

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what time scale he has given his merchant bank advisors to report on the privatisation of the Scottish Bus Group; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: I have asked Quayle Munro Ltd. to provide me with advice by mid-April on the full range of options for privatisation of the Scottish Bus Group. Once I have that advice I will be able to decide upon the best form of privatisation and what legislative provisions will be required.

Caesarian Section Deliveries

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many babies were delivered by caesarian section on a Friday in each health board area in each of the last 10 years;

(2) how many babies were delivered by caesarian section in each health board area in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 8 March 1988]: The number of caesarian sections from 1976 to 1985 (the latest year for which information is held centrally) is given in the following table:

Attraction of Industry

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the overseas firms attracted to Scotland by his Department or agencies responsible to his Department in each of the last 10 years, the number of jobs created and the country of origin of each application.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 10 March 1988]: Comprehensive information in the form requested is not available. However, information on the numbers of offers of regional selective assistance (RSA) made in Scotland to overseas-owned firms since 1978 grouped by country of ownership, together with associated jobs is as set out. This table excludes those overseas-owned firms attracted to Scotland by, for example, Locate in Scotland which did not receive offers of RSA.

Year of initial offer	Number of RSA offers made		Associated new and safeguarded jobs
	USA	Rest of World	USA	Rest of world

1986	15	6	4,050	420
1987	11	8	2,800	3,110

Note: A firm is defined to be overseas-owned where more than 50 per cent. of its share capital is overseas-owned. Some overseas-owned firms will already have plant(s) in Scotland when receiving an offer of RSA.

Regional Aid

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary for State of Scotland if he will give the total amount of money spent in Scotland on regional development grants and regional selective assistance to indigenous firms and inward investing firms for each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 10 March 1988]: The information requested on regional development grants is not available. Expenditure since 1978 on regional selective assistance to indigenous firms and overseas-owned firms is set out by calendar year.

	Indigenous Firms (£ million)	Overseas-owned Firms (£ million)
1978	9·0	5·3
1979	8·9	4·7
1980	10·6	9·4

1985	18·5	22·6
1986	17·6	20·0
1987	17·9	19·1

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many applications for regional selective assistance were made in Scotland in each year from 1979-80 to 1986-87; how many were successful; and how many applications are forecast for 1987-88, 1988-89, 1989-90, and 1990-91.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 10 March 1988]: Information on applications for regional selective assistance (RSA) for the years 1979-80 to 1987-88 (to end February 1988) is as set out.

The number of applications of RSA in future years will depend on the number and quality of projects put forward by firms. It is not possible to provide a forecast for future years with any degree of confidence. But the number is expected to increase following the termination of the revised regional development grant scheme, and additional provision has been set aside in my right hon. and learned Friend's industry, energy, trade and employment programme to allow for this.

	Number of applications	[1] Number of successful applications
1979-80	324	273
1980-81	103	88
1981-82	197	162
1982-83	291	242
1983-84	291	231
1984-85	282	211
1985-86	154	121
1986-87	179	155
1987-88[2]	214	170

[1] Successful applications are defined to be those which resulted in an offer.

[2] Includes applications and offers linked to these applications in the period 1 April 1987 to 29 February 1988. The number of associated offers for this period undercounts the final total because of applications still being processed.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many applications for regional development grant were made in Scotland in each year from 1979-80 to 1986-7; how many were successful; and how many applications are forecast for 1987-88, 1988-89, 1989-90 and 1990-91.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 10 March 1988]: Information for the period 1979-80 to 1983-84 is not available. Figures of claims under the old regional development grant (RDG) scheme and of applications under the revised RDG scheme in the years 1984-85 to 1987-88 (to end February 1988) are set out in the table.

Claims under the old RDG scheme continued to be made up to December 1987 against assets provided before 29 November 1985 and will continue into 1988-89 for a small number of projects in respect of assets provided as part of a project on which an associated offer of regional selective assistance was made before 29 November 1984. The revised RDG scheme is shortly to be terminated. No new applications will be accepted after 31 March 1988.

	Old RDG Scheme Number of claims	Revised RDG scheme Number of applications	Revised RDG scheme Number of successful applications[1]
1984-85	7,863	157	121
1985-86	7,776	2,371	1,925
1986-87	2,229	4,102	3,320
1987-88[2]	400	4,467	2,244

[1] Successful applications are defined to be those which resulted in an approval.

[2] Includes claims, applications and approvals up to 29 February 1988. The number of approvals in this period undercounts the final total because of applications still being processed.

PULSE

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he or any of his minsterial colleagues or officials have met representatives of the privatisation company PULSE; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind [holding answer 7 March 1988]: Neither I nor any of my ministerial colleagues or officials have had any official meetings with representatives of PULSE.

Departmental Programmes (Costs)

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will estimate the expenditure on his industry, energy, training and employment programmes for each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 10 March 1988]: Gross expenditure on the items now forming part of my right hon. and learned Friend's industry, energy, trade and employment programme for the last 10 years is as follows:

	£ million
1977-78	187·0
1978-79	209·8
1979-80	191·6
1980-81	260·6
1981-82	295·9
1982-83	474·9
1983-84	339·3
1984-85	319·5
1985-86	341·8
1986-87	393·9

The figures include throughout expenditure on items, particularly regional development grant, which are now the responsibility of my right hon. and learned Friend, but have not been for all of the period.

Business Investment Grant Scheme

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will estimate the amount of expenditure on the business investment grant scheme to be paid out in Scotland for each of the years 1988-89, 1989-90 and 1990-91.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 10 March 1988]: Responsibility for the new grants scheme for investment projects for small firms located within development areas in Scotland lies with the Industry Department for Scotland under section 8 of the Industrial Development Act 1982. Expenditure on the new grant will depend on demand from companies with suitable projects. But present expectation is that regional selective assistance (RSA) and related schemes, including the new investment grant, will account for some £60 million, £60 million and £80 million in 1988-89, 1989-90 and 1990-91, respectively.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Kampuchea

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what information he has about the role of the Pol Pot faction of the Khmer Rouge in the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea;

(2) what information he has about the contribution of the Pol Pot faction of the Khmer Rouge to the military force available to the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea.

Mr. Eggar: The Khmer Rouge has the strongest military forces of the three constituent groups of the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea. Its forces operate independently from those of the other two groups.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has as to which portfolios within the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea are held by the Pol Pot faction of the Khmer Rouge.

Mr. Eggar: The Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea (CGDK) has a Cabinet comprising one leader from each of its three constituent groups, of which the Khmer Rouge is one. No distinction is made between different Khmer Rouge factions. The CGDK is administered by four co-ordinating committees, responsible for national defence, economy and finance, culture and education and public health and social affairs. Each constituent group provides one representative to each of these committees. However, the declaration issued when the CGDK was formed states that each constituent group should maintain an independent organisational structure and political identity, and retain freedom of action.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on what occasions in the last five years he has met Prince Sihanouk or his representatives, Son Sann or his representatives, or representatives of the Khmer Rouge faction of the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea what matters were discussed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. and learned Friend has met Son Sann, in his capacity as President of the Khmer People's National Liberation Front (KPNLF), on three occasions in the last five years, most recently in November 1986. He has not met Prince Sihanouk, but officials maintain contact with the prince's representatives and those of Son Sann. The main purpose of such meetings is to discuss the prospects for reaching a peaceful settlement in Cambodia. We have no dealings with the Khmer Rouge.

Iraq

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been made to the Iraqi authorities about their brutality towards Kurds; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: We regret the denial of basic human rights in Iraq, and the harsh treatment meted out to the Kurds causes particular concern. We take every opportunity to express our concern to the Iraqis about abuses of human rights in their country, and did so most recently during my visit to Iraq from 23 to 26 February.

Gibraltar Shooting

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many bullets were fired at the three Irish Republican Army terrorists killed in Gibraltar on Sunday 6 March; what were the points of entry into the bodies; and at what range the shots were fired in each case.

Mr. Mellor: A coroner's inquest will be held on those killed. It would not be appropriate for me to comment further.

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he intends to hold an inquiry into the shooting incident in Gibraltar on 6 March.

Mr. Mellor: No. An inquest will be held by the Gibraltar coroner. In accordance with local law, this will be held with a jury.

UN Session on Disarmament

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to make support funding available to non-governmental organisations to attend the United Nation's third special session on disarmament 31 May to 25 June, in New York.

Mr. Mellor: We have not provided funding for this purpose at previous special sessions and do not intend to change our policy on this occasion. We do, however, hope that as many non-governmental organisations as possible will be able to attend the special session as they have a significant role to play. In recognition of this we have appointed Mr. David Summerhayes, the FCO disarmament adviser, to act as liaison officer between our delegation and those non-governmental organisations attending the special session.

Arms Control and Disarmament

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish in the Official Report the texts of the three resolutions on arms control and disarmament tabled by the United Kingdom at the 42nd session of the United Nations General Assembly.

Mr. Mellor: The texts as adopted by the General Assembly of the three resolutions on arms control and disarmament tabled by the United Kingdom at the 42nd session of the United Nations General Assembly are as follows:

Bilateral nuclear-arms negotiations

The General Assembly,

Recalling that at their meeting at Geneva in November 1985 the leaders of the United States of America and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics committed themselves to the objective of working out effective agreements aimed at preventing an arms race in space and terminating it on Earth,

Noting that in their joint statement of 8 January 1985 the Government of the United States of America and the Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics agreed that the subject of the negotiations was a complex of questions concerning space and nuclear arms, both strategic and intermediate-range, with all these questions considered and resolved in their interrelationship,

Noting with satisfaction that the United States of America and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics have reached an agreement on the total elimination of their intermediate-range and shorter-range missiles,

Noting with satisfaction the agreement of the two Governments that a similarly intensive effort will be made to achieve a treaty on a 50 per cent. reduction in their strategic offensive arms within the framework of the Geneva nuclear and space talks,

Noting further with satisfaction that, at their forthcoming meeting, the leaders of the two countries will consider thoroughly the development of instructions to delegations on a future treaty on a 50 per cent. reduction in United States and Soviet strategic offensive arms and on the observance of and non-withdrawal from the ABM Treaty for an agreed period,

Believing that, through negotiations pursued in a spirit of flexibility and with full account taken of the security interests of all States, it is possible to achieve far-reaching and effectively verifiable agreements,

Firmly convinced that an early agreement in these negotiations, in accordance with the principle of undiminished security at the lowest possible level of armaments, would be of crucial importance for the strengthening of international peace and security,

Further convinced that the international community should encourage the Government of the United States of America and the Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics in their endeavours, taking into account both the importance and complexity of their negotiations,

1. Welcomes the agreement between the United States of America and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics to conclude a treaty eliminating their intermediate-range and shorter-range missiles;

2. Notes with satisfaction that President Reagan and General Secretary Gorbachev have agreed to meet in the United States beginning on 7 December 1987, and that a further meeting in the Soviet Union is envisioned between them in the first half of 1988;

3. Calls upon the Government of the United States of America and the Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics to spare no effort in seeking the attainment of all their agreed objectives in the negotiations, in accordance with the security interests of all States and the universal desire for progress towards disarmament, in particular early achievement of a treaty implementing the agreement to reduce their strategic offensive arms by 50 per cent. which could be signed during President Reagan's visit to Moscow;

4. Invites the two Governments concerned to keep other States Members of the United Nations duly informed of progress in those negotiations between the United States of America and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, in accordance with paragraph 114 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, the first special session devoted to disarmament;

5. Expresses its firmest possible encouragement and support for the bilateral negotiations and their successful conclusion.

Objective information on military matters

The General Assembly

Recalling paragraph 105 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, the first special session devoted to disarmament, which encourages Member States to ensure a better flow of information with regard to the various aspects of disarmament to avoid dissemination of false and tendentious information concerning armaments and to concentrate on the danger of escalation of the arms race and on the need for general and complete disarmament under effective international control,

Recalling its previous resolutions on the subject,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General prepared in conformity with resolution 41/59 B of 3 December 1986,

Recognising that the adoption of concrete, confidence-building measures on a global, regional or subregional level would greatly contribute to a reduction in international tension,

Believing that the adoption of such measures would contribute to greater openness and transparency, thus helping to prevent misperceptions of military capabilities and intentions, which could induce States to undertake armaments programmes leading to the acceleration of the arms race, in particular the nuclear-arms race, and to heightened international tensions,

Believing that objective information on military capabilities, in particular of nuclear weapons States and other militarily significant States, could contribute to the building of confidence among States and to the conclusion of concrete disarmament agreements and thereby help to halt and reverse the arms race,

Convinced that greater openness on military activities, inter alia, through transmittal of relevant information on these activities, including on the levels of military budgets, would contribute to increased confidence among States,

Taking into account the work undertaken in the Disarmament Commission on the reduction of military budgets,

Noting that an increased number of States have provided annual reports on military expenditure in conformity with the international system for the standardised reporting of military expenditures under the auspices of the United Nations,

1. Reaffirms its firm conviction that a better flow of objective information on military capabilities would help relieve international tension and contribute to the building of confidence among States on a global, regional or subregional level and to the conclusion of concrete disarmament agreements:

2. Recommends that those global, regional and subregional organizations that have already expressed support for the principle of practical and concrete confidence-building measures of a military nature on a global, regional or subregional level should intensify their efforts with a view to adopting such measures;

3. Recommends that all States, in particular nuclear-weapon States and other militarily significant States, should consider implementing additional measures based on the principles of openness and transparency, such as, for example, the international system for the standardized reporting of military expenditures, with the aim of achieving a realistic comparison of military budgets, facilitating the availability of objective information on, as well as objective assessment of, military capabilities and contributing towards the process of disarmament;

4. Invites all Member States to transmit to the Secretary-General, not later than 15 April 1988, their views concerning ways and means of ensuring confidence and further oppenness and transparency in military matters for submission to the General Assembly at its third special session devoted to disarmament;

5. Requests the General Assembly at its third special session devoted to disarmament to take into account all the provisions of the present resolution in its deliberations;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its third special session devoted to disarmament on the implementation of all the provisions of the resolutions on the subject;

7. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-third session the item entitled "Objective information on military matters".

United Nations disarmament studies

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 40/152 K of 16 December 1985 and 41/86 C of 4 December 1986,

Reaffirming the valuable contribution that United Nations studies can make to the discussion and consideration of disarmament issues,

Noting with appreciation the views of Member States contained in the reports of the Secretary-General,

Taking into consideration that the Advisory Board on Disarmament Studies also functions as the Board of Trustees of the United Nations for Disarmament Research,

Noting that the establishment of the United Nations Institute for Disarmament Research offers new opportunities regarding research in the field of disarmament,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Advisory Board on Disarmament Studies;

2. Affirms that the final decision on how United Nations disarmament studies should be prepared rests with the General Assembly;

3. Takes note of the conclusion of the Advisory Board that consensus should be the normal practice in study groups, but that the expression of differing opinions where views cannot be reconciled should be permitted;

4. Invites Member States to take note of the conclusions and recommendations of the Advisory Board in presenting proposals for disarmament studies or research.

Hong Kong

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has for the resettlement of Vietnamese refugees in Hong Kong in the years up to 1997.

Mr. Eggar: In May last year we decided to accept into the United Kingdom over the next two years a further 468 Vietnamese refugees from Hong Kong. In parallel with our own and other countries' resettlement efforts we are pursuing, in consultation with the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and countries concerned, durable solutions to the Indo-Chinese refugee problems.

Panamanian Consulate Offices

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has on the current situation in respect of the Panamanian consulate offices; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: An incident at the consulate offices on 7 March is the subject of police inquiries.

SOCIAL SERVICES

School Nurses

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list in the Official Report (a) the number of school nurses, given as whole-time, part-time and whole-time equivalent, (b) the establishment figure and (c) the number of vacant posts in each English regional health authority, for each year over the last five years up to the latest for which figures are availble.

Mr. Newton: I regret that information on establishments and vacant posts is not collected centrally.

The number of nursing staff employed in the schools health service, including special schools, at September 1983 to September 1986, is given in the table. Similar information for September 1987 is not yet available.

Although the table shows a 2·7 per cent. reduction in nursing staff, a decline of approximately 5 per cent. in the school population has also occurred over the same period.

Hospital Closures

Mr. Biffen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many letters he has received concerning the proposals for hospital closures tabled by the Shropshire health authority; and how many of these supported the proposals.

Mrs. Currie: We have received over 1,000 letters in recent months from hon. Members, local organisations and members of the public about health services in Shropshire. A high proportion of these were received prior to the commencement of the formal consultation on Shropshire health authority's proposals but no letters have expressed support for hospital closures in the district. All views will be taken into account.

Claybury Hospital

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Sevices why the pest control contract relating to Claybury hospital has not been renewed, from which date it expired; whether he proposes to offer advice to the district health authority on this matter; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: Health authorities are responsible for the management of pest control contracts within their districts. Details on local contracts are not collected centrally. The hon. Member may wish to contact Waltham Forest health authority to establish the current position on pest control at Claybury hospital.

Health circular, HC(86)14, issued in November 1986, sets out the requirements for hygiene and pest control in all health authority premises.

Expectant Mothers

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his policy in connection with expectant mothers being asked to take in their own nappies and vaseline when they enter National Health Service hospitals to be delivered.

Mrs. Currie: Responsibility for determining which articles expectant mothers are required to bring with them to hospital rests with individual health authorities. Among these are very often nappies and vaseline. Many expectant mothers welcome this opportunity to use their own belongings during this particular period. It is right that they should do so.

NHS (Review)

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will set out details of the consultation process which will take place within the National Health Service in connection with the proposed review of the future of the National Health Service.

Mr. Moore: I shall consider carefully any proposals put to me by bodies representing National Health Service interests.

Tax and Benefits System

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish tables, similar to those in hisDepartment's tax/benefit model table, showing net weekly spending power for a single childless person aged 18 to 24 years, earning (1) £40, (2) £50, (3) £60, (4) £70, (5) £80, (6) £90, and (7) £100 (a) under the existing tax and benefits system and (b) under the benefit system which will be implemented in April, in both cases assuming that the person is paying average local authority rent and rates.

Mr. Scott: The information requested is set out in the tables. It should be noted that the results are hypothetical in two senses. First, the results are based on average local authority rents and rates and do not present a balanced picture reflecting people's actual housing arrangements. Second, the other assumptions used are those set out in "Impact of the Reformed Structure of Income-Related Benefits" October 1987. However, this document, a copy of which is in the Library, suggests that about 20,000 under 25-year-olds will have lower disposable incomes after the payment of housing costs once the reformed structure of income-related benefits is in place. A half of these young people are expected to receive transitional protection so they will not get any less by way of weekly cash benefit.

Child Benefit

Mr. Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will estimate what level child benefit would have been in April had it been uprated this year in line with the retail price index, taking into account the error made in the retail price index between February 1986 and October 1987 inclusive.

Mr Scott: The general uprating of benefits is calculated from the published retail prices index. Had child benefit been uprated on this basis, the rate from April 1988 would have been £7·55 a week. The rate would have been the same if the error in the retail price index had been taken into account.

South-East Region District Health Authorities

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services, what amount of (a) capital and (b) revenue was made available to each of the south-east region district health authorities in (a) 1982-83 and (b) 1986-87; and what is the percentage change.

Mrs. Currie: Allocations to particular district health authorities are a matter for the relevant regional health authority.

Following is expenditure information derived from the annual accounts of the district health authorities within the South-East Thames region:

District Health Authority	Revenue Expenditure			Capital Expenditure
	1982-83 £ thousands	1986-87 £ thousands	Cash terms increase per cent.	1982-83 £ thousands	1986-87 £ thousands	Cash terms increase/ (decrease) per cent.

Lewisham and North Southwark	94,967	112,541	18	4,876	6,391	31

Notes:

1. The figures for capital expenditure include sums in respect of schemes within the districts recorded in the annual accounts of the South East Thames regional health authority. Revenue and capital expenditure incurred by the latter authority for the region as a whole is excluded.

2. Prior to 1 April 1985 the Brighton, Maidstone, Bexley, Bromley and West Lambeth district health authorities each had an associated family practitioner committee (FPC). Those authorities expenditure figures for 1982-83 include small elements relating to FPC's administrative expenses which are not separately identifiable.

Patients (Re-admissions)

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list, for each health authority region in England, the number of patients re-admitted to hospital in the last five years.

Mrs. Currie: I regret that this information is not held centrally.

Invalidity Benefit

Mr. Ken Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will compensate those people in receipt of invalidity benefit who will not be eligible for transitional addition as a result of the April uprating of national insurance benefits lifting them above the supplementary benefit income support level and thus making them liable to housing benefit tapers which will mean an actual loss to low income claimants.

Mr. Scott: We have no plans to do so.

Health Authorities (Land Sales)

Mr. David Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether, when surplus land or building is disposed of, the capital proceeds of sale go direct into the budget of the district health authority within whose boundaries the surplus land or building is situated or into the budget of the regional health authority concerned for subsequent distribution in the region at the discretion of the regional health authority.

Mrs. Currie: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to the hon. Member for Norwich, South (Mr. Garrett) on 26 November 1987 at column 330.

RAWP Formula

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make it his policy to seek parliamentary approval before making any significant change to the resource allocation working party formula.

Mr. Newton: I do not think this would be appropriate, but we will, of course, follow the practice of our predecessors in informing the House of any changes we may decide to make in the light of the outcome of the current review of the resource allocation working party formula.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the factors now used in calculating the resource allocation working party formula and the new ones that have been proposed to him for inclusion; and if he will indicate in each case whether the factor is related to the demand for health care or to the supply of existing provision.

Mr. Newton: The resource allocation working party formula measures the relative needs of each region by taking account of population (and the use made of health services by people of different age groups and sexes); morbidity as indicated by standardised mortality ratios; patient flows between regions; and higher staff costs in London and the south-east. Separate allocations are made to take account of the costs associated with medical teaching.

The National Health Service management board's review of the national RAWP formula is exploring the scope for improving the way in which the formula measures relative need. Aspects of the formula where the NHS management board identified scope for improvement were listed in the summary of recommendations for further analysis and research set out in the interim report on the review published in December 1986. A copy is in the Library.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the individuals and organisations which have made representations regarding changes in the resource allocation working party formula; and if he will indicate in each case whether the changes proposed by each would result in an overall faster or slower movement of resources towards the regions considered to be deprived by the present formula.

Mr. Newton: A list of respondents to the formal consultation on the review of the resource allocation working party formula is set out at annex D of the National Health Service management board's interim report on the review, published in December 1986. A copy is in the Library.

The overall aim of the review is to improve the sensitivity with which the formula measures relative need, and hence to refine the targets on which allocations to regions are based. Ministers take decisions each year on the pace of movement towards each region's target share of available resources. This process is not determined by the formula and is, therefore, not within the remit of the review.

Regional Health Authorities

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what monitoring there is by his Department of the equity of the criteria used by the regional health authorities to distribute resources to the districts.

Mr. Newton: The Department monitors regional health authorities' resource allocation methodologies and plans through the regions' long-term strategic plans and annual short-term programmes. As one of the central issues in these plans and programmes, resource distribution may also be discussed in regions' annual accountability reviews with Ministers and the National Health Service management board.

Blood

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what has been the level of blood donations in each of the blood transfusion areas of England and Wales for each of the past 10 years.

Mrs. Currie: The information requested is given in the table.

Blind People

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any plans to give special consideration to the needs of elderly blind people with regard to the new income support scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: Claimants who, or whose partners, are blind will qualify for the higher pensioner premium at age 60 rather than 80. Those claimants whose benefit entitlement under income support is lower than under supplementary benefit will receive transitional protection.

I have no plans for any other provisions.

"Radioactive Britain" (TV Programme)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will seek to obtain for his departmental library a copy of the transcript of the Channel 4 Dispatches programme, "Radioactive Britain", broadcast on 4 March.

Mrs. Currie: No, but officials have viewed the programme and are apprised of its contents.

Income Support

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what transitional protection there will be for most 16 and 17-year-olds currently in receipt of income support, in particular young householders, when the Social Security Act 1988 comes into effect.

Mr. Scott: It is intended that clause 4 of the current Social Security Bill will come into effect in September. Those 16 and 17-year-olds not entitled to income support will receive a bridging allowance from the Department of Employment provided they have registered for a YTS place. Housing benefit will also be available in appropriate cases.

The 16 and 17-year-olds who will be able to continue to receive income support will include those not required to be available for work, such as the severely disabled, those receiving a Government training allowance and lone parents. These situations will be prescribed in regulations.

Abortion

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if, pursuant to his answer of 8 February, Official Report, column 1115, the one case of mention of rape on a notification form for an abortion after 18 weeks concerns a woman under the age of majority.

Mr. Newton: The statistic referred to in my previous answer was provisional, and it related to gestation of 18 completed weeks and over. The age of the woman concerned was under the age of majority (that is, under 18 years old).

Generic Medicines

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any plans to examine the cost and method of supply of generic medicines to the National Health Service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moore: The White Paper "Promoting Better Health" commended voluntary generic prescribing by doctors as good professional practice and noted the expectation of its continued use in the future. It is important therefore that there should be wide availability of generic medicines throughout the country and that the market should operate efficiently. Together with my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales, I am appointing Touche Ross Management Consultants to study the market for generic medicines in Great Britain. They are being asked to examine the extent of competition in supplies to NHS hospitals and to family practitioner service contractors, the prices paid, the effectiveness of the systems for setting the prices of these medicines and the extent to which United Kingdom and other manufacturers can enter and remain in the market.

I am asking the consultants to report within six months. The contents of their report will necessarily be confidential because of the commercial information which it will contain. The terms of reference for the study are:

1. To study the market for generic medicines in Great Britain with particular reference to:
   - (a) the extent of competition in the supply of generic medicines;
   - (b) the similarities and differences between the ways in which generic medicines are procured by and distributed to:
     - (i) NHS hospitals;
     - (ii) FPS contractors (retail pharmacists and dispensing doctors);
   - (c) the prices paid for generic medicines by:
     - (i) NHS hospitals;

(ii) FPS contractors;

and the reasons for any differences in those prices;

(d) the effectiveness of the systems for setting prices for generic medicines in the Drug Tariffs and recovery of any difference between the Drug Tariff price and the price actually paid, noting that the system in Scotland differs in certain respects from that in England and Wales;

(e) the relationship between the prices of generic medicines and the extent to which United Kingdom and other manufacturers can enter and remain in the market.

2. In the light of the above:

(a) to put forward if possible proposals for improving the arrangements for the procurement, distribution and pricing of generic medicines, with particular reference to FPS contractors, which:

(i) are compatible with our international trading obligations (including EEC and GATT) and the independent contractor status of retail pharmacists and dispensing doctors;

(ii) take account of the range of ownership and management in retail pharmacy and the nature and level of involvement of wholesalers;

(iii) would stimulate further competition;

(iv) would ensure the availability of generic medicines at reimbursable prices throughout Great Britain;

(v) would lead to reductions in the cost of medicines to the NHS as a whole;

(vi) would ideally also further encourage the prescribing of generic medicines, where appropriate;

(b) to assess the effect of any proposals on United Kingdom and other manufacturers of generic medicines;

(c) to report within six months.

Income Support (Spending Power)

Mr. Gregory: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will provide estimates of net weekly spending power, both under the present system of supplementary benefit and under the new system of income support, for each of the following illustrative cases: (i) a lone parent, living in rented acommodation, who has been claiming benefit for herself and two dependent children aged four and 11 for three months, (ii) a lone parent, living in mortgaged accommodation, who has been claiming benefit for herself and three children aged under 10 years for a period of six months, one of the children is disabled and receives attendance allowance and help with heating and laundry, (iii) a lone parent, living in rented accommodation, who has been claiming benefit for herself and one child aged 12 for less than a year and who has part-time earnings of £25 a week, (iv) a single unemployed man aged 30 years living with parents, (v) a pensioner aged 76 years, living in her daughter's household and receiving additional supplemantary requirements for diet and heating, (vi) a single woman aged 26 years, living in her parents' home, who receives a severe disability allowance and who needs extra heating, (vii) an unemployed householder with a wife and a child aged three years living in rented accommodation and (viii) a single man aged over 25 years who is sick, entering a new claim and living in rented accommodation, with a net weekly spending power defined as income after payment, where appropriate, of any housing costs, and assuming that householders have average local authority rents and rates representative of the income support client groups.

Mr. Portillo: The answers are as follows:

Net Weekly Spending Power[1] April 1988
Illustrative Income Support Cases[2]

	Supplementary Benefit[3]	Income Support	Change
(i) Rent-paying lone parent, 2 children aged 4 and 11, claiming 3 months.	62·02	70·10	+8·08
(ii) Lone parent with mortgage, 3 children under 10, claiming 6 months. Attendance allowance, heating and laundry additions for 1 child.	97·78	103·65	+5·87
(iii) Rent-paying lone parent, 1 child aged 12, part-time earnings £25, claiming under 1 year.	34·06	49·35	+15·29
(iv) Single unemployed man aged 30, non-householder.	29·31	33·40	+4·09
(v) Pensioner aged 76, diet and heating additions, non-householder receiving attendance allowance.	62·33	66·45	+4·12
(vi) Single woman aged 26, severe disability allowance and heating addition, non-householder.	33·18	46·45	+13·27
(vii) Unemployed man, wife and a child aged 3, rent-payer.	66·00	68·35	+2·35
(viii) Single man, sick, new claim, rented accommodation.	31·37	33·40	+2·03

[1] Net weekly spending power is defined as income after payment of housing costs (rent or mortgage and local authority rates—where appropriate).

[2] All other main assumptions as in "Impact of the Reformed Structure of Income Related Benefits", October 1987, except where detailed assumptions have been specified elsewhere.

[3] April 1987 net spending power on supplemantary benefit has been uprated to April 1988 hypothetical levels by the retail price index excluding housing.

Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will provide estimates of net weekly spending power, both under the present system of supplementary benefit and under the new system of income support, for each of the following illustrative cases: (i) a sick man claiming less than a year with a wife and two children aged three years, paying a mortgage, (ii) an unemployed man with a wife and three children aged three, 11 and 12 years who live in local authority accommodation, (iii) a single man aged 28 years, sick for seven months needing an extra allowance for laundry and diet and who lives in his own house, (iv) a single man, living alone in rented accommodation, who has been disabled for over a year and who has an attendance allowance and additional assistance with heating and diet, (v) an unemployed man whose wife is sick and receives a severe disablement allowance and help with heating and laundry, (vi) a pensioner aged 82 years living in rented accommodation,

(vii) a pensioner aged 82 years with a wife aged 77 years who is an owner-occupier, with net weekly spending power defined as income after payment, where appropriate, of any housing costs, and assuming that householders have average local authority rents and rates representative of the income support client groups.

Mr. Portillo: The answers are as follows:

Net weekly spending power[1] April 1988 illustrative income support cases[2]

	Supplementary benefit[3] £	Income support £	Change £
(i) Sick man paying a mortgage, non-working wife, 2 children aged 3, claiming 8 months	78·23	97·70	+19·47
(ii) Unemployed man, non-working wife, 3 children aged 3, 11 and 12, local authority accommodation	96·13	100·55	+4·42
(iii) Single man aged 28, sick 7 months, additional requirements for laundry and diet, owner-occupier	40·61	46·45	+5·84
(iv) Single man, living alone, rented accommodation, attendance allowance and additional requirements for heating and diet, disabled over a year	71·83	93·20	+21·37
(v) Unemployed man, wife sick, receiving a severe disability allowance with additional requirements for heating and laundry	61·25	70·05	+8·80
(vi) Pensioner aged 82, rented accommodation	42·93	46·45	+3·52
(vii) Pensioner aged 82, wife aged 77, owner-occupier	69·40	70·05	+0·65

[1] Net weekly spending power is defined as income after payment of housing costs (rent or mortgage and local authority rates—where appropriate).

[2] All other main assumptions as in "Impact of the Reformed Structure of Income Related Benefits", October 1987, except where detailed assumptions have been specified elsewhere.

[3] April 1987 net spending power on supplementary benefit has been uprated to April 1988 hypothetical levels by the retail price index excluding housing.

Hospitals (Maintenance Costs)

Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the average cost per 24 hours for maintaining an in-patient in a cottage hospital; and what is the equivalent figure for a district general hospital within the area of the Shropshire district health authority.

Mr. Newton [holding answer 23 February 1988]: For costing purposes, all hospitals are classified into a series of standard types which reflect the principal use to which their beds are allocated. Cottage hospitals and district general hospitals do not feature in this classification as such. However, for 1986-87 the average cost per in-patient day (England) for acute hospitals (1-50 beds) was £58·40; the equivalent figure for the Royal Shrewsbury hospital (739 beds) was £87·75.

Low Income Families

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish a table using the assumptions in his answer to the hon. Member for Kensington of 4 February, Official Report, column 737, showing the current net weekly spending power of families in the same range of examples and that which will result from the changes in benefits intended from April, with an additional column showing the extent of the differences; and if he will publish a comparable table using expenditure and benefit figures likely to be appropriate for families in inner London in the same income ranges.

Mr. Scott [holding answer 2 March 1988]: The additional information requested can be obtained by simple subtraction using the information provided to my hon. Friend on 4 February at columns 737-38.

It is not possible to produce comparable tables for families in inner London. Insufficient inner London local authorities have made returns recording their local authority rent and rates in sufficient detail to allow the estimation of statistically sound average figures for specific family types.

NHS (Private Patients)

Mr. Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if decisions have been taken on the central reference lists of model charges for National Health Service private patients for the year from 1 April.

Mr. Newton [pursuant to his reply, 15 February 1988, c. 500-2]: I am sorry that there was an error in the table setting out the central reference list of private out-patient charges for the year from 1 April 1988. The table gives the correct charges.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

United Nations (United Kingdom Voting Record)

Mr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the 14 resolutions on which the United Kingdom abstained and the 14 on which the United Kingdom voted against, in each case giving the reason for such decisions, at the 42nd sessions of the United Nations General Assembly (1987) First Committee.

Mr. Eggar: At the first committee of the 42nd General Assembly, the United Kingdom voted against the following resolutions:

Resolution number	Topic	United Kingdom position
Resolution 31	Negative Security Assurances	Because they contained language that conflicted with our strategy of nuclear deterrence.
Resolution 39b	Nuclear Weapons Freeze
Resolution 39c	Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons
Resolution 39h	Nuclear Arms Freeze
Resolution 42a	Non-use of Nuclear Weapons
Resolution 42c	Cessation of Nucler Arms Race
Resolution 42e	International Cooperation for Disarmament
Resolution 42m	Follow-up to the First Special Session on Disarmament
Resolution 26a	Test ban	Because we believe a nuclear test ban to be in present circumstances unverifiable.
Resolution 26b	Test ban
Resolution 42l	Report of the Conference on Disarmament (CD)
Resolution 34b	Denuclearisation of Africa	Because it contained unacceptable language in connection with South Africa and the presumption that a South African nuclear weapons capability is an established fact.
Resolution 42d	Prevention of Nuclear War	Because it contained unrealistic and unnecessary proposals for work at the Conference on Disarmament.
Abstentions
Resolution 93	Comprehensive System of International Peace and Security	Because it tended to duplicate and undermine the UN Charter.
Resolution 27	Comprehensive Test Ban Treaty and Monitoring	Because they did not provide a practical way of making progress on the issues of nuclear testing.
Resolution 38c	Notification of Tests
Resolution 34a	Denuclearisation of Africa	Because of the presumption that a South African nuclear weapons capability is an established fact.
Resolution 35	New Weapons of Mass Destruction	Because it contained a proposal for an unverifiable and limitless ban on new weapons systems.

Resolution number	Topic	United Kingdom position
Resolution 38d	Bilateral Nuclear Arms Negotiations	Because it covered the same ground as a resolution the United Kingdom had sponsored.
Resolution 38f	Israeli attack on Iraqi reactor	Because we do not consider the First Committee to be the appropriate forum for discussion of the Israeli attack on an Iraqi nuclear reactor.
Resolution 38j	Implementation of UN Disarmament Resolutions	Because it calls on all member states of the UN to facilitate the implementation of disarmament resolutions, some of which we oppose.
Resolution 38l	Cut-off	Because the prohibition of production of fissionable material for weapons purposes remains in practice an unverifiable measure.
Resolution 39a	Role of Security Council	Because of reservations about both the principle and the practicalities of the suggested role for the Security Council.
Resolution 39g	World Disarmament Campaign	Because it criticises those states that do not make contributions to the World Disarmament Campaign in addition to those made through regular contributions to the UN budget.
Resolution 42b	Participation in the Conference on Disarmament	Because we consider that it is for the Conference on Disarmament to decide its own membership.
Resolution 44	Israeli Nuclear Capability	Because we consider it invidious and counter-productive to single out specific nations for criticism.
Resolution 91	Implementation of Declaration on the Preparation of Societies for Life in Peace	Because it was a purely declaratory resolution designed to serve Warsaw Pact propaganda interests.
Resolution 92	Implementation of Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security	Because it contained unrealistic and outdated references to comprehensive disarmament and colonial domination.
Resolution 42h	Disarmament Week	Mistakenly recorded as having been passed by consensus in the First Committee; we abstained during the vote in Plenary because the resolution encourages UN specialised agencies to engage in activities likely to detract from the task with which they have been mandated.

Explanations of Vote

We gave national explanations of vote on:

Resolution 34b – Denuclearisation of Africa
Resolution 35 – New Weapons of Mass Destruction
Resolution 38j – Implementation on UN Disarmament Resolutions
Resolution 39a – Role of Security Council
Resolution 39g – World Disarmament Campaign
Resolution 42b – Participation in the CD

Written Answers to Questions

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Engineering, Physics and Maths (Women Undergraduates)

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what proportions of undergraduates in engineering, physics and mathematics are women.

Mr. Jackson: The information is as follows:

Full-time United Kingdom domiciled undergraduates at universities in Great Britain

	Per cent women
1986
Physics	16
Mathematical sciences[1]	25
of which Mathematics	32
Engineering and technology	10

[1] Includes Mathematics, Statistics and Computer Studies.

Teaching Standards

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has any further proposals to ensure that standards of teaching are adequately assessed: and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: The intended outcome of pilot work on teacher appraisal in six authorities is a proven set of guidelines which will form the basis of an agreed national framework. The implementation of that framework should lead to a system which will both enhance career development for teachers and raise standards of teaching in our schools.

Family Partnership Scheme, Salford

Mr. Terry Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he will reply to Councillor Mrs. P. M. Lea, chair of Salford education committee, who wrote to him on 30 November 1987 about Salford's family partnership scheme.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I very much regret that councillor Mrs. Lea's letter was mislaid within the Department. A copy has been obtained, and I have replied to her today.

CERN

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the current level of the United Kingdom contributions to CERN.

Mr. Jackson: The United Kingdom subscription to the CERN budget in 1988 is 128·2 million Swiss francs (about £52 million); this represents 16·8 per cent. of the organisation's total budget.

Exeter Diocesan Education Committee

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will now authorise payment of the £39,086·84 to the Exeter Diocesan education committee in respect of Roborough (Bickleigh Down) Church of England primary school, a claim for which was submitted on 20 February 1987.

Mr. Dunn: This sum was paid to the diocese's bank account on 22 February 1988.

Materials Science (Research)

Mr. Douglas: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the provision he is making for research in materials science.

Mr. Jackson: The Science and Engineering Research Council (SERC) is currently funding materials science research in a wide range of academic departments. Present total expenditure on grants, studentships and facilities is just over £30 million. The council will shortly be considering the results of a recently completed review of this support.

Supply Teachers (Pay)

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science which education authorities have decided not to recognise normal pay increments when employing supply teachers.

Mrs. Rumbold: The school teachers' pay and conditions document 1987 gave local education authorities greater flexibility in the payments they make to supply teachers, including the possibility of adopting a standard rate for all such teachers. It is for each LEA to decide how to use this flexibility: no information is held centrally about the policies of individual authorities on payments to supply teachers.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Panama

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions Her Majesty's ambassador to Panama has had with the Government of Panama covering the Panama canal treaty.

Mr. Eggar: Her Majesty's ambassador in Panama has had no discussions with the Government of Panama on the Panama canal treaty between the United States and Panama.

El Salvador

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what contact Her Majesty's ambassador to El Salvador has had with human rights, trade unions and non-government parties since 1986.

Mr. Eggar: As part of their normal duties, Her Majesty's diplomatic staff accredited to El Salvador maintain regular contact with human rights and other organisations including political parties and trade unions.

RIMPAC Exercises

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been received from any Pacific Government concerning the 1988 RIMPAC exercises.

Mr. Mellor: None.

Argentina

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what contacts there have been with the Government of Argentina to discuss the Falklands in the past year.

Mr. Eggar: Following my right hon. and learned Friend's statement in the House on 29 October 1986 we received some informal ideas from the Argentines, via the United States Government, which relate exclusively to the co-ordination and the avoidance of incidents in the south-west Atlantic. We replied using the same channel. The exchange continues.

Chile

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many visits to prisons Her Majesty's ambassador to Chile has made in the past year.

Mr. Eggar: The honorary British consul in Concepcion made several visits to one British prisoner, who has since been released on bail. There have been no other British citizens in prison in Chile during the past year. Her Majesty's embassy staff have no consular standing to visit imprisoned Chileans.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what meetings Her Majesty's ambassador has had with human rights, trade unions and opposition parties in Chile in the last year.

Mr. Eggar: Her Majesty's ambassador in Chile and his staff have had numerous meetings with human rights groups, trade union representatives and opposition parties during the past year. A full list is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Gibraltar (Shootings)

Mr. McCusker: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he is now able to state on what passports the Irish Republican Army terrorists shot in Gibraltar were travelling and in whose names; in what nationality the additional passports were found; and whether any other passports were found.

Mr. Mellor: Two British passports in the names of Robert Wilfred Riley and Catherine Alison Harper (amended to Mrs. Smith) and one passport, believed to be Irish, in the name of Brendan Coyne, were found on the bodies. Two Irish passports in the names of John Samuel Miller and Mary Johnston and one British passport in the name of Edward McArdle were found in a Ford Fiesta car found on the Spanish side of the border. No information is yet available on other passports.

Iraq

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his latest estimate of the chemical weapon capacity of Iraq.

Mr. Mellor: Iraq's use of chemical weapons against Iranian forces has been confirmed by several United Nations reports since March 1984. We believe that Iraq has a capacity to manufacture chemical weapons and is capable of using such weapons effectively.

Soviet Union (Chemical Weapons)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his latest estimate of the chemical weapon capacity of the Soviet Union.

Mr. Mellor: As my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for Defence told the House on 10 November 1987, the Soviet Union commands the world's largest and most sophisticated chemical warfare capability. It has produced and stockpiled a wide variety of chemical agents and munitions, and has a massive tonnage of nerve agent alone. In December last year the Soviet Union declared that the size of its chemical weapons stockpile was 50,000 tons. This figure is substantially lower than western estimates.

Nuclear Technology (Export)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has on the number and nature of notification made since May 1979 by (i) by the Federal Republic of Germany and (ii) France to the European Commission under Euratom treaty articles 103 and 104, regarding draft contracts for exports of nuclear technology and materials to non-European Economic Community member states.

Mr. Mellor: The information requested is not readily available, and could only be provided at disproportionate cost. Information is provided directly by individual member states to the Commission and we would not normally be informed of agreements or contracts involving other member states.

United States (Chemical Weapons)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his latest estimate of the chemical weapons capacity of the United States.

Mr. Mellor: As my hon. Friend the Minister of State for the Armed Forces told the House on 3 December 1987, it would be inappropriate to comment in detail on the defence capabilities of an ally. As is well known, the United States has a limited and aging retaliatory chemical weapons capability which it is in the process of modernising.

"Nuclear Rivals in the Middle East"

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will seek to obtain for his departmental library a copy of "Nuclear Rivals in the Middle East" by Shyam Bhatia published by Routledge in March.

Mr. Mellor: Yes; the book has already been ordered.

Amirabad Nuclear Complex, Tehran

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he possesses concerning the Amirabad nuclear complex near Tehran in terms of its technical capacity to assist in nuclear weapons production.

Mr. Mellor: I assume the hon. Member is referring to the Tehran university nuclear centre which is sited in Amirabad. The centre possesses a research reactor which was designed for the production of medical isotopes. Iran has signed the non-proliferation treaty and has placed all her nuclear materials under International Atomic Energy Agency safeguards. We have no evidence to suggest that these are being circumvented.

Miss Elena Gurevich

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has on the case of Miss Elena Gurevich in the Soviet Union; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer which I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Hendon, South (Mr. Marshall) on 10 March at column 289.

Mr. Raoul Wallenberg

Mr. Ken Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his latest information on the case of Mr. Raoul Wallenberg; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: The Soviet authorities have maintained since 1957 that Mr. Wallenberg died in prison in 1947. There have been reports over the years suggesting that Mr. Wallenberg may have been alive and in prison in the Soviet Union considerably later than 1947, but these accounts were never confirmed. We have frequently pressed the Soviet Union for a full account of the fate of Mr. Wallenberg, including, if he did indeed die in 1947, a detailed statement of the manner in which he died. The Soviet authorities have not so far provided adequate information.

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will raise the case of Mr. Raoul Wallenberg with the Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: We have pressed the Soviet authorities on a number of occasions to give a full and frank account of the fate of Raoul Wallenberg and they are well aware of our views in this case.

South Africa (Oil Embargo)

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what measures Her Majesty's Government are taking to monitor on behalf of the United Nations the oil embargo on South Africa.

Mrs. Chalker: None, since we voted against the United Nations General Assembly resolution establishing the monitoring group. However, our own guidelines, which exclude the export of United Kingdom continental shelf crude oil to South Africa, are effective.

Arms Control Negotiations

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is Her Majesty's Government's policy towards dealing with the removal of disparities in the conventional forces of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation and the Warsaw pact in separate arms control negotiations, before any agreement has been reached on the elimination of chemical weapons.

Mr. Mellor: Our policy in the conventional arms control field was set out in the statement issued at the NATO summit on 2 March, a copy of which has been placed in the Library of the House. Negotiations on the global elimination of chemical weapons are being pursued separately at the conference on disarmament in Geneva. They have made progress, but many complex issues remain to be resolved.

Nuclear Weapons (Disarmament Negotiations)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether there are any categories of nuclear weapons in the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation which cannot be subject to total elimination in disarmament negotiations: and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: The recent NATO summit on 2-3 March confirmed that for the foreseeable future there is no alternative to the Alliance strategy of deterrence based upon an appropriate mix of adequate and effective nuclear and conventional forces, which will continue to be kept up to date where necessary. NATO's immediate arms control priorities are for 50 per cent. cuts in the strategic offensive weapons of the United States and Soviet Union, the conclusion of a global and verifiable chemical weapons ban, and the elimination of the conventional imbalance between NATO and the Warsaw pact in Europe.

Entry Clearance

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many representations he has received from hon. Members in each of the last five years to date concerning entry clearance into the United Kingdom; and how many representations he has received from hon. Members since five countries became subject to visa control in 1986.

Mr. Eggar: Foreign and Commonwealth Office Ministers have received representations from hon. Members concerning entry clearance into the United Kingdom during the past five years as follows:

	Entry Clearance
1983	1,105
1984	1,472
1985	1,753
1986	2,183
1987	3,467

Records of representations received relating specifically to applicants from the five countries for which a visa requirement was introduced in 1986-87 are not available.

La Belle Discotheque

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will place in the Library such parts of the intercepts relating to the La Belle discotheque bombing on 5 April 1986 as are no longer classified; to whom these intercepts have been shown, when and why; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: No. It is not our practice to comment on intelligence and security matters.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Fine Defaulters

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he anticipates bringing into force section 49 of the Criminal Justice Act 1972 to enable courts to impose a community service order in lieu of a warrant of commitment for failure to pay a fine.

Mr. John Patten: Following consultations with a range of interested bodies, we said, in the White Paper on criminal justice published in March 1986, that we were inclined not to implement this section, since it would add to the complexity and reduce the effectiveness of the fine enforcement process and consume probation service resources without appreciably reducing imprisonment for default. We propose to look again at the possibility of implementing this provision and we shall be seeking further views from the interested bodies.

Sunday Trading

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent representations he has received about the Sunday trading law.

Mr. Renton: Since 18 December 1987 when I last answered a similar question from my hon. Friend the Member for Basildon (Mr. Amess)—column 834—we have received 100 written representations broadly in favour of Sunday trading and 61 against.

Shops (Crime Prevention)

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, if he plans any new initiatives to seek to prevent crime in shops.

Mr. John Patten: Advice on the prevention of theft from shops is featured in the handbook "Practical Ways to Crack Crime" which was published on 9 March in support of the Department's national crime prevention publicity campaign. The Home Office is also in touch with officials from the retail trade's main representative bodies — the Retail Consortium, the British Retailers Association and the Association for the Prevention of Theft in Shops — regarding the proposal, which I welcome, that the trade should mount its own national campaign aimed at the prevention of shop theft.

As an aid to planning effective measures against theft from shops we shall shortly be publishing, as a Home Office crime prevention unit paper, a report prepared by a representative of the Dixon Group plc, working in collaboration with the crime prevention unit, under the title "Retail Crime: Prevention through Crime Analysis".

Asylum

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the average length of time taken for his Department to deal with cases of application for asylum (a) at ports of entry and (b) made by people who already have leave to enter.

Mr. Renton: For applications decided in 1987 it is estimated that the average length of time between the receipt of the application and the decision was 10 months for those applying at ports of entry and 16 months for those already in the United Kingdom.

Crime Prevention

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what indications he has about the effectiveness of recent crime prevention initiatives taken or encouraged by his Department.

Mr. John Patten: We have been encouraged by reports from a number of chief officers of police in urban areas of falls in the recorded level of certain crimes notably burglary, which are often targeted by local crime prevention schemes. The Department will continue to encourage the expansion of these schemes in the light of growing evidence that, when they are properly organised and supported, they can be effective in preventing certain crimes and in reducing the fear of crime more generally.

A good example of the effectiveness of the multi-agency preventive approach to local crime problems is a burglary reduction project in Rochdale, supported by the Home Office. This has produced a 60 per cent. reduction in that crime over a seven-month period.

Multi-agency crime prevention projects established as demonstration models in "Five Towns" in 1986 with Home Office funded co-ordinators have each demonstrated their effectiveness in a number of different ways, notably in securing increased public support for crime prevention work, bringing down the figures for particular crimes and in reducing also the public's fear of crime. It is a measure of the success of the "Five Towns" projects that each has gained sufficient local support to continue beyond the period of Home Office funding. The lessons learned in the "Five Towns" projects will be applied to the development of the "Safer Cities" programme.

Prison Officers

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prison officers were in post in England and Wales as at 31 December 1983.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: There were 17,939 staff in the prison officer class on 31 December 1983.

Exclusion Orders

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people were served with exclusion orders under the Prevention of Terrorism Act between 1 and 7 March; who they were; what the provisions of the exclusion orders were; and why they were served with the order.

Mr. Hurd: None.

Terrorism

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people were detained under the Prevention of Terrorism Act between 1 and 7

March; who they were; where they were detained; why they were detained; for how long they were held; and what charges were brought against them.

Mr. Hurd: Between 1 and 7 March eight people were detained under section 12 of the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1984 on suspicion of involvement in the commission, preparation or instigation of acts of terrorism. All eight were detained in London. Four were detained for 11 hours, 3 days 18 hours, 3 days 23 hours, and 3 days 23 hours, respectively, before being released. The other four were detained for 4 days 19 hours, 4 days 19 hours, 4 days 2 hours and 3 days 22 hours. At that point, on 8 March, I signed orders excluding them from the United Kingdom. They were then detained under article 9(3) of the Prevention of Terrorism (Supplemental Temporary Provisions) Order 1984 for a further 1 day, 1 day, 22 hours and 22 hours respectively, pending their removal from the United Kingdom. No charges were brought against any of those detained.

It is not our normal practice to name individuals detained under the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1984.

Fire-Service (Clwyd)

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will visit the county of Clwyd to meet full time and retained firemen to discuss current and proposed manning levels; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will visit Buckley and Queensferry fire stations; and if he will make a statement;

(3) whether he has recently visited the county of Clwyd fire service headquarters and fire stations in Clwyd; and if he will make a statement;

(4) what is the authorised establishment of the Clwyd fire service; how many officers are currently in post; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: My right hon. Friend has not recently visited the Clwyd fire service and has no present plans to do so. The whole time firefighter establishment of the Clwyd fire brigade at 1 January 1988 was 197 and the retained establishment was 240. Staff actually in post were 184 and 227, respectively.

Political Asylum

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list by country of origin the total number of applications for political asylum received by it currently outstanding; and how many of these have been outstanding for (a) more than six months, (b) more than one year and (c) more than two years.

Mr. Renton: Information on the total numbers of asylum applications outstanding at the end of 1986 was published by nationality of applicant in "Refugee Statistics, United Kingdom, 1986" — Home Office Statistical Bulletin, No. 13/87 — a copy of which is in the Library. Reliable information on the breakdown of these figures by length of time the application had been outstanding could be produced only at disproportionate cost. It is planned to publish a further bulletin relating to 1987 later this year.

Immigration Laws (Detained Persons)

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people are currently held in (a) police stations, (b) prisons, (c) remand centres arising from the operation of immigration laws; and what are the comparable figures for March and September of each year since 1983.

Mr. Renton: Information in the form requested is not available centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. On 10 March 1988 there was a total of 178 people detained at the two main establishments used for detention arising from the operation of the immigration laws; that is, 90 at Latchmere house and 88 at Harmondsworth.

British Nationality Act 1981

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications for registration under the British Nationality Act 1981 have been (a) received by his Department, (b) fully processed and accepted, (c) acknowledged but not decided upon and (d) awaiting acknowledgement.

Mr. Renton: Since 1 April 1987 an estimated 295,000 applications of all types for British citizenship have been received; 43,895 applications have been granted. Some 105,000 applications for registration and naturalisation which have yet to be decided upon have been acknowledged and a further 130,000 packages containing citizenship applications await acknowledgement.

Equal Opportunities Commission

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) whether, in the light of the Equal Opportunities Commission's recent report, he will consider introducing an equal treatment Bill giving women positive equality rights in law;

(2) whether, in the light of the Equal Opportunities Commission's recent report, he will consider introducing legislation banning discrimination in private clubs where there is a male and female membership;

(3) whether, in the light of the Equal Opportunities Commission's recent report, he will consider seeking to strengthen and widen the Commission's powers to initiate formal investigations;

(4) whether, in the light of the Equal Opportunities Commission's recent report, he will consider (a) introducing means of improving training in sex discrimination law of tribunal members and (b) including at least one woman member on each panel;

(5) whether, in the light of the Equal Opportunities Commission's recent report, he will consider legislation to obtain equal pay for work of equal value in the event of forthcoming legal judgments not providing this outcome;

(6) whether, in the light of the Equal Opportunities Commission's recent report, he will consider seeking to combine the present Equal Pay and Sex Discrimination Acts;

(7) whether, in the light of the Equal Opportunities Commission's recent report, he will consider introducing legislation to place a duty upon local authorities and other public bodies to operate a system of contract compliance to eliminate sex discrimination.

Mr. John Patten: The Equal Opportunities Commission's proposals were published on 8 March. We will be giving its recommendations careful consideration in consultation with colleagues.

Football Matches (Policing)

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the cost of policing football matches in England and Wales in each of the last three football seasons.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I would refer the hon. Member to the reply which I gave to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Darlington (Mr. Fallon) on 10 March, at column 285.

Prisoners (Police Cells)

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many sentenced prisoners were held in police cells during February in England and Wales.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: This information is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many sentenced prisoners are currently being held in police cells in England and Wales.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: On Friday 11 March, 191 sentenced prisoners were being held in police cells in England and Wales.

Heysel Stadium

Mr. Heffer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the total cost to public funds of the extradition proceedings in connection with the Heysel stadium disaster; if any part of this sum is recoverable from the Belgian Government; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten [holding answer 15 February]: Expenditure so far identified includes about £30,000 incurred by the police and £61,000 by the Crown Prosecution Service. Legal aid costs borne by the Lord Chancellor's Department have yet to be settled. None of this expenditure is recoverable from the Belgian authorities because the extradition treaty provides that the costs incurred in such proceedings are borne by the requested state.

Professor Colin Blakemore

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information relating to Professor Colin Blakemore's work was improperly disclosed from the animals procedures committee; and why.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 2 March 1988]: I have today written to the hon. Member.

File (Disappearance)

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to the answer of 8 February, Official Report, column 41, what police inquiries were carried out into the loss of security classified material from the office of the hon. Member for Southend, East (Mr. Taylor) and what were the conclusions of such inquiries.

Mr. Hurd [holding answer 7 March 1988]: I understand that my hon. Friend the Member for Southend, East (Mr. Taylor) was interviewed by an officer of the Metropolitan police on 10 April 1986 and a file of papers was then recorded as lost property. I further understand that the file was later found and that no other police inquiries were made.

PRIME MINISTER

Polaris

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Prime Minister if she will explain the basis on which she stated at a press conference following her visit to the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation on 17 February that Her Majesty's Government are modernising Polaris with Trident in accordance with the Montebello resolutions, as stated on page 7 of the Central Office of Information transcript; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister The Government's decision in 1980 to replace Polaris with Trident was taken in order to maintain the effectiveness and credibility of Britain's independent strategic nuclear deterrent well into the next century. The decision is entirely consistent with NATO's commitment, articulated at Montebello in 1983 and also most recently this month at the NATO summit, to maintain effective and up-to-date nuclear forces.

Non-Proliferation Treaty

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Prime Minister when she next expects to meet with the leaders of the United Kingdom's partner depository states for the nuclear non-proliferation treaty to discuss progress and initiatives under article VI.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

NATO Summit (Brussels)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Prime Minister (1) if, during her meeting with President Mitterrand at the NATO Ministers meeting in Brussels on 2-3 March, she discussed the prospects of France joining the nuclear non-proliferation treaty;

(2) if, during her meeting with President Mitterrand at the NATO summit in Brussels on 2-3 March, she discussed the joint Anglo-French stand-off air-launched nuclear missile system.

The Prime Minister: I had no separate meeting with President Mitterrand at the NATO summit.

Civil Servants

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Prime Minister if, pursuant to her answer of 7 December 1987 to the hon. Member for Linlithgow (Mr. Dalyell), Official Report, column 11, she will detail the changes made for the sake of clarification or completeness in the revised note of guidance on the duties and responsibilities of civil servants.

The Prime Minister: Such changes are numerous, but can be readily identified from a comparison of the revised text—Official Report, 2 December 1987, columns 572-75 —with the original text—Official Report 26 February 1985, columns 130-32.

Educational Testing (Correspondence)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister what steps she is taking to discover the source of the leak of a letter from Mr. Paul Gray to Mr. Tom Jeffrey in relation to educational testing; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: It is not the usual practice to give information on such matters.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Alleged Government Subversion (Prosecutions)

50. Mr. Allen: To ask the Attorney-General, pursuant to his answer of 22 February, Official Report, column 15, what representations he has received about possible prosecutions in relation to offences concerning alleged attempts to subvert the Government of Lord Wilson; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: Since becoming Attorney-General I have received about 100 letters from Members of Parliament and the public about the "Spycatcher" case. Several of these letters have raised the question of investigations or prosecutions in relation to the allegations to which the hon. Member refers. I have referred correspondents — and also the hon. Member — to the Prime Minister's statement of 6 May.

"Spycatcher"

51. Mr. Winnick: To ask the Attorney-General if he will give the latest estimate of the likely total eventual cost of the legal proceedings and advice in the United Kingdom and abroad in connection with cases to date on "Spycatcher."

The Attorney-General: The total amount of costs expended to date is about £660,000. I cannot usefully estimate the total eventual cost.

Government Legal Actions

52. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Attorney-General how many civil actions in which Her Majesty's Government are or were the plaintiff have been instituted since May 1979; and in how many cases (a) judgments and (b) costs were awarded against Her Majesty's Government.

The Solicitor General: The information sought by the hon. Member is not readily available and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

Dog Fighting

53. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Attorney-General how many prosecutions were brought in the past eight years for the unlawful promotion of dog fights and other forms of animal baiting; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: No separate records are maintained by the Crown Prosecution Service of prosecutions brought by that service for such offences. Records of convictions in cases involving cruelty to animals are kept by the Home Office.

"My Country, Right or Wrong"

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Attorney-General, pursuant to his answer of 9 March, if he will propose to the British Broadcasting Corporation the appointment of an independent third party with security clearance to examine transcripts of the remaining programmes in the British Broadcasting Corporation series "My Country, Right or Wrong" with a view to establishing to Her Majesty's Government's satisfaction whether the transmission of the programmes would raise any security problems; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: No.

Family Court (Policy)

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Attorney-General how many officials in the Lord Chancellor's Department are responsible for formulating policy on the introduction of a family court.

The Solicitor-General: Currently a specialist lawyer and an executive officer in the Lord Chancellor's Department are engaged full-time, in collaboration with officials in their own and other Departments, on policy formulation relevant to the whole area embraced by the concept of a family court.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Kampuchea

57. Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has met representatives of Oxfam to discuss the provision of aid to Kampuchea; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chris Patten: This issue, with many others, was discussed when I met the director of Oxfam, Mr. Frank Judd, last December.

Sub-Saharan Africa (Debt)

61. Sir Russell Johnston: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to assist Commonwealth countries in sub-Saharan Africa with their current problem of external debt.

Mr. Chris Patten: The United Kingdom has put forward an initiative to alleviate the debt problems of the poorest sub-Saharan African countries, including those which are members of the Commonwealth. We have also promised major contributions to the IMF's enhanced structural adjustment facility and the World Bank's special programme of assistance, both of which will provide considerable help to these countries.

Gross bilateral aid for Commonwealth countries in sub-Saharan Africa in 1986 was £200 million.

Contaminated Foodstuffs

62. Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has any information regarding the alleged supply via food aid of European Economic Community radioactive contaminated foodstuffs to Third world countries; and if he will make a statement.

63. Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has any information regarding the alleged supply via food aid of European Economic Community radioactive contaminated foodstuffs to Third world countries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chris Patten: We have no evidence that any of the European Community's food aid consignments have exceeded the maximum levels of radioactivity permitted for the Community's exports of foodstuffs; these levels are the same as those permitted for imports from third countries.

Uganda (Civil Service Pensions)

64. Mr. Bidwell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reply he has received to his most recent approach to the Ugandan Government concerning the payment of pensions to a few ex-civil servants now resident in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Chris Patten: Our high commission in Kampala raises this matter regularly. It has reported that restoration of pension payments to certain former public servants now resident in the United Kingdom is under investigation by the Government of Uganda.

Cyprus

Mr. Faulds: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment Her Majesty's Government made, in deciding on their policy of giving aid for the whole of Cyprus on a Government to Government basis, of the degree of control exercised by Greek Cypriot Government over northern Cyprus and the extent to which it has a mandate to act on behalf of the Turkish Cypriot population.

Mr. Chris Patten: We recognise only one Republic of Cyprus. However, as far as education and training awards of benefit to the Turkish community are concerned, the British Council deals directly with the Turkish Cypriot authorities in the educational field.

Sudan

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many vehicles are currently undertaking relief work in the Sudan, provided under the United Kingdom aid programme.

Mr. Chris Patten: In 1987 the ODA provided 20 trucks for the combined agencies relief team (CART) at a cost of £400,000. These vehicles are enabling CART to distribute food in and around Juba.

In January this year the Sudanese army commandeered 15 of the CART trucks, 14 of which have now been returned. We are awaiting further information on the last truck.

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what work is being undertaken to ensure that food supplies are reaching southern Sudan.

Mr. Chris Patten: Donors are working with the Government of Sudan to identify ways of providing relief supplies to the whole of southern Sudan. The ODA responded to a world food programme appeal for 1,400 tonnes of food aid to be airlifted into Juba by providing 400 tonnes, with associated transport costs; the European Community provided a further 600 tonnes. This food is being distributed by ODA-funded trucks. In February, a military-escorted convoy of barges organised by the Sudanese Government delivered 2,600 tonnes of relief aid to Malakal for the Upper Nile region. Of this the ODA financed 450 tonnes through the Catholic fund for overseas development. The International Committee of the Red Cross is now waiting to receive the agreement of the Sudanese Government and the rebel forces to begin relief work in areas of southern Sudan previously inaccessible because of civil war.

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assurances have been received that the vehicles for moving food supplies in the Sudan will not be used for other purposes by the Sudan Government.

Mr. Chris Patten: On 27 February the Prime Minister of Sudan, Sadiq el Mahdi, informed our ambassador in Khartoum that the commandeering of vehicles provided by the ODA had been due to a breakdown in communication. I have accepted assurances that this will not happen again. These trucks are once more being used to distribute food supplies around the Juba area.

Mozambique

Sir Russell Johnson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if any United Kingdom aid-supported projects in geographical areas subject to attack or disruption by the Mozambique National Resistance have been disrupted by the Mozambique National Resistance; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chris Patten: We have had reports of two incidents at or near the sites where teams from the National Railways of Zimbabwe are reconstructing the Limpopo railway from Chicualacuala. In addition work has been disrupted from time to time on the Beira and Nacala railway projects. All aid-financed activities, particularly emergency relief, suffer in varying degrees from the disruption of internal transport caused by the security situation.

Sir Russell Johnson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will state the level of United Kingdom aid to Mozambique, giving details of (a) the nature of each project supported, (b) the level of support given to each project and (c) the location within Mozambique of each project.

Mr. Chris Patten: Commitments of United Kingdom aid to Mozambique amounted to £35 million in 1987, of which £15 million was for balance of payments support and £15 million for emergency relief. We are also contributing to transport projects in Mozambique sponsored by the Southern African development co-ordination conference. Details of current capital projects are as follows:

Project	Total commitment (£ million)	Location
Mozambique bilateral aid
Prawn fisheries: boat and jetty rehabilitation	2·515	Angoche
Road and bridging material	0·297	Various
Aeronautical telecommunications	0·721	Maputo, Beira, Tete
Leyland trucks for coal industry	0·660	Moatize
SADCC aid
Limpopo railway	14·000	Gaza and Maputo
Nacala railway rehabilitation	1·453	Niassa and Nampula provinces

Project	Total commitment (£ million)	Location
Beira railway breakdown crane	1·100	Beira

International Development Association

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when negotiations for the ninth replenishment of the International Development Association will commence.

Mr. Chris Patten: The association has yet to announce a date, but negotiations will probably begin early in 1989.

NATIONAL FINANCE

War Stock

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received regarding the repayment of 3½ per cent. war stock; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley: My right hon. Friend has received a number of representations on this subject.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Sims: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he has any proposal to raise the advisory cost limit of £200 for answering parliamentary questions.

Mr. Peter Brooke: Yes. The advisory figure of £200 was introduced in 1982 as the level at which the likely cost of a full reply to a parliamentary question should be drawn to the attention of Ministers. This figure is now out of date. It is accordingly being raised as from today to £250.

This does not alter the discretion of individual Ministers to decide that a particular question should be answered partially or in full regardless of cost.

Third World

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the reduction in tax take for Her Majesty's Government from banks in respect of the current year, as compared with last year, as a result of their write-down of Third world debt.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 29 February 1988]: Tax receipts in the current year are provisionally estimated to be lower by about £270 million as a result of losses incurred by banks on irrecoverable loans to third world countries. The estimate for 1986-87 is £30 million.

VAT

Mr. Warren: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information he has as to which member states apply a positive rate of value added tax to magazines and which also provide a subsidy in the form of tax relief for such publications.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 9 March 1988]: A positive rate of VAT is applied to magazines by Belgium, Denmark, France, Germany, Greece, Ireland, Italy, Luxembourg, Netherlands and Spain. The supply of periodicals in Italy with a cover price of less than 8,000 lire and sold by persons other than the editor is zero-rated.

Information on subsidies in the form of tax relief is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Manufacturing

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information he has as to the annual average percentage increase in (i) gross domestic product at constant market prices, (ii) manufacturing output, (iii) wages per head in manufacturing, (iv) retail prices, (v) manufacturing productivity, (vi) manufacturing investment at constant prices, (vii) wages and salaries per unit of output in manufacturing, over the period 1983 to 1987 in (a) the United Kingdom, (b) the United States of America, (c) Germany, (d) France, (e) Japan, and (f) Sweden.

Mr. Major [holding answer 10 March 1988]: Data on (i) GDP (or GNP) at constant market prices are given in OECD Quarterly National Accounts. Data on (ii) manufacturing output and (iv) retail (consumer) prices are given monthly in OECD Main Economic Indicators. Data on (iii) wages per head in manufacturing are given monthly in the Employment Gazette. Data for (vi) manufacturing investment at constant prices are given in the OECD National Accounts (Volume II: Detailed Tables). Data for (v) manufacturing productivity can be calculated from the series for manufacturing output and employment given in the OECD Main Economic Indicators. Data on wages and salaries for unit of output are not published in any standard international source.

Investment

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will provide figures for gross and net investment, as totals per head and as a proportion of gross domestic product for the last five available years in the following countries: Norway, Sweden, Japan, Western Germany, France, the United States of America, Italy and the United Kingdom.

Mr. John Major [holding answer 11 March 1988]: The following three tables give annual data for 1982 to 1986 for gross and for net fixed investment as a percentage of gross domestic product and for gross fixed investment per head of the population in US dollars. Comparable figures, in a common currently, are not available for net investment per head.

Gross fixed capital formation as a percentage of gross domestic product[1]

	1982	1983	1984	1985	1986
United States of America	17·2	17·2	18·0	18·1	17·8
Japan	29·7	28·3	27·9	27·7	27·8
Germany	20·5	20·5	20·2	19·7	19·4
France	21·4	20·2	19·3	19·0	18·8
United Kingdom	16·2	16·2	17·3	17·2	17·2

Net fixed capital formation as a percentage of gross domestic product[1]

	1982	1983	1984	1985	1986
United States of America	3·1	3·6	5·2	5·4	5·3
Japan	16·2	14·6	14·2	13·9	14·1
Germany	7·8	7·9	7·6	7·1	7·1

United Kingdom	4·0	4·1	5·1	5·2	4·9
Italy	11·1	10·2	10·3	10·4	9·2
Norway	10·3	10·9	12·2	8·3	13·1
Sweden	6·9	6·8	6·9	7·5	6·9

[1] Net fixed capital formation is gross capital formation after providing for depreciation. Estimates of depreciation are subject to a very wide margin of error and are not comparable between countries. Gross domestic product does not provide for depreciation, and is therefore not an appropriate denominator.

Civil Service Functions (Dispersal)

Mr. Soley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether there will be full consultation with the Council of Civil Service Unions about any proposals for further dispersal of Civil Service functions.

Mr. Brooke: The Council of Civil Service Unions will be given an early opportunity to comment upon developments in the policy on the location of Government work referred to in my answer to the hon. Member for East Kilbride (Mr. Ingram) on 18 February, at columns 475-76. Furthermore, it is normal practice for Departments to consult their trade union sides before undertaking significant relocations.

Mr. Soley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he will make an announcement, supplementing the Prime Minister's statement of 18 February, about the further dispersal of Civil Service functions.

Mr. Brooke: I expect shortly to be in a position to make the further statement about the location of Government work forcast in my answer of 18 January, at columns 475-76, to the hon. Member for East Kilbride (Mr. Ingram).

THE ARTS

British Library

Mr. Butler: To ask the Minister for the Arts what is his estimate of the current inflation rate of building costs within the British Library project; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: The estimate for the current inflation rate of building costs for the new British Library at St. Pancras is 7 per cent. on an annual basis.

South Bank Board

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he will place in the Library the terms of the trust deed setting up the South Bank Board as an independent body.

Mr. Luce: I will place a copy of the trust deed in the Library as soon as it is finalised.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Minister for the Arts what changes are to be made to the standing and organisation of the South Bank Board.

Mr. Luce: Arrangements are being considered whereby the South Bank Board would become an independent charitable trust, under the terms of the Arts Council's charter, from 1 April 1988. The details are not yet complete but I will advise the House of them as soon as decisions are reached.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Minister for the Arts when he expects to name the new members of the independent South Bank body; and whom he is consulting.

Mr. Luce: I have asked Mr. Ronald Grierson to continue as chairman of the South Bank Board with effect from 1 April 1988 for a further three years. Arrangements for other members of the board depend on finalising the details of a new independent charitable trust.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Exports and Imports

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what has been the percentage change in the volume and value of exports from and imports into the United Kingdom of biscuits, chocolate, chocolate and sugar confectionery, respectively, since 1972: (a) with the European Economic Community and (b) with the rest of the world.

Mr. Alan Clark: The information is given in the table.

Percentage changes 1972-1978
European Economic Community (as at 1 January 1988)

	Exports		Imports
	Volume	Value	Volume	Value
Biscuits (SITC 048.42 (part))	+218	+1,485	+123	+1,150
Chocolate and chocolate confectionery (SITC 073.0)	+243	+1,572	+127	+1,449
Sugar confectionery (SITC 062.0)	+ 48	+ 885	+255	+1,697

Rest of the World

	Exports		Imports
	Volume	Value	Volume	Value
Biscuits (SITC 048.42 (part))	+15	+419	+316	+1,442
Chocolate and chocolate confectionery (SITC 073.0)	+19	+379	+ 98	+ 904

	Exports		Imports
	Volume	Value	Volume	Value
Sugar confectionery (SITC 062.0)	−31	+260	+125	+ 950

Manufacturing Industry (Investment)

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what has been the level of direct investment in overseas manufacturing industry and gross domestic fixed capital formation from private sector United Kingdom manufacturing industry in each year since 1977.

Mr. Alan Clark: The information is given in the table. It should be noted that net overseas direct investment is a financial concept and is not the same as capital expenditure on fixed assets or the growth in a company's net assets. Direct investment covers only the sums invested in a related concern by the parent company and that concern will then decide how this is to be used, whether on fixed assets, to increase debtors, repay borrowing etc.

	Net United Kingdom direct investment in overseas manufacturing[1]	Private sector manufacturing gross domestic fixed capital formation[2]
	£ million	£ million current prices
1977	1,077	4,190
1978	1,520	5,220
1979	1,397	6,163
1980	1,427	6,182
1981	2,528	5,113
1982	1,579	5,260
1983	2,126	5,655
1984	2,100	6,997
1985	2,860	8,443
1986	5,663	8,823

[1] Includes overseas direct investment in manufacturing by public corporations and by non-manufacturing companies in the United Kingdom. Separate figures excluding these categories are not available.

[2] Excludes assets held on financial lease by manufacturing.

Racal Ltd

Mr. Janner: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he has completed his investigations concerning the question of the alleged sale of radio equipment by Racal Ltd. to the Palestine Liberation Organisation in 1981; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: A conclusion to the investigation is expected shortly.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether the current investigation concerning the alleged sale of radio equipment by Racal Ltd. to the Palestine Liberation Organisation in 1981 includes an inquiry into the training of militiamen from the Palestine Liberation Organisation in battleground communications provided by Racal Ltd.

Mr. Alan Clark: No.

British Shipbuilders

Mr. Clay: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he will reply to the letter from the hon. Member for Sunderland, North concerning Government support for British Shipbuilders sent to him on 4 March.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I have written to the hon. Member this morning.

House of Fraser

Mr. Ron Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what recent representations he has received from Lonrho plc about the conduct of the inquiry by his Department's inspectors into the affairs of House of Fraser plc; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: I cannot discuss matters relating to the investigation of the affairs of House of Fraser Holdings plc while it is in progress.

City Action Teams

Mr. Madden: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether the City Action team to be located in Leeds will also be responsible for all the Bradford metropolitan district; whether any City Action team officials will be based permanently or temporarily in any part of the Bradford metropolitan district; what action City Action team officials are taking to contact public, private and voluntary agencies in Bradford; and how such agencies in Bradford may make contact with City Action team officials.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The Leeds — Bradford City Action team will cover the Leeds and Bradford urban programme areas. City Action team officials are located in the regional offices of the Departments of the Environment, of Employment and of Trade and Industry which are in Leeds. Officers in all three Departments already have close contacts with organisations and agencies in the whole area the team covers. If any person or agency in Bradford wants to get in touch with the team they should contact one of the three departments.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what budget will be available to the City Action team based in Leeds; what part of that budget represents new financial resources; what proportion of the overall budget will be spent within the Bradford metropolitan district; and who is the responsible accounting officer for City Action team expenditure in Leeds and Bradford.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The total funds which the three City Action team departments estimate they will spend in Leeds-Bradford in 1987-88 is around £100 million. They estimate around £50 million of this will be spent in Bradford. In addition the Government are now making available £0·79 million for the City Action team to spend in 1988-89 on special pump-priming projects involving the private sector and designed to stimulate enterprise and employment. The responsible accounting officer for that special top-up fund is the Permanent Secretary of my Department.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what preference will be given to those living within the Bradford metropolitan district in any employment from projects arising directly or indirectly from activity undertaken or initiated by the City Action team based in Leeds; and what preference Bradford-based companies will be given in the placing of orders or contracts by the City Action team based in Leeds.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The Government's City Action team for Leeds-Bradford covers both these cities and its activities will be of benefit to both.

Competition Act 1980

Mr. Page: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what progress has been made in implementing the programme of references under section 11 of the Competition Act 1980 announced on 7 September 1987.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: A reference of the Welsh Water Authority was sent to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission on that day and the Post Office counter service at Crown offices was referred on 6 November. I am sending a reference of British Coal's capital and investment activities to the Commission today.

The remaining reference in the programme announced on 7 September, London Underground, will be deferred until later this year to enable management to concentrate on the investigation into the King's Cross disaster and any follow-up action needed. Its place in the programme will be filled by a reference relating to British Rail's provincial sector which will be made later in the spring.

I then propose to announce a further programme of references for the remainder of 1988 and early 1989.

Action for Cities

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many Action for Cities working breakfasts will take place; where they will be held; which Ministers will be involved; how many business people will be involved; and what will be the total cost.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: My present intentions are to hold six working breakfasts in Newcastle, Leeds, Manchester, Birmingham, Liverpool and London. They will be attended by my hon. Friend the Member for Northavon (Mr. Cope) — the Minister of State, Department of Employment — my hon. Friend the Member for Rossendale and Darwen (Mr. Trippier) — the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Environment — my hon. Friend the Member for South Ribble (Mr. Atkins) — the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Industry — and myself as Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster and Minister responsible for the co-ordination of Government inner city policies.

An audience of 200 to 250 senior representatives of industry and business will attend each presentation. Final costs are not yet known, but are expected to be in the region of £0·5 million.

Enterprise Initiative

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he has any proposals to extend to advertising the range of advice offered by his Department or financed by grants for consultancies under the enterprise initiative.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [holding answer 11 March 1988]: The subject of advertising is already addressed by the marketing initiative.

Research and Development

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will provide figures for the total amount per head of population spent on research and development for the last five available years in the following countries: Norway, Sweden, Western Germany, France, the United States of America, Japan, Italy and the United Kingdom.

Mr. Alan Clark [holding answer 11 March 1988]: The available information is given in the table.

Gross expenditure on research and development per head of the total population[1]

Internal Market

Mr. Robertson: To asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list all the proposals for completion of the internal market currently under consideration by the Council of Ministers.

Mr. Alan Clark [holding answer 8 March 1988]: the 1988 presidency action programme on the single market lists more than 140 individual measures for discussion by the Council this year. Copies of the programme are available in the Library of the House.

GATT

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if there have been recent meetings of the general agreement on tariffs and trade textile working group; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark [holding answer 29 February 1988]: The GATT textiles committee last met on 4 December 1987. The committee undertook the annual review of the operation of the multi-fibre arrangements, as required by article 10.4, and considered the membership of the GATT textiles surveillance body for 1988. The committee next meets on 14 March.

SCOTLAND

Student Grants

Mr. McTaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list for each Scottish university the number of students in receipt of fees only grants for the current academic year; and if he will express these figures as a percentage of the total student numbers.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The latest available complete figures are set out below. They relate to the academic session 1986-87 and are in respect of those students at each university who are assisted by the Scottish Education Department.

University
Aberdeen	1,018 students (28 per cent.
Dundee	368 students (21 per cent.)
Edinburgh	1,604 students (32 per cent.)
Glasgow	1,948 students (25 per cent.
Heriot-Watt	491 students (28 per cent.)
St. Andrews	369 students (34 per cent.)
Stirling	222 students (15 per cent.)
Strathclyde	1,286 students (24 per cent.)

Prisons (Overcrowding)

Mr. McTaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement about the transfer of prisoners back to Barlinnie from Low Moss remand centre, and what further steps he will take to relieve overcrowding in Scottish prisons.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: On 26 January 1988 a number of inmates at Low Moss began to destroy furniture and fittings. When the incident was under control 24 inmates from one dormitory were transferred to HM prison Barlinnie. There was significant damage to property. No injuries were sustained.

The Scottish Home and Health Department is currently reviewing the revised use of capacity in its establishments. A further hall will become available at HM prison Shotts in the near future.

Rating Reform

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the estimated cost of production and distribution of his booklet: "You and the Community Charge: A Step by Step Guide."

Mr. Lang: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Dundee, East (Mr. McAllion) of 7 March.

Health Boards

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he has any plans to instruct health boards to set up a register of interests showing all shareholdings, directorships and consultancies of health board members; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he has any plans to instruct health board members to declare their interest in private health insurance schemes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: No. Chairmen and members of health boards are required to declare any interests in matters being considered by their board in terms of the National Health Service (Health Boards: Membership, Procedure and Payment of Subscriptions) (Scotland) Regulations 1975.

Football Matches (Policing)

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the cost of policing football matches in Scotland in each of the last three football seasons.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: This information is not held centrally.

Cervical Cytology

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when his Department's report on the cervical cytology services in Scotland will be (a) published and (b) implemented.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The report of a working group set up by the scientific services advisory group of the Scottish Health Services Planning Council was issued to health boards on 10 December 1987. I have placed in the Library a copy of the report and of the Scottish Home and Health Department's letter of the same date asking health boards to review their cervical cytology services and establish by the end of 1988 a computerised call and recall system which will ensure that all women in the age range 20 to 60 receive an invitation to attend for a smear test by 1993.

Dog Registration Scheme

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he proposes to introduce a scheme to enable local authorities in Scotland to operate a dog registration system in accordance with an amendment to the Local Government Bill.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: There are no plans for the introduction of such a scheme in Scotland.

Islay

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many members of his Department's agricultural staff have visited Islay during the past 12 months.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Ten members of staff of the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland have visited Islay during the past 12 months.

White-fronted Geese

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will detail the type of damage caused to crops and grassland by the feeding habits of white-fronted geese on Islay.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Typical damage to root crops is a widespread breaking in to the roots which leads to deterioration and rotting. Livestock feed is lost and damaged turnips are unmarketable for human consumption.

Continual grazing pressure on improved grassland causes a loss of valuable winter and spring grazing for livestock.

Health Boards (Finances)

Sir Hector Monro: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what financial allocations he has made to health boards for 1988-89.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I have allocated £1,661 million[1] to health boards to meet their gross recurrent expenditure commitments on hospitals and community health services in 1988-89. After expected income is taken into account, the net cash limited allocations to individual health boards are as follows:

Recurrent expenditure (net)

Health board	£ million
Argyll and Clyde	118·305
Ayrshire and Arran	88·548
Borders	25·675
Dumfries and Galloway	42·528
Fife	82·835
Forth Valley	77·570
Grampian	152·266
Greater Glasgow	430·705
Highland	62·292
Lanarkshire	136·332
Lothian	266·427
Orkney	4·667
Shetland	5·724
Tayside	153·124
Western Isles	8·517
	1,655·515

[1] Includes £19·06 million allocated for specific commitments including national cardiac surgery services, lithotripsy and AIDS.

Forestry Commission (Kielder Forest)

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the number of staff employed by the Forestry Commission in the Kielder forest district in 1985 to 1987 in (a) supervisory and administrative grades and (b) industrial grades; and in each category, how many staff are employed in (i) planting and maintenance, (ii) harvesting, (iii) nursery work, (iv) research, survey and environmental work and (v) forest work.

Mr. Gummer: I have been asked to reply.

The information, which is based on average figures, is as follows:

Year	Supervisory and administrative grades	Industrial grades
1985	34	149
1986	33	144
1987	33	136

The above figures do not include directly employed private contractors; the number of such contractors at 31 March 1987 was 22.

Most staff are employed on a range of duties in the course of a year. It is not practicable, therefore, to break down the total numbers of staff employed into the listed areas of work.

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the total area of Forestry Commission land in Kielder Forest district in each of the years 1985 to 1987; and what was the area of (a) land under trees, (b) unplanted land, (c) land planted and (d) land harvested, in each of those years.

Mr. Gummer: I have been asked to reply.

The information is set out in the table:

	Total Area of Land (hectares)	Land under Trees (hectares)	Unplanted Land (hectares)
[1]1985	50,675	40,180	10,495
[1]1986	50,671	40,180	10,491
[1]1987	50,369	40,177	10,186

	Planting (hectares)		Timber Production 000 m^3[2]
	New Planting	Restocking
[1]1985	4	393	135
[1]1986	—	313	160
[1]1987	6	513	174

[1] Year (at 31 March)

[2] Timber production is measured by volume and not in terms of area.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Exports

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list for each year since 1979, the total tonnage and value of exports of (a) wheat, (b) barley, (c) oats, (d) oilseed rape and (e) the total tonnage and value for all four commodities.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The data requested are set out in the table.

Exports of Wheat, Barley, Oats and Rape (including Colza Seed) 1979-87

	Wheat		Barley		Oats		Rape and Colza seed		Total
	Quantity	Value	Quantity	Value	Quantity	Value	Quantity	Value	Quantity	Value

Oils and Fats

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what has been the percentage change in the United Kingdom consumption per head of butter and other edible oils and fats, respectively, since 1972.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Estimates based on the national food survey data indicate that household consumption per head of butter in the United Kingdom fell by 55 per cent. between 1972 and 1987. Over the same period per capita consumption of edible oils and fats increased by 25 per cent.

Public Analyst Service

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his policy towards the funding of the public analyst service, with particular reference to the relative priority to be accorded to laboratory tests performed by the public analysts on behalf of local authority trading standards officers, environmental health officers and other inspectors operating in the field of consumer protection; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Local authorities are responsible for determining their own priorities for the enforcement of consumer protection legislation. Under the Food Act 1984, each food and drugs authority has to appoint a public analyst, but it is not the policy of this Government to interfere with the funding arrangements between an authority and its public analyst nor with the authority's decisions on the relative importance of the services to be carried out by the public analyst.

Price Increases

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what has been the annual average percentage increase in (a) agricultural produce, (b) food and (c) general prices in each year since 1979.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The average annual percentage increases were as follows:

	Agricultural Producer Prices	Food Prices	General Prices
1979	10·2	12·0	13·4
1980	5·4	12·1	18·0
1981	10·9	8·4	11·9
1982	7·8	7·9	8·6
1983	5·2	3·2	4·7
1984	0·2	5·6	5·0
1985	−1·6	3·1	6·1
1986	1·3	3·3	3·4
1987	1·8	3·1	4·2
1988 (January)	1·0	2·9	3·3

Forestry

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will give details of the outstanding forestry planting grant and felling licence applications referred to him by the Forestry Commission; when each was so referred; when he expects to be able to announce a decision for each one; and for which cases further consultation is still being considered.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 10 March 1988]: My right hon. Friend is considering one forestry planting grant application to which objections have been raised. This application relates to 60 hectares of land at West Stotley, Northumberland and was referred to him on 25 November 1987. He has consulted his right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for the Environment, and intends to advise the forestry commissioners of his views shortly.

Environmentally Sensitive Areas

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he proposes to review the prescriptions for existing environmentally sensitive areas; and if he will consider extending to them the management options available in new environmentally sensitive areas.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 8 March 1988]: I have no plans to review prescriptions for environmentally sensitive areas before the effects of existing ones have been assessed. The additions to the range of options available in new ESAs were designed specifically for those areas and it would not be appropriate to extend them.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will clarify the procedures adopted by monotoring steering committees operating in each environmentally sensitive area; and if he will give details of the extent to which representatives from bodies outside his Ministry are involved in monitoring programmes.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 8 March 1988]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to him on 7 March at column 15.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether all applications from farmers in the first tranche of environmentally sensitive areas have now been processed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 8 March 1988]: In 1987, a total of 1,421 applications to participate in ESA agreements in England were received, of which all but 12 have been fully processed.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will provide details of staffing allocations for each environmentally sensitive area; and when he expects all farms presently involved in the programme to have received visits from project officers.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 8 March 1988]: Each environmentally sensitive area has an appointed project officer from ADAS together with an assistant. They are supported by other staff from my Department as necessary. Most holdings are visited before an agreement is concluded and all will be visited at least once during the period of the agreement.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what arrangements he is making to enforce management prescriptions on relevant farms within environmentally sensitive areas; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 8 March 1988]: A sample of holdings will be visited each year to ensure that management prescriptions are being complied with. Every holding with a management prescription will be visited at least once during the period of the agreement. Provisions as to breach of agreements are set out in the designation orders.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how he proposes to secure the co-operation where relevant of water authorities and internal drainage boards in furthering environmentally sensitive area objectives.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 8 March 1988]: My Department, jointly with the Department of the Environment, will shortly be issuing revised conservation guidelines for drainage authorities. These guidelines cover the responsibilities of water authorities and internal drainage boards for environmental protection and specifically refer to ESA objectives.

NORTHERN IRELAND

International Fund for Ireland

Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland under what circumstances the International Fund for Ireland seeks guidance from his Department on decisions relating to the disbursement of funds; and on how many occasions this occurred in 1987.

Mr. Viggers: The International Fund for Ireland is administered by an independent board appointed by the United Kingdom and Irish Governments. All questions pertaining to the disbursement of funds are a matter for the board and should be addressed to the chairman. Article 3 of the agreement establishing the fund provides that

"disbursements shall be consistent with the economic and social policies and priorities of the respective Governments".

To assist in its work, the board has an advisory committee, comprised of senior civil servants of the two Governments, which meets regularly. In addition, the board has delegated to specialist agencies, including some Government Departments, responsibility for the administration of its various programmes within criteria and operating arrangements specified by the board. The activities of administering agencies in respect of their responsibilities for fund programmes are closely monitored by the board.

Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the economic and social policies and priorities that guide decisions on disbursements from the International Fund for Ireland.

Mr. Viggers: The International Fund for Ireland is administered by an independent board appointed by the United Kingdom and Irish Governments. All questions pertaining to the disbursements of funds are a matter for the board and should be addressed to the chairman. However, article 3 of the Agreement to establish the International Fund for Ireland provides that

"The need to maximise the economic and social benefits of the Fund in Ireland shall be an overriding consideration in making disbursements from its resources and these disbursements shall be consistent with the economic and social policies and priorities of the respective Governments".

Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish a table all those projects in Northern Ireland in receipt of funds from the International Fund for Ireland.

Mr. Viggers: The International Fund for Ireland is administered by an independent board appointed by the United Kingdom and Irish Governments. All questions pertaining to projects in rejects of funds from the International Fund for Ireland are a matter for the board and should be addressed to the chairman.

Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the decision by the International Fund for Ireland to refuse support to Conway Community Development Enterprise Ltd., and the criteria used to reach this decision.

Mr. Viggers: Article 3 of the agreement to establish the International Fund for Ireland provides that disbursements from the fund

"shall be consistent with the economic and social policies and priorities of the respective Governments".

The United Kingdom Government have advised the board of the International Fund for Ireland that provision of support to Conway Community Development Enterprise Ltd. in respect of activities at the Conway street mill is not consistent with the Government's economic and social policies and priorities.

Terrorism

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the estimated percentage of the total arms shipped illegally into Ireland which have been recovered to date.

Mr. Tom King: Since the beginning of 1987, 807 firearms, some 18,000 lbs of explosives, including almost 900 lbs of commercial explosives, and nearly 180,500 rounds of ammunition have been recovered by the security forces on both sides of the border. It is not possible to determine precisely what proportion this represents of the firearms and explosives which have been shipped illegally to terrorists.

Prisoners (Statistics)

Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many (i) life sentence prisoners and (ii) prisoners detained under his pleasure have been released on licence in each year since 1980; how many in each category were (a) Loyalist, (b) Republican and (c) undifferentiated; and what was the average length of service in each of these classifications.

Mr. Tom King: The information is as follows:

Persons serving indeterminate sentences released on licence since 1980

Mr. Brendan Burns and Mr. Brendan Moley

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) if he will call for a report from the Chief Constable as to those matters about which the Royal Ulster Constabulary wished to interview the late Brendan Burns;

(2) if he will call for a report from the Chief Constable as to those matters about which the Royal Ulster Constabulary wished to interview the late Brendan Moley.

Mr. Tom King [holding answer 7 March 1988]: No.

EMPLOYMENT

Labour Statistics

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement about the changes in the level of unemployment in the London borough of Barnet over the last two years.

Mr. Lee: The number of unemployed claimants in the Barnet local authority area at the latest date available and in the previous two years was as follows:

January 1986	11,256
January 1987	10,821
January 1988	8,685

The comparison is affected by the changes in the compilation of the unemployment statistics in March 1986.

Mr. Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the total number of people benefiting from special employment and training measures at the latest available date in the Swindon area; and if he will list the measures and the numbers involved in each case.

Mr. Nicholls: The number of people participating in special employment and training measures funded by my Department including Manpower Services Commission programmes and schemes in the Swindon area on 31 January 1988 was as follows:

	Number
YTS	1,160
Community Programme	953
New Job Training Scheme	30
Voluntary Projects Programme	11
Other adult training	[1]524
Total	2,678

[1] Figures for all other adult training schemes are not available. The figure refers to the number of people who have entered some such schemes since 1 April 1987.

National Dock Labour Scheme

Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many permanent registered dock workers in the London labour board area in each year from 1980 to 1986 have been dismissed by their employer for an offence justifying summary dismissal under the disciplinary provisions of the dock labour scheme; and how many of these men have been reinstated by order of the local dock labour board and appeal tribunals.

Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many permanent registered dock workers in the Hull and Goole dock labour board area in each year from 1980 to 1986 have been dismissed by their employer for an offence justifying summary dismissal under the disciplinary provisions of the dock labour scheme; and how many of these men have been reinstated by order of the local dock labour board and appeal tribunals.

Mr. Roger King: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many permanent registered dock workers in the Tyne and Wear local dock labour board area in each year from 1980 to 1986 have been dismissed by their employer for an offence justifying summary dismissal under the disciplinary provisions of the dock labour scheme; and how many of these men have been reinstated by order of the local dock labour board and appeal tribunals.

Mr. Wood: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many permanent registered dock workers in the Grimsby and Immingham local dock labour board area in each year from 1980 to 1986 have been dismissed by their employer for an offence justifying dismissal under the disciplinary provisions of the dock labour scheme; and how many of these men have been reinstated by order of the local dock labour board and appeal tribunals.

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many permanent registered dock workers in the West Scotland local dock labour board area in each year from 1980 to 1986 have been dismissed by their employer for an offence justifying summary dismissal under the disciplinary provisions of the dock labour scheme; and how many of these men have been reinstated by order of the local dock labour board and appeal tribunals.

Mr. Nicholls: The information requested is maintained at the office of the local dock labour board for the area concerned. I have asked the board to assemble the information and will reply in substance as soon as it becomes available.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what discussions he has had with unions representing staff at Department of Employment offices in London concerning staff levels, conditions and transfers since January.

Mr. Lee: There have been a number of extensive discussions between senior officials in the employment service and CPSA union officials since some CPSA members started strike action in Camden towards the end of December 1987. On 9 March there was a meeting between the general secretary and deputy general secretary of the CPSA and senior officials in my Department and it was agreed a further meeting should take place.

Equal Opportunities Commission

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) whether, in the light of the Equal Opportunities Commission's recent report, he will consider seeking to repeal the two-year qualifying period for unfair dismissal;

(2) whether, in the light of the Equal Opportunities Commission's recent report, he will consider introducing legislation to prevent employers from imposing qualifying periods of employment for a woman to have the right to return to work after pregnancy.

Mr. Nicholls: The Equal Opportunities Commission's proposals were published on 8 March. I shall be giving them careful consideration.

Mr. McTaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information he has on the number of long-term unemployed people in (a) Glasgow, (b) Scotland and (c) the United Kingdom, who have difficulty returning to employment because of problems of literacy, numeracy or language.

Mr. Nicholls [holding answer 3 March 1988]: The information is not available in the form requested.

Information collected in January 1987 through the restart programme revealed that in Scotland 6 per cent. of those unemployed for six months or more seen by restart counsellors and 11·9 per cent. of those on restart courses had problems with literacy and numeracy. Those problems may have contributed to their difficulty in returning to employment. Comparable figures for Great Britain are 10·3 per cent. of those counselled and 25·2 per cent. of those on restart courses. Separate figures are not available for the Glasgow area. The restart survey also suggested that language problems were experienced by unemployed people, particularly in large conurbations.

WALES

Surgical Operations (Cancellations)

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what information he has as to the number and percentage of operations in Wales which are cancelled due to the absence of the consultant surgeon; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what estimate he has as to the number and percentage of operations and out-patient treatments which are cancelled in each Welsh health district on 1 March as a result of the trade unions' day of action.

Mr. Grist: This information is not available centrally.

Milford Haven Enterprise Zone

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he will consider extensions to the Milford Haven enterprise zone to include areas adjacent to the zone including Front street, Pembroke Dock.

Mr. Grist: Any application to extend the zone will need to be considered against the background to the Government's future policy for enterprise zones, as indicated by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment in his written answer of 17 December 1987 to the Member for Banbury (Mr. Baldry), at columns 618-19.

Ysgol Morgan Llwyd, Clwyd

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will visit Ysgol Morgan Llwyd, Clwyd, to meet the board of school governors, parents and staff to discuss the need for extra financial resources to enable school visits, related to the new General Certificate of Secondary Education examinations, to be undertaken; and if he will make a statement on progress in implementing the General Certificate of Secondary Education scheme.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: I have no plans to visit the school. The distribution of general certificate of secondary education funding to each secondary school is a matter for Clwyd local education authority to determine in the light of local circumstances.

Evidence from Her Majesty's inspectorate in an interim report on the general certificate of secondary education published on 8 March shows that encouraging progress is being made in introducing the examination in Wales.

St. Tydfil's Hospital, Merthyr

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when his Department was first notified of the possibility of the closure of the high dependency unit at St. Tydfil's hospital, Merthyr; when it was told that a decision to close it had been taken; and how many representations he has received about the closure.

Mr. Grist: The Department was first notified of the possibility of the temporary closure of the high dependency unit at St. Tydfil's hospital in December 1987 and was told in January that a decision to close had been taken. Since the closure is temporary, there was no requirement on the authority to obtain my approval. I have received three representations about the closure.

Derelict Land Clearance

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what role has been played by Government Departments other than the Welsh Office in derelict land clearance in the south Wales valleys since 1969; and when.

Mr. Peter Walker: I refer the right hon. Gentleman to the reply given to him on 8 March 1988 by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment, at columns 120-21.

ENERGY

Electricity Industry

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the number of people employed in the public sector of the electricity supply industry.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The average number of people employed in the electricity supply industry in England and Wales during 1986-87 (the latest year for which figures are available) was 132,000.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if, during preparation of the proposals for privatisation of the electricity supply industry, any estimate has been made by his Department of (i) the present value of Connah's Quay power station and (ii) the cost of refurbishing it to produce power while meeting current environmental standards; and if he will make a statement on the policy he will require the Central Electricity Generating Board to adopt towards the disposal of redundant power stations prior to privatisation.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The value of individual power stations and the cost of refurbishment are matters for the CEGB.

Coal Industry

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the number of full-time employees in the coal industry; and what proportion of the number so employed eight years ago this represents.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The number of full-time employees in the coal industry at the end of February 1988 was 123,822, which is 43 per cent. of the corresponding number eight years previously.

Dounreay

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many inspection person days Euratom has spent in each year since May 1979 at the Dounreay nuclear power development establishment.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Euratom inspectors visit Dounreay very frequently. Precise details could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what information the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority at Dounreay gives to Euratom and International Atomic Energy Agency inspectors on the content of nuclear materials sent from Dounreay to Sellafield by ship and from Dounreay and Sellafield and elsewhere by plane.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Site operators inform Euratom and the International Atomic Energy Agency of all movements of civil nuclear materials.

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how often Euratom safeguards inspectors forward safeguards reports on Dounreay to the Euratom headquarters.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Euratom safeguards inspectors report for each inspection made at Dounreay.

Radioactive Tritium Gas

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what quantities of radioactive tritium gas have been licensed for handling processing at the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority, Harwell facility in each year since 1979.

Mr. Michael Spicer: No licence is required for the storage and use of tritium at UKAEA sites. I understand that very small quantities of tritium gas are stored at the Harwell laboratory for civil research purposes.

Power Companies (Plutonium)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he has given any consideration to introducing legislation to require the proposed private power companies owning plutonium to make this available for defence uses.

Mr. Michael Spicer: No.

BNFL (Draft Contracts)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if any draft contracts between British Nuclear Fuels Ltd. and OKG Aktiebolag in Sweden have been notified to the European Commission under article 103 of the Euratom treaty.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I am advised that these contracts do not fall within the scope of article 103 of the Euratom treaty. They were notified under article 105 upon the United Kingdom's accession to the European Communities in January 1973.

Nuclear Waste

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if any decision has been taken to substitute a radiologically equivalent amount of higher level wastes for lower level wastes when returning such materials from British Nuclear Fuels Ltd. storage after reprocessing to originators of nuclear wastes in Sweden.

Mr. Michael Spicer: British Nuclear Fuels Ltd. has not entered into any contracts for the reprocessing of material from Sweden since 1976. The arrangements for the disposal of wastes arising from pre-1976 contracts are as set out in the reply given by my hon. Friend the Member for Eddisbury (Mr. Goodlad) to the hon. Member for Great Grimsby (Mr. Mitchell) on 2 May 1986 at columns 502-3.

Nuclear Reactors

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) what representations he has received concerning the general trend towards the development of smaller nuclear reactors; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what information he has on the design features of smaller nuclear reactors with low power densities and their implications for safety; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: My Department, with the advice and assistance of the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority, keeps abreast of developments in nuclear reactor technology. Safety is fundamental to the design, construction and operations of all nuclear reactors in the United Kingdom.

ENVIRONMENT

Disabled People (Access)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment under what powers a local authority may act in offering financial assistance to the owner of a sports club to make it accessible to disabled people.

Mr. Chope: I will write to the hon. Member.

Crown Suppliers

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the progress of the privatisation of the Crown Suppliers.

Mr. Chope: The Government's intention to invite bids for those of the Crown Suppliers' businesses, which can be undertaken on a normal commercial basis, was announced on 3 February. We expect soon to appoint a financial institution to advise on the best method of effecting the sale.

Rents

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimate he has made of the effect on rent levels as a consequence of the implementation of the Housing Bill; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: Any estimates of the effect of our deregulation proposals on rent levels would at this stage be purely speculative.

Drinking Water (Nitrate Levels)

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what cases there have been of drinking water in the Yorkshire and Humberside region containing nitrate in excess of the EEC recommended levels in the past 12 months.

Mr. Moynihan: During 1987 one supply provided by Yorkshire water authority and four supplies provided by Anglian water authority exceeded the EC drinking water directive standard for nitrate of 50 milligrams per litre. Two other Yorkshire water authority supplies exceeded the directive standard for a few days. However, none of these supplies contained nitrate at a level which was considered to be a public health risk.

Richmond House

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the access provisions for disabled people at the new Department of Health and Social Security building, Richmond house.

Mr. Chope: Disabled people may enter Richmond house by a level corridor from the underground car park to the main bank of lifts. Alternatively, they may use a special wheelchair entrance adjacent to the main entrance in Whitehall.

Further measures are in hand to provide access through the main entrance and foyer.

Rating Reform

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received concerning the replacement of rates by the community charge in respect of self-catering accommodation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: We have received representations from and on behalf of the self-catering industry about the treatment of self-catering accommodation in the new local government finance system. It is our intention that holiday-let self-catering accommodation which includes services and facilities similar to those provided in a hotel should remain in rating. We are considering further the precise boundary between the domestic and non-domestic sectors in the light of the representations that have been made.

Housing (Nottingham)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 7 March about housing in Nottingham, what was the error to which he refers.

Mr. Waldegrave: There was an error in the appointment by my Department of the estimate of private sector dwellings in disrepair between authorities in the East Midlands region. As I have previously explained, this had no bearing on the Housing Corporation's allocations for 1988-89. Corrected figures have been passed to the Housing Corporation and incorporated in its final housing needs index which will be one of the factors to be taken into account in drawing up future plans for investment in housing association schemes.

Unused Sites (Wiltshire)

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list all the unused sites owned by public bodies within the district of North Wiltshire, together with their owners and sizes in hectares, as detailed in the Land Register.

Mr. Trippier: The information requested for unused and underused sites entered on the land register for the district of north Wiltshire is set out below:

Owner and site address	Area in hectares
North Wiltshire district council
Reids Piece, Purton	1·10
Redhill, Broad Town	1·07
Harris road, Ashton Keynes	1·50
Cemetery field, London road, Chippenham	2·29
Thamesdown borough council
Land at Purton and Cricklade, Wiltshire forming part of the site of the former railway line from Swindon to Cricklade	9·72
Wiltshire county council
Rylands, Wootton Bassett	2·30
Noremarsh, Wootton Bassett	0·49
Knockdown road, Sherston	0·81
Lower Beversbrook farm, Oxford road, Calne	6·34
The Green, Christian Malford	4·49

Owner and site address	Area in hectares
Cricketts lane, Chippenham	1·95
British Railways Board
Adjoining former goods yard, Hullavington	1·52
North side of Bristol to Paddington main line, Thingley	1·01
Badminton—adjoining Chippenham to Malmesbury road—approximately 1¼ miles east of former station	4·45
Adjoining former station, Hullavington	1·52
Former goods yard, Corsham	1·01
Former goods yard, Dauntsey	1·21
Bath district health authority
Land at Malmesbury Hospital	1·45
Land at Chippenham Hospital	0·51
Land at St. Andrew's Hospital, Chippenham	0·92
Land at Greenways hospital, Chippenham	3·76

Rates

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the implications for rates of the judgment delivered on 11 February in the House of Lords in the case of Clement v. Addis Ltd.

Mr. Howard: My right hon. Friend did so on 9 March.

Rushmoor (Redevelopment)

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if the redevelopment package for Totland Close, Prospect Estate, Rushmoor, will be allowed capital expenditure within Rushmoor's housing investment programme allocation; and if it will be subject to the current programme for 1988-89 or subsequent years.

Mrs Roe: Rushmoor borough council has the sole responsibility for decisions on local housing matters of this kind.

Government Offices and Staff (Wales)

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the number of Government offices and the number of staff employed in them, excluding military personnel in (i) Pembrokeshire, (ii) Dyfed and (iii) Wales.

Mr. Chope: The numbers and total areas of Government offices in the locations to which the hon. Gentleman refers are as follows:

	Numbers	Area
(a) Pembrokeshire	22	(8,393m²)
(b) Dyfed	67	(31,732m²)
(c) Wales	386	(414,000m²)

These figures do not include military establishments and it will be appreciated that offices vary significantly in size and can be occupied by more than one Government Department.

Records of staff numbers in these areas are not held centrally either by the Welsh Office or PSA and to obtain them would entail disproportionate costs.

Council House Sales (Delays)

Mr. Gerald Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether, pursuant to his answer of 20 January, Official Report, column 753, he has received any further information as to the reasons for the continued delay in the purchase by Mr. W. B. Hammond of his home at 12b Mount Adon Park, London SE22, from Southwark council.

Mrs. Roe: The Department is continuing to press the council to explain the reasons for the delay in this case. I will write to my hon. Friend as soon as the information is available.

Mr. Gerald Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what information he has as to the reasons for the delay in the purchase by Mr. and Mrs. Harman of their home at 10 William Margrie Close, London SE15, from Southwark council;

(2) what information he has as to the reasons for the delay in the purchase by Mr. and Mrs. Mico of their home at 185 Brenchley Gardens, London SE23, from Southwark council;

(3) what information he has as to the reasons for the delay in the purchase by Mrs. Cheryl Sanders of her home at 353 Friern Road, London SE22, from Southwark council;

(4) what information he has as to the reasons for the delay in the purchase by Mrs. Grace Davies of her home at 36 Avondale Rise, London SE15, from Southwark council.

Mrs. Roe: The Department is taking up with the council the cases mentioned.

Planning (Public Inquiries)

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he has to alter the public inquiry system into major planning schemes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Government's response to the fifth report, Session 1985-86, from the Environment Committee, "Planning: Appeals, Call-in and Major Public Inquiries: CM43", contained proposals for revised rules of procedure at public inquiries, and for a new code of practice on preparing for major inquiries. Following consultations with the Council on Tribunals and a wide range of other organisations, we expect shortly to submit the revised rules to the Lord Chancellor for making, and to bring the new code of practice into operation.

Planning Applications

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list by London borough the total number of planning applications (a) called in by him or (b) referred to him on appeal by the applicant and the number of cases where he (i) upheld the local planning decision and (ii) varied it; and if he will also list the comparable figures for each year since 1979.

Mr. Waldegrave: The information requested is in tables A and B below; 1984 is the earliest year from which this information is readily available.

Local Authorities (Debt)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish in the Official Report the amount of debt accumulated by each local authority in England (a) in total and (b) per head of the population, in each local authority area.

Mr. Chope: A copy of the table showing the information requested has been laid in the Library of the House. The figures relate to 31 March 1987 and are based on those published in the CIPFA publication "Capital Expenditure and Debt Financing Statistics".

Birtenshaw Farm, Bolton

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what recent representations he has received against development at Birtenshaw farm, Bolton; and if he will make a statement;

(2) when he will be announcing his decision about the Ashworth covenant at Birtenshaw farm.

Mr. Waldegrave: Since the turn of the year, 29 local residents have made representations to the Department seeking a decision on the application to remove the restriction contained in the covenant. The Department has sought and is awaiting information and views from Bolton borough council on the status of the covenant. When they are received, I hope we shall be able to proceed to a decision.

Land

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will identify by previous owner the land recorded on the land register system which has been sold or brought into use since 1981.

Mr. Trippier: Detailed information for the period up to 31 December 1983 is not available.

Information from 1 January 1984, in the form of a schedule of owners showing the amount of land each has sold or brought into use and detailing some 39,000 acres of land, will be available shortly when I will place it in the Library of the House.

Public Sites

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the public sites disposed of following the exercise of statutory powers by Her Majesty's Government.

Mr. Trippier: The following sites, formerly owned by public bodies, have been disposed of following the exercise by my right hon. Friend of his powers under section 98 of the Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980:

Alfred street/Oak Bank, Harpurhey, Manchester
Barmpton lane, Darlington
Boothroyden "A" site, Blackley, Manchester
Doxford Park way, Sunderland
Fiddlers Green lane, Cheltenham
Freely lane, Bramham, Leeds
Hall Farm road, Doxford Park, Sunderland
Keswick lane, Bardsey, Leeds
Kirkfield lane, Thorner, Leeds
Land at Congleton road, Macclesfield
Land between Nos. 2 and 4 Meadow way, Offley, Hertfordshire
Land at Surbiton Lagoon, Surbiton

Whiteley croft, Otley
Willow avenue, Clifford, Leeds

Urban Development Grant

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give the location of the £580 million of investment arising from urban development grant and urban regeneration grant.

Mr. Trippier: The private sector investment that will be attracted by urban development and urban regeneration grant now stands at £592 million. The regional breakdown is as follows:

Region	[1]£ million
East Midlands	44
London	95
Merseyside	52
Northern	79
North West	95
South East	1
West Midlands	181
Yorkshire and Humberside	45
TOTAL	592

[1] Private sector investment.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give the location and distribution of the 28,500 jobs and 7,000 homes attributed by Her Majesty's Government to the urban development grant and urban regeneration grant.

Mr. Trippier: A regional breakdown of the jobs and homes attributed to approved urban development grants and urban regeneration grant schemes is as follows:

Region	Jobs	Homes
East Midlands	1,990	780
London	6,220	90
Merseyside	3,040	600
Northern	2,210	1,860
North West	5,610	490
South East	50	0
West Midlands	8,490	2,040
Yorkshire and Humberside	1,260	1,420
TOTAL	28,870	7,280

Richmond Yard

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) which company undertook the valuation of the Crown premises at Richmond yard; and what was the cost to the Government of that valuation;

(2) what estimate the Property Services Agency has made of the cost of undertaking the valuation of the Crown premises at Richmond yard by in-house staff;

(3) why the valuation of the Crown property at Richmond yard was carried out by a private company.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 1 March 1988]: The valuation of the Crown premises at Richmond yard was undertaken by Messrs. Cluttons, chartered surveyors. The fee for the service was negotiated on a strictly commercial and therefore confidential basis. The decision to appoint a private sector valuer was made in view of the importance of establishing the true commercial rent for the property. No in-house assessment was made.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Hospital General Managers

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any plans to increase the degree of management control which hospital general managers have over doctors in hospitals.

Mr. Newton: No, but the resource management initiative is based on, and intended to assist, more effective co-operation between managers and clinicians.

Drug Tenders

Mr. Robert B. Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what guidance is given to health authorities on the use of discount cash flow methods for assessing drug tenders.

Mr. Newton: A range of guidance has been issued to health authorities on investment and option appraisal. This guidance has incorporated relevant Treasury rules on Government accounting and covers both mandatory requirements and good practice—including the use of discounted cash flow methods. This technique would not generally be applicable to the assessment of drug tenders.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what guidance is given to health authorities on the costs of storage in evaluating tenders for drugs.

Mr. Newton: The Department commissioned a recent study by management consultants—MMM Consultancy Group Ltd.—which considered the options available to health authorities in dealing with their purchasing, distribution and storage of pharmaceuticals. The report subsequently circulated to health authorities carried recommendations relating to storage of drugs of high value and high throughput. Authorities are currently reviewing their arrangements for the purchasing and storage of pharmaceuticals in the light of these recommendations.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when the East Anglian regional health authority last invited tenders for the supply of drugs to the authority.

Mr. Newton: The regional health authority went out to tender in August 1987 for a distributive service for all product lines where the expenditure within the region was less than £5,000 per annum.

Tenders for some pharmaceutical products where expenditure exceeds £5,000 per annum were issued in January 1988.

Hospital Laboratory Service

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any plans to reorganise the hospital laboratory service in England and Wales; and if he will make a statement on the level of services for the public and the remuneration structure and conditions of service for the staff.

Mr. Newton: We have no present plans to reorganise the hospital laboratory service. The remuneration structure and conditions of service for hospital laboratory staff are matters for the appropriate Whitley councils. I understand that the management side of the Professional Technical Staffs B Whitley Council, the body that deals with medical laboratory scientific officers, is to put proposals for a comprehensive grade restructuring to the staff side at a meeting on 19 April. In the longer term, consideration will also be given to decisions made in response to the Management Advisory Service's report on pathology services staffing which is currently under consideration by the National Health Service Management Board. Any proposed changes will pay full regard to the need to maintain a high standard of service for the public.

Plans for Wales are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

National Haemoglobinopathy Card

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what action he is taking to ensure that screening and counselling services are accessible to all people at risk from inherited blood disorders when he introduces the national haemoglobinopathy card.

Mrs. Currie: The introduction of the national haemoglobinopathy card will not in any way change existing medical practices. The purpose of the card, to be introduced around April, is to ensure

(i) appropriate treatment for those with the disease,

(ii) that people identified with the trait should receive the appropriate counselling,
(iii) for those screened and found to be "normal", reassurance and avoidance of duplicate screening.

Individuals identified as being "at risk" from inherited blood disorders are offered counselling as part of the existing process.

Pensioners (Investment Income)

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has on the trend in pensioners' investment income over the past 15 years.

Mr. Scott: The latest date for which information is available is 1985. Pensioners' weekly investment income, expressed in 1985 prices, rose on average from £11·20 in 1970 to £12·80 in 1985, a real terms increase of £1·60, or over 14 per cent. The upward trend has, however, not been constant.

Occupational Pensions

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many retirement pensioners are in receipt of an occupational pension, and what is the average occupational pension.

Mr. Scott: In 1985, the latest date for which information is available, 51 per cent. of all pensioners and 70 per cent. of recently-retired couples had an occupational pension. The average weekly amount then in payment was £37.

Hospitals (Fire Safety)

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how often hospital fire safety checks are made; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: Health authorities are required to have fire precautions policies and programmes agreed with local chief fire officers. Within the framework of these policies and programmes it is for health authorities to decide the type and frequency of checking applicable to specific fire precautions, having regard, where appropriate, to departmental and other guidance. For example, guidance on the maintenance and testing of fire alarm and detection systems is given in health technical memorandum 82. We attach great importance to the maintenance of effective fire precautions in all National Health Service units particularly as many patients are frail or immobile. We therefore require health authorities to be scrupulous in their observance of fire precaution regulations and guidance.

Children (Drownings)

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many children, under the age of 18 years, were drowned in each of the last 10 years.

Mrs. Currie: The information is show in the table. The latest year for which data are available is 1986.

AIDS

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the total sums allocated to Bloomsbury health authority for services related to AIDS, and the projects which have thereby been funded by the health authority; and from which sources the Tottenham Court road Brook advisory centre has received funding as a result of the AIDS allocations.

Mr. Newton: This information is not held centrally. The hon. Member may like to contact the chairman of Bloomsbury health authority.

Staff Transfers

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what discussions he has had with unions representing staff at Department of Health and Social Security offices in London concerning staff transfers.

Mr. Portillo: There have been no discussions with unions representing staff at Department of Health and Social Security offices in London concerning the permanent transfer of staff.

Staff Turnover

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list, by grade, the staff turnover figures for the Department of Health and Social Security offices at (a) Finsbury Park, (b) Highgate and (c) Hoxton for each year since 1983.

Mr. Portillo: The following tables give the staff turnover figures, in each grade, for the Department of Health and Social Security local offices at (a) Finsbury Park, (b) Highgate and (c) Hoxton during the period 1 October 1985 to 31 December 1987.

Turnover is defined as the loss and movement of staff due to resignation, retirement, dismissal, death, transfer, promotion and reversion.

The information requested is not available prior to 1 October 1985.

Social Fund

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what considerations of the role of local charities will be given in assessing the social fund allocation to each Department of Health and Social Security office.

Mr. Scott: None.

Abortions

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the number of abortions under nine weeks gestation, between nine and 12 weeks, between 13 and 16 weeks and over 16 weeks performed on women resident in each regional health authority and each district health authority area in England and Wales for the latest 12-month period for which figures are available.

Mr. Newton: I regret that the exact information requested can be provided only at disproportionate cost. However, data on gestation period for usual residents of district health authorities are currently being produced for 1986, which the hon. Member may find useful, and I will place these in the Library when they become available.

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the numbers of abortions performed on women in each regional health authority and district health authority in England and Wales, expressed (a) in age bands, numerically and as a percentage of the total number and (b) by grounds, expressed numerically and as a proportion of the total number, for the latest 12-month period for which figures are available.

Mr. Newton: I regret that the exact information requested can be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Statistics are not released for district health authority of termination, but table 24 of abortion statistics does show the age distribution for usual residents of regional and district health authorities. A copy of this publication for 1986 may be found in the Library.

Family Planning

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has as to the proportion of people, receiving contraceptive help and advice from Camden and Islington family planning clinics, who are under 25 years and as to the corresponding figures for the Tottenham Court road Brook advisory centre and the community clinics run by Bloomsbury health authority.

Mr. Newton: The available information is not precisely in the form requested. Figures are not collected centrally for under-25s, only for under-20s and those aged 20 to 34. Some family planning clinics in Camden come within Bloomsbury and some within Hampstead district health authority. The available information is given in the table:

Great Ormond Street Hospital

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the expected date of completion of the external works on the cardiac block at Great Ormond street.

Mrs. Currie: This scheme, which is mainly concerned with landscaping and does not affect the use of the new facilities, is now planned for completion in May.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the total cost to date of the restoration works undertaken on the cardiac block at Great Ormond street hospital.

Mrs. Currie: So far about £17·25 million has been paid in fees and construction costs.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the estimated final total cost of restoring the cardiac block at Great Ormond street hospital expressed in 1982 prices and current prices.

Mrs. Currie: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to him on 23 November 1987, at column 82.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the estimated cost of equipping the restored cardiac block at Great Ormond street hospital.

Mrs. Currie: Our estimate of a net cost of £650,000 has not changed since my reply to the hon. Member on 23 November 1987, at column 82.

National Health Service Review

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the health authorities that have made submissions to the Government's review of the National Health Service.

Mr. Moore: I refer the hon. Member to the reply which my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister gave to the hon. Member for Leeds, Central (Mr. Fatchett) on 7 March, at column 18.

Committee on Safety of Medicines

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many members of the Committee on Safety of Medicines are women; and if he will name them.

Mr. Newton: One woman is currently a member of the Committee on Safety of Medicines:

Dr. Elizabeth Mayne, MD, FRCP, FRCPath, Department of Haematology, Royal Victoria Hospital, Belfast.

Four women are members of sub committees of the Committee on Safety of Medicines:

Dr. Linda Beeley, MA(Oxon), FRCP, Consultant Clinical Pharmacologist, The Queen Elizabeth Hospital, Edgbaston;

Dr. Joyce Davidson, MB, BS, FRCGP, General Practitioner, Cardiff;

Dr. Elizabeth Miller, MB, BS, BSc, Principal Microbiologist, Communicable Diseases Surveillance Centre, Colindale;

Dr. Sheila Wallace, FRCP, DObst, RCOG, Consultant Paediatric Neurologist, University Hospital of Wales, Cardiff.

Tranquillisers

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will set up a sub-committee of the Committee on Safety of Medicines to make a study of benzodiazepine, to include members co-opted from voluntary and community organisations active in the field of counselling patients who have become addicted to tranquillisers.

Mr. Newton: It is for the Committee on Safety of Medicines to decide whether or not to set up a sub-committee on any issue. In relation to benzodiazepines, the committee has recently completed a review of the problem of dependence, leading to the advice to doctors in "Current Problems No. 21", which is in the Library.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what further instructions he has given to the doctors of his Department's regional medical services following the publication by the Committee on Safety of Medicines of "Current Problems No. 21", in which the dangers of overprescribing benzodiazepine are mentioned.

Mr. Newton: Doctors of the Department's regional medical service regularly attend prescribing seminars at which current issues and matters of interest are discussed. These include discussions on articles such as the one providing recommendations on benzodiazepines contained in "Current Problems No. 21". All doctors in the regional medical service have had their attention drawn to this article by the provision of a personal copy to each of them.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what savings he expects to accrue to the National Health Service when general practitioners act upon the advice given about benzodiazepine in "Current Problems No. 21"; and if he will consider using such savings to assist in the funding of voluntary organisations counselling patients who have suffered from addiction to such tranquillisers.

Mr. Newton: "Current Problems No. 21" contains recommendations about the use of benzodiazepines and implementation would depend on the responses by individual patients to the courses of treatment advised by their own general practitioners. It is not possible to quantify the savings that might accrue. A number of voluntary organisations helping tranquilliser users have received central funding as part of a widespread expansion of counselling services.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps he takes to ensure that general practitioners understand the importance of the yellow card report system as the means of notifying their concern about the suspected adverse reactions of patients to the administration of benzodiazepine.

Mr. Newton: The Committee on Safety of Medicines is very concerned to ensure that doctors are well aware of the importance of the yellow card system as for reporting suspected adverse reactions to all medicinal products, including benzodiazepines. The committee's leaflet, "Current Problems", sent two or three times a year to all doctors, invites reports of suspected adverse drug reactions and includes detailed advice on how, where and what to report. Similar advice is also included in the British National Formulary, which the Department sends free of charge to all doctors, and in the ABPI's data sheet compendium. Yellow cards are sent regularly with "Current Problems" and are also provided at the back of doctors' prescription pads, and in the BNF and data sheet compendium. They can also be obtained by ringing CSM Freephone.

Last year the CSM and the drug safety research unit jointly launched a red alert scheme to encourage doctors to report suspected serious adverse reactions to new drugs, using a yellow card with red triangles.

As a result of all these measures, the number of yellow card reports received by the CSM has increased steadily to 16,431 in 1987. The CSM is exploring further initiatives to increase doctors' awareness of adverse drug reactions and the yellow card reporting system.

Cervical Cancer

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the percentage of failure in the detection of cervical cancer by the present test system used by his Department.

Mrs. Currie: Estimates of the false negative rate for cervical smear tests vary widely. In some cases an inadequate sample of cells is captured by the person taking the smear; in others cellular changes may be missed by the laboratory in which the smear is examined. That is why health circular (88)1 issued in January 1988 includes guidance on the quality of smear-taking and on internal quality control and external quality assessment in laboratories.

No screening test or screening programme can achieve 100 per cent. accuracy. Nevertheless, studies by the World Health Organisation's International Agency for Research on Cancer show that women who have a smear test every five years between the ages of 20 and 64 are 84 per cent. less likely than unscreened women to develop invasive cervical cancer.

Yellow Card Reports

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if, pursuant to his answer of 3 March, Official Report, columns 697-8, in respect of the use of yellow card reports by general practitioners, he will give a breakdown on the nature of the yellow card reports submitted by general practitioners to the Committee on Safety of Medicines during 1987.

Mr. Newton: An article by the Committee on Safety of Medicines analysing yellow card reports received in 1986 and 1987 will appear very shortly in the CSM update series in the British Medical Journal.

NHS Performance Indicators

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the reasons why the National Health Service performance indicators for 1986-87 have not yet been placed in the Library.

Mr. Newton: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to him on 11 February 1988 at column 355. The 1986-87 Health Service indicators will be published in March, and a set will be placed in the Library.

Psychiatric Care

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he intends to publish the report by the social services inspectorate on the provision by local authorities of psychiatric care; why there has been a delay in the publication of this report; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: A report prepared by the Department's social services inspectorate following an inspection of personal social services for mentally ill people in eight local authorities is in draft form and has not yet been submitted to Ministers.

In the meantime, a report on local arrangements has been made available to each participating local authority.

Chronically Sick and Disabled Persons Act

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how he monitors the implementation by local authorities of their statutory obligations under the Chronically Sick and Disabled Persons Act 1970.

Mr. Scott: I am unable to add to my reply on 8 March 1988 to the hon. Members for Ealing, Southall (Mr. Bidwell), for Mansfield (Mr. Meale), for Dumbarton (Mr. McFall) and for Kirkcaldy (Dr. Moonie) at columns 159-60.

RPI (Error)

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the charities to which funds will be donated arising out of the retail price index computer error; what is the total amount which will be donated to each of these charities; and which charities located in the north-west of England will benefit.

Mr. Scott: Details of the arrangements for the payments to charities are still being considered and will be announced in the near future.

Press Releases

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services for what reasons all local authority welfare rights officers and other non-journalistic outlets were dropped from the mailing list of his Department's press release section in September 1987; whether this was done with any notification; whether he will reinstate the former mailing list; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: The Department's press office has not stopped sending press notices to any one group of recipients. It does, however, review its long press lists from time to time. It works on the principle that press notices are designed and intended for the press and this is where they are mainly sent. The last review took place in October and November last year. Recipients were not notified. Because few of the recipients have made inquiries about this action, I do not consider it necessary to restore the former mailing list. However, several welfare rights units have expressed concern about their removal; a small mailing list will be established to provide them with the social security benefits information in which they are interested.

Ministerial Offices

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will provide a breakdown of the £17,000 cost of the fixtures and fittings in his new private office; and if he will provide similar information for the private offices of his junior Ministers.

Mr. Moore: Expenditure incurred on furniture, office equipment and floor covering as the result of the move to Richmond house totalled £12,400 for furniture and £4,600 for floor coverings.

Furniture and fittings for the two restored historic room suites used by Ministers were provided in a style compatible with the restoration and not with individual Minister's or staff requirements. Such furniture was inherited for the use of the Department on occupancy of the building. The remaining three Ministers utilised furniture and equipment from the previous accommodation.

Meridian (Member's Correspondence)

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he intends to reply to the letters sent to him by the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton on 6 November 1987, 15 December 1987 and 3 February 1988 with regard to financial assistance to Meridian, following the reference to him of this correspondence by the Home Secretary in October 1987.

Mr. Moore: I regret that, despite extensive inquiries, we have no trace of this correspondence. If the right hon. Member will furnish me with copies of the correspondence, I will look into it immediately.

Whitley Hospital, Coventry

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to the answer of 9 March, if he will instruct the Coventry district health authority not to enter into any further financial or other commitments with Coventry Church housing association, in relation to Whitley hospital, pending the outcome of his consideration of the health authority's proposal to close the hospital; on what basis commitments have already been entered into; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: We are currently considering Coventry district health authority's proposal to close the Whitley hospital and we expect to take a decision shortly. The health authority cannot enter into any commitments relating to the Whitley hospital while a decision on its future is pending.

Waiting Lists (Eastbourne)

Mr. Gow: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what are the current waiting lists for in-patients and out-patients at the district general hospital, Eastbourne, and at Saint Mary's hospital, Eastbourne, in each specialty for (a) examinations, (b) treatment and (c) operations; what were the comparable figures on the same dates in 1984, 1985, 1986 and 1987; and what proposals he has to reduce these waiting lists.

Mr. Newton: Our available information is given in the table. We do not hold information centrally on numbers awaiting out-patient appointments. It should be noted that in certain specialties a hospital may maintain a waiting list which is common to more than one hospital within a district health authority.

Number of patients on in-patient waiting list at 31 December for years 1984 to 1986 (latest available)

	1984	1985	1986

General medicine	—	1	—
Dermatology	2	1	—
Rheumatology	6	4	2
Geriatrics	6	6	2
Total all specialties	14	12	4
Total surgical specialties	0	0	0

In the current financial year, we have made £110,000 available to Eastbourne district health authority to use spare ward capacity to treat 100 additional patients from the orthopaedic waiting list. In 1988-89, we shall make £155,000 available to the health authority to treat 150 additional gynaecology patients, mainly for hysterectomies, and an additional 250 adults and children for ear, nose and throat surgery.

Social Security Reform

Mr. Gow: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people living in the Eastbourne parliamentary constituency are currently in receipt of (a) housing benefit, (b) family income supplement and (c) supplementary benefit; and what is his estimate of the number of those in category (a) whose entitlement to benefit will be reduced under the new system which is to be introduced in April.

Mr. Portillo: The information requested is as follows:

	Number
(a) Housing benefit	11,600
(b) Family income supplement	Not available
(c) Supplementary benefit	[1]11,188

[1] Latest available figure—17 November 1987.

Notes

The figures for (a) and (c) relate to Eastbourne borough council and Eastbourne local office respectively. The boundaries are not conterminous with the parliamentary constituency.

I regret that the additional information requested is not available for individual areas.

Consultants' Contracts

Mr. Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish in the Official Report the contents of a consultant's contract with the National Health Service.

Mr. Newton: I have placed a copy of the recommended form of contract in the Library.

Bronchitis and Emphysema

Mr. Charles Wardle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he has accepted the findings of the Industrial Injuries Advisory Council's recent report on bronchitis and emphysema; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lofthouse: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what response he proposes to make regarding the recommendations of the Industrial Injuries Advisory Council's report into the cause of emphysema among mineworkers.

Mr. Scott: I have accepted the report's conclusions and arrangements are being made for its publication. The council's main finding is that there is insufficient evidence to warrant prescription, according to the criteria laid down in section 76(2) of the Social Security Act 1975, of bronchitis and emphysema in their own right. The council also calls for further research in this field, especially studies on populations of non-smoking, dust-exposed workers.

Doctors (Financial Interests)

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any plans to introduce regulations requiring doctors and consultants to declare any financial interests they may have in private hospitals and clinics in a form accessible to prospective patients; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton [holding answer 10 March 1988]: No; but the matter is one which is covered by the General Medical Council's code on professional conduct and discipline.

Patient Costs

Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give the average annual expenditure per patient in 1986-87 by Shropshire health authority.

Mr. Newton [holding answer 23 February 1988]: For 1986-87, hospital costing returns submitted by the Shropshire health authority show average costs per patient treated as follows:

Hospital	In-patients		Out-patients		A and E patients		Day patients		Day cases

[7] Cost per new case.

Invasive Carcinoma

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services which socio-economic group is most affected by invasive carcinoma in the United Kingdom.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 22 February 1988]: The latest available information on socio-economic groups affected by malignant neoplasms is given in the table which shows information for Great Britain on mortality for all malignant neoplasms by socio-economic group for the years 1979-80, 1982-83. Data for later years, and for the United Kingdom as a whole, are not available.

Standard Mortality Ratios (SMRs) for malignant, neoplasms (ICD 140-208) by socio-economic group (S.E.G.), Great Britain 1979-80, 1982-83.

TRANSPORT

British Rail (Financial Support)

10. Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to change present levels of financial support for British Rail, in the light of increasing demand for rail services.

35. Mr. Snape: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he is satisfied that present levels of financial support for British Rail are adequate in the light of increasing demand for rail services.

Mr. David Mitchell: I have repeatedly made it clear that I shall approve any worthwhile additions to British Rail's investment programme which are needed to meet the quality standards on subsidised services.

Transport Services (Financing)

14. Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions he has had with the chairmen of nationalised transport industries concerning the financing of transport services.

Mr. David Mitchell: I meet each of the chairmen from time to time to discuss various matters, including financial issues.

London Assessment Studies

15. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what public transport projects will be assessed as part of the London assessment studies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The study consultants have been in touch with BR and LRT, boroughs and other organisations about their ideas for improving public transport in the study areas. They will then develop a wide range of options for assessment. Currently planned projects are not being delayed by the studies. The studies will also consider the needs of pedestrians, and other vulnerable road users.

40. Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress is being made with the London assessment studies; what representations he has received on them in the last six months; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We have received comments about various aspects of the assessment studies from local authority associations, London Planning Advisory Committee, individual boroughs, national and local groups and members of the public.

Channel Tunnel (Railway Development)

16. Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will set up an inquiry into the potential benefits of electrifying railway lines to south Wales and the west of England in the light of the Channel tunnel development.

38. Mr. Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will investigate the potential benefits of electrifying railway lines to south Wales and the west of England, in the light of the Channel tunnel development.

Mr. David Mitchell: I refer the hon. Members to the answer I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Newport, West (Mr. Flynn).

23. Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has received any proposals from British Rail to electrify the London Midland railway line in the light of the Channel tunnel development; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: I have received no such proposal.

24. Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on his latest discussions with British Rail about Channel tunnel rail infrastructure.

Mr. David Mitchell: As my hon. Friend knows, we have asked British Rail for a report by June on its study of the possible need for additional capacity. It would be premature to hold further discussions with the board until we have received that report.

M4 (Central Barriers)

17. Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the cost of replacing the central barriers on the M4 between London and Bristol, junctions 1 to 20; and what is his estimate of the date of completion of this work.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Work on the M4 commenced in 1982 and the Department is continuing to replace or upgrade all safety fencing to modern-day standards. The work is estimated to cost some £6 million and to be completed by 1990.

Work currently in hand is at junctions 2 and 4 and between junctions 14 and 15. It should be completed by mid May.

Works planned for this year include junctions 10 to 12 and 6 km between junctions 16 and 18 as part of the major maintenance scheme.

Ferry Safety

18. Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what recent discussions he has had with ferry company managers about ferry safety.

Mr. David Mitchell: I have had, from time to time, individual meetings with directors and other managers of ferry companies.

Roll-on/Roll-off Vessels

19. Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress his Department has made in assessing the structural safety of roll-on/roll-off vessels.

Mr. David Mitchell: Work is in hand to check the stability of existing passenger roll-on/roll-off ferries, particularly the older ones. My Department is also undertaking a programme of research into ferry safety, including possible ways of reducing the risk of capsize if water reaches the car deck.

Manchester Airport

20. Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he next intends to visit Manchester airport to discuss the future of the airport.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: My right hon. Friend has no immediate plans for a visit.

27. Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he last met the staff of Manchester airport to discuss the future of the airport.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: My noble Friend the Minister with responsibility for aviation met a delegation of board members and officers of Manchester Airport plc on 8 February.

Transport Services (Safety)

21. Ms. Abbott: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will bring forward a White Paper on safety in transport services; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: Safety is an essential element of all our policies, which are developed in White Papers, consultative documents and other statements. So I do not consider that a separate White Paper is needed.

44. Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received about safety levels on transport services in the United Kingdom.

Mr. David Mitchell: It would be impractical to record centrally the many contacts and exchanges of views my Department has day by day with organisations and individuals on all aspects of transport safety.

Drink-Driving

22. Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to be able to estimate changes in drink-driving behaviour in 1987.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Monitoring is continuous and aims to assess not only immediate effects but also the longer term impact. We shall release significant findings, including final results of last year's Christmas campaign, as they become available.

41. Mr. David Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proportion of car drivers and motor cyclists who die in crashes and collisions between 10 pm and 4 am are over the legal limit of alcohol.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The proportion of car drivers and motor cycle riders who die in road accidents between 10 pm and 4 am and who have a blood alcohol level in excess of the legal limit is 58 per cent. and 60 per cent., respectively.

Motorway Repairs

25. Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many miles of motorway were repaired last year.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We estimate that 84 miles have been renewed during 1987-88.

Passenger Transport Authorities

26. Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the future of the passenger transport authorities in the former metropolitan counties.

Mr. David Mitchell: I am not at present contemplating any changes to the existing passenger transport responsibilities in the metropolitan areas.

Road Safety

28. Mrs. Ray Mitchie: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what new road safety initiatives his Department plans for the next year.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We intend to announce later this year the outcome of the consultations that we have had following publication last year of the report "Road safety —the next steps", and our plans for implementing its recommendations so as to accelerate the reduction in road accident casualties.

Major initiatives so far have been the publication in February of our proposals for improving the training and testing of motor cyclists, and the review of motorway safety which we announced at Christmas—the results of which we expect to publish in the early spring. Tackling drinking and driving remains a major priority, as does the safety of all vulnerable road users, particularly children and pedestrians of all ages.

Smoke Hoods

29. Mr. Patrick McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether the Civil Aviation Authority has yet produced its specification for passenger smoke hoods; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Civil Aviation Authority is wholly responsible for aviation safety regulation. The CAA has informed us that it has produced a further draft of its specification for passenger smoke hoods which has been circulated to interested parties for comment. The CAA expects to be able to finalise the specification in April.

43. Mr. Aspinwall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he intends to introduce regulations regarding the retail sale of airline passenger protection smoke hoods.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The sale of smoke hoods, whether for use by airline passengers or the public at large, is a commercial matter. There are no plans to introduce regulations governing their sale to airline passengers. The sale of any consumer product is now covered by the general safety requirement under the Consumer Protection Act 1987, which makes it a criminal offence to supply any consumer product that is not reasonably safe.

Passenger Safety

30. Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if, in the light of recent prosecutions arising from attacks on women in or near railway stations, he will be issuing, or revising guidelines to organisations providing public transport, concerning staffing levels, operating procedures and user's personal safety; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: Staffing levels and operating procedures are for public transport operators to determine in the light of their business objectives and statutory obligations. The policing of BR and LUL stations is a matter for the British Transport police who maintain close links with the operators.

Transport Funding

31. Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what recent discussions he has had with local authorities concerning transport funding.

Mr. David Mitchell: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has had no discussions recently with local authorities about transport funding, although he did attend an Association of County Councils' function on 17 February at which he spoke on the need for greater spending on highway maintenance.

I met representatives of the Association of Metropolitan Authorities on 2 March to discuss the proposed change of PTAs to billing bodies from 1990-91.

Deregulation

32. Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a further statement on the effect of deregulation on the quality of public road transport.

Mr. David Mitchell: Deregulation continues to have a beneficial effect on road passenger transport. Bus mileage has increased; there is competition and innovation in many areas of the country; the number of operators has gone up and services are more closely geared to passengers' needs; costs have been reduced and local authorities have made substantial savings in revenue support for subsidised services.

Transatlantic Routes (Manchester)

33. Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what recent representations he has received about the licensing of transatlantic air routes from Manchester.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: A number of representations have been received concerning improved access for United States carriers to Manchester. The licensing of those carriers is a matter for the United States Government, not Her Majesty's. The United States Government do not have the necessary traffic rights under the United States/United Kingdom air services agreement. It is necessary for them to seek to negotiate for these additional rights. Officials from the Department will be meeting a delegation from the United States Government in London later this week to try to make progress on this matter.

Irradiated Fuel (Transport)

34. Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has received a copy of the London borough nuclear policy committee report "Transportation of Irradiated Fuel", by Large and Associates; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 3 March, at column 656, to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy (Dr. Thomas).

Severn Crossing

36. Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how long the consultation period on the second Severn crossing will be; what discussions he is having with local representatives; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The consultants for the project (W. S. Atkins and Partners and G. Maunsell and Partners) are making good progress. A public exhibition has been held at nine different centres on both sides of the estuary and consultations are now under way with affected parties. These consultations will continue during the coming months. The Department and the Welsh Office are in touch with local representatives in the areas affected by the proposals.

The consultants are proceeding with the further technical investigations needed. We hope to be in a position to finalise the proposals in 18 to 24 months.

Public Transport Improvements

37. Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what improvements in public transport he expects to implement during the next financial year.

Mr. David Mitchell: I refer the hon. Member to the 1988 public expenditure White Paper (Cm. 288) which gives details of the Government's planned levels of financial support to public transport services.

London Regional Transport

39. Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he now expects to publish further objectives for London Regional Transport.

Mr. David Mitchell: I expect to announce new objectives shortly after the findings of the formal investigation into the King's Cross fire are known.

Road Maintenance

42. Mr. Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps are taken to ensure that road maintenance and repairs are undertaken with minimum inconvenience to drivers and passengers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We aim to minimise inconvenience to road users by careful programming of works, improving traffic management arrangements and by getting works completed more quickly—particularly by greater use of lane rental contracts which are achieving an acceleration of 33 per cent. on average. Further measures are being considered. We hope to make an announcement on 1988-89 programme shortly.

Local Public Transport Services (Funding)

45. Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has any plans to improve the funding mechanisms of local public transport services.

Mr. David Mitchell: We have already brought about a substantial improvement by the deregulation of bus services and the introduction of competitive tendering for subsidised services. In the metropolitan areas precept control has also contributed to reducing the cost to the ratepayer of local public transport services, and we are now considering the responses to a proposal to replace the present precepting system for the passenger transport authorities by a system of billing on metropolitan districts.

Channel Tunnel

46. Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what action he is taking to ensure that regions north of London are able to benefit fully from the opening of the Channel tunnel.

Mr. David Mitchell: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Halifax (Mrs. Mahon) on 2 March, at column 599.

A30 (Improvements)

Mr. Neale: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will report on progress on the planning, design and construction of the various improvement schemes to the A30 from Launceston to Mitchell.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We are making good progress on the six schemes in the national programme between Launceston and Mitchell. Together they will provide over 27 miles of dual carriageway at an estimated cost of some £35 million. The detailed position on each is:

Launceston to Plusha
The statutory procedures were completed in February. Construction is expected to start later this year.

Plusha to Bolventor
Revised proposals were published in October 1987. A public inquiry is to be held in April. The programmed start of contruction is in the period April 1989 to March 1991.

Shallowater Hill improvement
Added to the national programme in April 1987 with a programmed start of construction in the period April 1991 onwards. Preliminary studies and investigations are now in hand.

Bodmin to Indian Queens
Added to the national programme in April 1987 with a programmed start of construction in the period April 1991 onwards. A design agent is to be appointed shortly.

Indian Queens/Fraddon/St. Columb road bypasses
Public consultation of further options was held in January/February. Comments received are now being studied. A preferred route is expected to be announced later this year. The programmed start of construction is in the period April 1991 onwards.

Penhale to Carland Cross improvement
A public inquiry was held in February and the inspector's report is awaited. The scheme, which would bypass Summercourt and Mitchell, is programmed to start construction in the period April 1989 to March 1991.

Mr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will report on progress on the planning, design and construction of the various improvement schemes of the A30 from Mitchell to Long Rock, Penzance.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We are making good progress on the two schemes in the national programme between Mitchell (Carland Cross) and Long Rock.

The detailed position is:

Zelah bypass

Revised proposals were published in November 1987. An announcement about a public inquiry is to be made shortly. The programmed start of construction is in the period April 1989 to March 1991.

Blackwater bypass

Construction is expected to be completed this summer.

Work has also started on the final phase of the safety improvements on the A30 at Crowlas.

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will report on progress on the planning and design of the A30 improvement from Okehampton to Launceston; and what is the intended year for the start of its construction.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Survey and detailed design work on this £21·8 million scheme is now nearly completed. Proposals are expected to be published in draft orders towards the end of the year. The planned start of construction is in the period April 1991 onwards. Given satisfactory progress with the statutory and administrative procedures we hope to start work early in that period.

Driver Testing

Mr. Watts: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what action he is taking to implement the review of driver testing report.

Mr. Channon: I have approved the programme of detailed departmental action drawn up to implement the key measures recommended. The object will be to make the best use of existing resources and to give customers a better service with reduced waiting times for tests. A new service, providing Saturday morning tests, will be offered on a trial basis at selected centres throughout the country in the next few months.

Computerisation of test appointments over the next 18 months will offer customers a speedier and better booking service. In the light of the high costs and inflated queues for tests that the review has identified flowing from last-minute cancellations that cannot be reallocated, I propose to amend regulations to require 10 clear working days' notice to cancel or rebook without loss of fee.

Driving instructors play a key role in preparing people to cope with today's vehicles and road conditions. Learners should take their advice about when they are ready to take a driving test. We are continuing discussions with the associations of approved driving instructors about maintaining high standards and the publication of information to help customers seeking professional tuition. Avoiding accidents means not just a high level of driving skills, but constant awareness and consideration for other road users.

I am placing copies of the Department's "Plan for Implementation" in the Libraries of both Houses.

British Rail (Electrification)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he next expects to meet the chairman of British Rail to discuss its electrification programme and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: Electrification from London to Edinburgh is due to be completed on target in 1991. I understand that BR has no plans for further major route electrification.

Plutonium (Transport)

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if there are any proposals to use Prestwick airport for the transportation of plutonium; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I understand that British Nuclear Fuels' current preferred option is to use Prestwick airport for returning reprocessed plutonium oxide to Japan. This traffic will not take place until the mid-1990s and no firm decisions have yet been taken.

Major Road Schemes

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, what plans he has to change the public inquiry system concerning major road schemes proposed by his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We are satisfied that for the vast majority of road proposals the present inquiry system works well. The procedures continue to be kept under review and all suggestions for change are given careful consideration.

The Government's concern to safeguard the rights of those affected limits the scope for change.

Archway Road, London

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy that at the completion of the London assessment studies a public inquiry into the A1 (Archway road) section will be held.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: A decision on how to deal with the problems on the A1 Archway road will be taken after public consultation following completion of the east London assessment study. The statutory procedures for trunk road improvements include provision for public inquiries to be held.

Wrexham-Bidston Railway

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proposals he has received from British Rail on the case for improving services on the Wrexham-Bidston railway line and for investing in train sets that are capable of giving reliable transport; whether he has received any proposals for special measures to bring back the class 142 pacer units; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Channon: I have received no such proposals. These are essentially management matters for British Rail to consider.

Coastguard Stations (Devon)

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of Transport how many coastguard stations there are in Devon; how many have breeches buoy equipment; and what would be the annual cost of continuing the use of breeches buoy equipment in coastguard stations where the equipment has already been bought.

Mr. David Mitchell: There are 21 coastguard stations in Devon of which 11 hold breeches buoy equipment. The annual cost of continuing to make use of the equipment in those 11 stations would be about £11,500. However, development costs for replacement of obsolescent rocket apparatus would also have to be incurred in the near future.

Harbours

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish information on the value of European Economic Community aid and other grants awarded to each harbour authority in the United K[illegible]gdom in each of the last five years, including brief details of projects undertaken.

Mr. David Mitchell: I regret that the answer to this question could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. I shall write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has as to which harbours in the United Kingdom are (a) privately owned and (b) managed by companies which have shipping interests.

Mr. David Mitchell: Three shipping groups own and manage ports in the United Kingdom. Sealink UK has seven (Fishguard, Folkestone, Harwich (Parkeston Quay), Heysham, Holyhead, Newhaven, Stranraer); P&O three (Cairnryan, Felixstowe and Larne); and Caledonian MacBrayne (Scottish Transport Group) has 17 small ports in Scotland. Some other firms with shipping interests operate individual wharves or docks.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether it is a condition of European Economic Community aid to ports that berthing facilities may not be monopolised by a single shipping company; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: I understand that the European Commission accords low priority to applications to aid projects which serve a single user. So in practice such projects do not usually receive grants from the European regional development fund.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will undertake an inquiry to establish whether ports and harbours which have been in receipt of public funding are being managed in the public interest; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: No. Harbour authorities must run their harbours in accordance with the duties and powers conferred on them by Parliament in their local legislation.

DEFENCE

Hunter Aircraft

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the Hunter aircraft operated by the fleet requirements and air direction unit are owned by his Department; and if they have any civilian role.

Mr. Freeman: All FRADU-operated Hunter aircraft are owned by the Royal Navy. They do not have a civilian role.

RAF Stornoway

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many Phantom aircraft will be deployed at RAF Stornoway during Exercise Elder Forest 88;

(2) how many Tornado aircraft will be deployed at RAF Stornoway during Exercise Elder Forest 88;

(3) how many Canberra aircraft will be deployed at RAF Stornoway during Exercise Elder Forest 88;

(4) how many Hunter aircraft will be deployed at RAF Stornoway during Exercise Elder Forest 88;

(5) how many Falcon aircraft will be deployed at RAF Stornoway during Exercise Elder Forest 88;

(6) between which dates RAF Stornoway will be activated for Exercise Elder Forest 88;

(7) if any simulated air attacks on RAF Stornoway will take place during Exercise Elder Forest 88;

Mr. Ian Stewart: There are no plans to activate RAF Stornoway during Exercise Elder Forest, nor for any of the participating aircraft to operate from, or make simulated attacks upon, that airport.

Chile

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what regular contacts there are between representatives of Her Majesty's armed forces and those of Chile.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Our diplomatic representation in Chile includes a defence element. United Kingdom defence personnel have regular contact with representatives of the Chilean armed forces, both in Chile and in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many British armed forces personnel have visited any military facility in Chile in the last year.

Mr. Ian Stewart: In addition to visits by military personnel attached to the British embassy in Santiago, five serving officers from the United Kingdom visited Chilean military facilities in the last year. There were also three visits by Royal Navy ships.

General Purpose Machine Gun

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what instructions are given to Army personnel serving in Northern Ireland concerning the use of the safety catch on the GPMG whilst on patrol or guard duties.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Instructions given to personnel lay down that, except in the act of firing, the safety catch on the GPMG is to be applied at all times when the weapon is cocked. The safety catch cannot be applied unless the weapon is cocked, nor can the weapon be fired except when cocked.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the normal training period for the use of a GPMG; and what is the minimum age a recruit can undertake such training.

Mr. Freeman: The normal training period in the use of the GPMG is some 30 hours over a period of about three months.

Adult recruits undertake GPMG training after they have completed their common military syllabus (recruit) training which lasts eight weeks. The minimum age of entry for an adult recruit is 17 years. For junior soldiers and junior leaders, however, GPMG training is not carried out within the first 14 weeks after entry. The minimum age of entry for a junior soldier is 16 years and 6 months; and for junior leaders, 16 years in England and Wales, and 15 years 8 months in Scotland.

Aidan McAnespie

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many members of the armed forces serving in Northern Ireland are facing disciplinary charges following the death of Aidan McAnespie.

Mr. Freeman: None. It would be inappropriate to initiate any disciplinary action until the trial of Guardsman Holden is concluded.

HMS Vulcan, Dounreay

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether Euratom safety inspectors have access to the HMS Vulcan reactor at Dounreay.

Mr. Sainsbury: No.

Short Range Nuclear Weapons

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he possesses concerning the use to which the United States intends to put the nuclear materials from the warheads withdrawn under the 1983 NATO Montebello decision on unilateral removal of short range nuclear weapons.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The use of materials from United States nuclear warheads withdrawn from Europe as a result of SACEUR's 1985 proposals to implement the Montebello decision is a matter for the United States Government.

"Today" and "A Week in Politics"

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will arrange for a transcript of his interview on the Radio 4 "Today" programme broadcast on 3 March to be placed in his departmental library;

(2) if he will place in (a) the Library and (b) his Department's library a transcript of his interview on "A Week in Politics" broadcast on Channel 4 on 2 March.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 11 March. Channel 4 programmes remain the copyright property of the production company which produces them and are not available on the open market.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will seek to obtain for his Departmental library a copy of the transcript of the interview given by the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation General Secretary, Lord Carrington, to the BBC Radio Four "The World Tonight" programme concerning the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation summit on 3 March.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The library of the Ministry of Defence seeks to obtain all publications relevant to the working needs and interests of the Department where such material can be satisfactorily published on the open market. Transcripts of programmes transmitted by the BBC are deposited with the BBC written archives centre and are not normally available on the open market.

NATO (Defensive Weapons)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list all "smart" defensive weapons currently deployed by the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation in the European land, air and sea military theatres.

Mr. Ian Stewart: There is no formal NATO definition of a "smart" weapon, although the term is in general used to describe weapons with an autonomous navigation and target acquisition capability. There are a number of such weapons in the inventories of our allies, but it would be for them to provide details of the capabilities of their own weapon systems. The United Kingdom's major equipment programmes are described in successive Statements on the Defence Estimates.

Soviet Union (Weapons Systems)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list all the categories of weapons and support systems the Soviet Union has modernised since Mr. Gorbachev became Soviet leader, based on information available to his Department at 2 March.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I refer the hon. Member to the statement made by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on the NATO summit on 4 March at columns 1279-80 which emphasised that there has been no let-up in the Soviet Union's extensive military modernisation programme. For example, new cruise missiles have recently been flight-tested, while a new road-mobile ICBM has been deployed and a rail-mobile ICBM should be deployed shortly. In addition, a long-range strategic bomber has been introduced, a modified battle tank has been developed and a new mobile surface-to-air missile system is under development.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has on the Soviet weapons systems code named (a) AS-9 (Kyle), (b) AS-x-10 (Karen), (c) AS-11 (Kilter), (d) AS-12 (Kegler) and (e) AS-14 (Kedge), in terms of their intended deployment, capability and range.

Mr. Ian Stewart: All the Soviet weapon systems referred to are tactical air-to-surface missiles. They are intended for use by tactical air forces in early conventional attacks on targets such as air defence radar and missile sites, command and control centres and airfields.

The AS-9 (Kyle), AS-11 (Kilter) and AS-12 (Kegler) are anti-radiation homing missiles and can be carried by the SU-23 (Fencer), SU-17 (Fitter) and Mig 23 (Flogger) aircraft. The AS-10 (Karen)—which is now operational—and AS-14 (Kedge) are electro-optical homing missiles and are carried on the same range of airframes.

The AS-9 carries a 150 to 200 kg high explosive warhead and can also be equipped with a nuclear warhead. The AS-10 and AS-12 each carry a 100 kg high explosive warhead. We believe the AS-11 and AS-14 to be updated versions of the AS-9 and AS-10 respectively. The ranges of these missiles vary from a limited range up to about 100 km.

Chemical Weapons

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has on progress in the development of binary chemical weapons in the United States of America.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The US Department of Defence has said that final assembly of 155mm artillery shells commenced in December 1987 and that the construction of production facilities for the Bigeye air delivered bomb has also recently been authorised.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether there is any military role which is specific to chemical weapons alone; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Chemical weapons have a particular property that the mere threat of their use by an aggressor requires the defenders to wear protective equipment which imposes severe physiological degradation. That is why, although NATO affords a high priority to the protection of forces against the effects of chemical weapons, all its members are committed to the early conclusion of a global ban.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the implications of the total elimination of chemical weapons for the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation's strategy of flexible response; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: A verifiable global elimination of chemical weapons would remove a major imbalance in East/West military capabilities.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the retention of a limited chemical warfare capability by the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation forces is an integral part of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation's strategy of flexible response.

Mr. Ian Stewart: There are no chemical weapons declared to NATO. However, in the absence of a comprehensive and verifiable ban on chemical weapons, and in the light of the massive Soviet CW capability, the modernisation of the limited United States retaliatory capability will contribute to upholding NATO's deterrent strategy of flexible response.

La Belle Discotheque

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the implications for the safety of military installations in West Berlin of recent discoveries in connection with the bombing of La Belle discotheque on 5 April 1986 arising out of the trial of Christina Endrigkeit.

Mr. Ian Stewart: No charge has been brought against Frau Endrigkeit in connection with the La Belle discotheque bombing. The security of all military installations is kept under regular review in the light of all relevant circumstances.

Nuclear Warheads (Tests)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many underground tests are required to develop a new nuclear warhead;

(2) whether the frequency of the United Kingdom's underground nuclear tests provides statistically significant evidence of the safety of the entire stockpile of the United Kingdom's nuclear warheads; and if he will make a statement;

(3) whether underground nuclear tests will remain necessary for as long as the United Kingdom retains its nuclear weapons, and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: It has been the policy of successive Governments not to disclose the purpose of individual underground nuclear tests, beyond saying that they are required "to maintain the effectiveness of the United Kingdom's nuclear deterrent".

AOR Support Vessels

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many new AOR support vessels will be operational with the Royal Navy by the mid-1990s.

Mr. Sainsbury: The two auxiliary oiler replenishment vessels currently on order will be in service by the mid-1990s. The operational dates of subsequent vessels will depend on the size and timing of future orders.

Upholder Class Submarines

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what is his Department's most recent estimate of the research and development and first-of-class costs for the new Upholder class submarine;

(2) what is his Department's most recent estimate for the unit cost of the new Upholder class submarine.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave on 14 January, at column 373. Similar considerations apply to the detailed breakdown requested. However, information about the total cost of the programme was published in table 3.2 of volume 2 of the "Statement on the Defence Estimates 1987" (Cm. 101-II).

NATO Meeting

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the next annual meeting of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation at Oberammagau is to be held; and who will be representing Her Majesty's Government.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The NATO defence planning symposium normally takes place in Oberammagau in January each year. The United Kingdom is normally represented by officials from the Ministry of Defence and other Government Departments, as well as staff of the United Kingdom delegation to the North Atlantic Council and the United Kingdom military representative at NATO. No firm arrangements have yet been made for next year's conference.

Bomb Transporter (Accident)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about the accident of 4 March when a number of bombs fell from an American transporter on to the M25 motorway between junctions 15 and 16.

Mr. Ian Stewart: It is not our policy to comment on the cargoes carried by military vehicles, but I am informed that no munitions fell on to the M25 from a United States transporter on 4 March.

Ocean Surveillance Information Centre

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the number of staff employed at the joint ocean surveillance information centre; and what is their eligibility to belong to the trades unions.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 7 March, at column 62.

RIMPAC Exercises

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many British troops, ships and planes will be involved in the 1988 RIMPAC exercises.

Mr. Ian Stewart: There are no plans for British service participation in a RIMPAC exercise in 1988 should any such exercise be arranged.

Exercise Fire Focus

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consultations there have been with the United States armed forces in preparation for operation Fire Focus.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Exercise Fire Focus is a United Kingdom national exercise to practise the reinforcement of the Falkland Islands. There was therefore no need to consult the armed forces of the United States or any other foreign country in preparation for it.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many of the troops involved in Exercise Fire Focus are normally based in the Falklands.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Troops of the existing Falklands garrison are of course not part of the reinforcement, but will participate in a joint-force exercise and limited training exercises in the Falklands once the Fire Focus reinforcement is complete. It would not be in the interests of security to comment on the size of the garrison.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the total number of (a) Royal Air Force, (b) Army and (c) Royal Naval personnel involved in Exercise Fire Focus in the Falklands.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The military personnel being sent to the Falkland Islands in Exercise Fire Focus number fewer than 1,000, mostly from the Army. It would not be in the interests of security to reveal detailed numbers.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Turks and Caicos Islands

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has any plans to review the governance of the Turks and Caicos Islands; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: No. Elections took place in the Turks and Caicos Islands on 3 March. The People's Democratic Movement won a majority of the seats. We look forward to working with the new Government.

Export Promotion Services

Mr. Colin Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the reorganisation of the United Kingdom export promotion services in the Federal Republic of Germany.

Mrs. Chalker: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office and Department of Trade and Industry have reviewed the Government trade promotion services available to British exporters to the Federal Republic of Germany and have jointly agreed to arrangements for upgrading our service in the Federal Republic of Germany. A new post of Director General of Trade and Investment Promotion for the whole country will be created in Düsseldorf. An improved information technology system is being installed in Düsseldorf and in other British consultates-general in Germany which will provide British exporters with speedier service more closely targeted to their needs. All British exporters to the German market will benefit and especially those entering the export market for the first time.

A comprehensive and centralised data base is to be installed in the consulate-general in Düsseldorf. This will be linked to terminals in consulates-general in Hamburg, Frankfurt, Munich and West Berlin and to the British Marketing Office for High Technology in Stuttgart. An FRG-wide information network will thus be created. All consulates-general will have access to it and be able to communicate with each other through it. The new system will give exporters quicker answers to enquiries about market prospects and faster contact with potential agents and buyers.

The Focus Germany campaign and Lord Young's recent enterprise initiative are stimulating the interest of exporters, especially smaller and medium-sized companies in the German market. The realisation of the single market in 1992 will open it up even further. The FCO and DTI are strengthening Government services to exporters now to assist them in seizing the opportunities that will present themselves.

The enhanced system has been planned to be fully operational in October and will be installed over the next six months.

The consul-general in Düsseldorf, Peter Bryant, has taken over from 14 March, as the new Director General of Trade and Investment Promotion with responsibility to direct and co-ordinate the new organisation.

The commercial section in the embassy in Bonn will continue in being until 1 May. On that date it will close and thereafter all inquiries and visits which would have been made to the embassy should be directed to the British consulate-general in Düsseldorf. Their address is Nordsternhaus, Georg-Glock-Strasse 14, 400 Düsseldorf 30 (Telephone: 0211-43740, telex: 8584855; telefax 0211-4542319).

NATIONAL FINANCE

Royal Family (Civil List)

Mr. Stokes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish the total amount payable under the Civil List Acts to the Royal Family in the calendar years 1987 and 1988.

Mr. Lawson: The information on amounts payable to the Royal Family in the present and previous calendar year is as follows:

	1987 £	1988 £
The Queen's Civil List	4,326,100	4,500,000
HM Queen Elizabeth The Queen Mother	375,300	390,300
HRH The Duke of Edinburgh	209,300	217,700
HRH The Duke of York	50,000	86,500
HRH The Prince Edward	20,000	20,000
HRH The Princess Royal	130,400	135,600
HRH The Princess Margaret, Countess of Snowdon	127,000	132,100
HRH Princess Alice, Duchess of Gloucester	51,400	53,500
HRH The Duke of Gloucester	102,200	106,300
HRH The Duke of Kent	138,000	143,500
HRH Princess Alexandra, Mrs. Angus Ogilvy	131,500	136,800
TOTAL	5,661,200	5,922,300
Refunded by Her Majesty The Queen	371,700	386,600
	5,289,500	5,535,700

Notes:

1. These figures combine the sum directly payable from the Consolidated Fund with supplementation provided by the royal trustees via the Treasury Vote "Class XIX, Vote 11 HM Treasury: Administration".
2. The underlying increase is 4·0 per cent., though the actual increase in total is 4·6 per cent., due to the additional payment to HRH The Duke of York.
3. The sum of £20,000 has been payable from the Consolidated Fund to HRH The Prince Edward since he attained the age of 18 on 10 March 1982, and has been paid in full since 1 January 1987.
4. Her Majesty paid £371,700 into the Consolidated Fund in respect of payments made in 1987 to members of the Royal Family whose expenses are met under section 3 of the Civil List Act 1972. A similar payment of £386,600 will be made for 1988.

Income Tax

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what additional annual income net of tax and national insurance would result from (a) a 2 pence cut in the basic rate of income tax and (b) the reduction of all high rate income tax bands to 40 per cent. for (i) a person, (ii) an income taxpayer, (iii) a household and (iv) average family of four.

Mr. Norman Lamont [pursuant to his reply, 8 February 1988, c. 88]: I regret that the table given with my reply to the hon. Member for Dunfermline, East contained some incorrect figures. I refer the hon. Member to the revised table below:

Increase in income after tax and national insurance (£ per annum) compared with indexation in 1988-89

Increase derived from	Multiple of average male earnings[1]
	½	¾	1	1½	2	5
(a) 2 pence cut in basic rate
(i) single	77	141	204	331	372	372
(ii) married couple wife not earning[1]	48	112	176	303	372	372
(iii) married couple wife earning[2]	82	188	294	534	658	744
(b) reduction of all higher rates of income tax to 40 per cent.
(i) single	—	—	—	—	87	5,971
(ii) married couple wife not earning	—	—	—	—	15	5,685
(iii) married couple wife earning[2]	—	—	—	—	87	7,794

[1] Average male earnings assumed to be £244·70 per week; an increase of 6·5 per cent. on 1987-88 in line with the assumptions used by the Government Actuary for reviewing National Insurance contributions (paragraph 3.02 of the Autumn Statement 1987).
[2] Assuming that the wife's earnings are the same multiple of average earnings as her husband's.

Taxes and Rates

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much tax and rates will be paid in the present financial year (a) by a married man, with two children, earning £250,000 a year, (b) by a single man, with no dependants, earning £250,000 a year, (c) by a married man, with two children, earning £100,000 a year, (d) by a single man, with no dependants, earning £100,000 a year, (e) by a married man, with two children, earning £25,000 a year, (f) by a single man, with no dependants, earning £25,000 a year, (g) by a married man, with two children, earning £7,500 a year and (h) by a single man, with no dependants, earning £7,500 a year, in each case assuming no other income.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 8 March 1988]: The available information is given in the table.

Income tax liability in 1987-88

Annual Earnings	Single man	Married man
7,500	1,370·25	1,000·35
25,000	6,811·75	6,195·25
100,000	50,203·00	49,381·00
250,000	140,203·00	139,381·00

The calculations assume that the taxpayer has no other income and that he is not entitled to any allowances or reliefs other than the personal allowances. The number of children does not affect liability to income tax.

Corresponding estimates on indirect taxes and local authority rates are not available

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give the figure for the projected yield of a 1 per cent. rate of income tax in 1987-88 in England and Wales, based on existing outturns of income tax.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 14 March 1988]: For the United Kingdom as a whole, the revenue effect in a full year from a one penny change in the basic rate of income tax in 1987-88 is estimated at about £1·3 billion. Income tax liabilities of residents of England and Wales in 1985-86, the latest year for which data are available, were 89 per cent. of the total for the United Kingdom.

Allowances and Reliefs

Mr. Gordon Brown To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table showing the real increase in the direct tax allowances and reliefs published in table 6·5 of "The Government's Expenditure Plans 1988-89 to 1990-91,"Cm 288-1.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 3 March 1988]: The table shows the percentage change, in real terms, between 1986-87 and 1987-88 of the latest estimates of the cost of direct tax allowances and reliefs, based on the forecast movement of 4 per cent. in the general index of retail prices to 1987-88. The percentage changes should be treated only as an approximate guide. Excluded from the table are those reliefs marked with an asterisk in table 6·5 of Cm 288-1 or in the corresponding 1986-87 table because the estimates were subject to a wide margin of error, and those reliefs whose costs were £5 million or less in either year.

TRANSPORT

Electric Multiple Unit Trains (Brake Failures)

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what reports he has received, or requested, from his Inspectorate of Railways concerning failures in braking systems on electric multiple unit trains; what representations have been made to him or his inspectors on this topic; when he expects to publish any reports; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: There is no evidence that failures are occurring in the braking systems of electric multiple-unit trains. The British Railways Board is currently studying the braking performance of trains generally. This is in response to some evidence that the number of signals passed at danger is increasing and the claims by some drivers that under certain conditions the braking performance of their trains is less than fully adequate. The inspectorate's report on the September 1986 accident at Colwich junction, to be published shortly, will, I understand, include comments on current train braking systems, and the report on the August 1987 accident at Walton-on-Naze will comment specifically on the braking of electric multiple-units. No formal representations have been made to the Department on this subject.

Motorway Safety Fences

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress he has made introducing requirements for firms manufacturing, supplying and erecting safety fences on motorways to have management systems certificated by independent certification bodies accredited by the National Accreditation Council for Certification Bodies.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Publication of the specification for highway works in October 1986 announced the Department's intention to introduce these new quality assurance requirements in safety fence contracts from January 1988. The NACCB has accredited two certification bodies which have certificated a number of companies. The first contracts requiring the suppliers to have a certificated quality management system have now been let and we expect this method of achieving quality assurance for safety fencing to be applied increasingly from now on. As yet, not as many firms as we had hoped have achieved certificated quality assurance status. In view of this, where there are insufficient firms with certificated status to maintain competition and progress with the Department's safety fence programme some contracts may be placed with other firms. In those cases, we shall ensure that the qualtiy control checks carried out under existing contractural arrangements are applied rigorously and thoroughly.

The Department will continue to encourage firms to obtain certification for their quality management schemes and seek to make this a requirement in all contracts. Grants available from the Department of Trade and Industry under its enterprise initiative should be of particular benefit in enabling this sector of industry to introduce quality management systems meeting our requirements.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Land Registry

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Attorney-General how many staff are currently employed by the Land Registry; and what are their grades.

The Attorney-General: The staff employed and their grades as at 1 March 1988 are set out in the following table:

Grade	Permanent	Casual	Total
Open structure
Grade 2	1·0	—	1·0
Grade 3	1·0	—	1·0
Grade 5	18·0	—	18·0

Total	1,008	214·5	1,222·5
Grand Total	8,202·5	737·5	8,940·0

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Attorney-General what has been the ratio of staff to total registrations dealt with per year by the Land Registry in each of the last seven years for which figures are available.

The Attorney-General: The ratio of staff to registrations dealt with in each of the last seven years expressed in terms of registrations completed per post is as follows:

	Registrations
1981-82	355
1982-83	359
1983-84	352
1984-85	358
1985-86	364
1986-87	388
1987-88	394

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Attorney-General what recent representations he has received concerning delays at the Land Registry.

The Attorney-General: In the three months to 29 February 1988 the Lord Chancellor received some 35 letters concerning delays at the Land Registry.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Attorney-General when he expects the application for registration about which the hon. Member for Macclesfield recently wrote to the Lord Chancellor to be processed by the Land Registry.

The Attorney-General: The Land Registry is awaiting a reply to requisitions sent to the applicant's solicitors on 14 October 1987. The application cannot proceed further until the requisitions are complied with, but will be completed as quickly as possible thereafter.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Research and Development

103. Mr. Ernie Ross: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what estimate he has made of research and development expenditure in the United Kingdom as a percentage of gross domestic product in the light of the finding by the Society of British Aerospace Companies that the Government have over-estimated their research and development expenditure.

Mr. Atkins: I have no reason to revise the estimate of total United Kingdom expenditure on research and development (R and D) in the light of the study carried out by the Society of British Aerospace Companies. This relates to the funding by Ministry of Defence of development contract work carried out by some aerospace defence manufacturers. In common with other members of the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development the United Kingdom compiles statistics of total expenditure on R and D by aggregating expenditure on R and D by the sectors performing the R and D not by sectors funding the R and D.

Company Registrations

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what information he has as to the numbers of companies registering at Companies House; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: A total of 121,125 new companies were registered in England and Wales in 1987, and 5,926 in Scotland. At the end of January 1988 the total number of live companies, including those registered in Scotland, was 925,321

Economic League

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when the Economic League registered its accounts at Companies House for the last financial year.

Mr. Maude: The last accounts registered at Companies House were delivered on 24 September 1986 for the financial year ending 31 December 1985.

Accounts for the year ending 31 December 1986 are overdue and the Registrar of Companies is taking action to secure compliance with the filing requirements of the Companies Act 1985.

Automotive Industry

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what percentage of the United Kingdom automotive industry was Japanese-owned; and what market share this represents, for each year from 1979.

Mr. Atkins: Nissan Motor Manufacturing (UK) Ltd. is the sole wholly-owned Japanese vehicle manufacturer in the United Kingdom. Production of cars began at Sunderland in 1986 and so far makes up only a small, though increasing, proportion of total sales by Nissan here. Nissan's overall share of the United Kingdom market since 1979 — supplied solely by imports from Japan until 1985, and by a mixture of imports and United Kingdom-produced vehicles since then — has been as follows:

	per cent.
1979	5·9
1980	6·07
1981	5·94
1982	5·99
1983	5·84
1984	6·08
1985	5·76
1986	5·84
1987	5·67

Regional Aid

Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what has been the spending, and the number of cases helped in the county of Cleveland, through (a) regional selective assistance and (b) regional development grant in 1984, 1985, 1986 and 1987, broken down into manufacturing and service industries, and within that category (i) firms employing up to 200 employees and 201 or more and within that category (ii) regional development grant awards made on a capital grants basis, as opposed to grants given per job created.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 14 March 1988]: The information requested in respect of the number of projects receiving payments and the value of expenditure under regional selective assistance (RSA) and regional development grant (RDG) in the County of Cleveland in each year is as follows:

[3] No data for 1984 as the revised RDG scheme was only introduced in November that year.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will set out in the Official Report estimates of expenditure in 1987-88 in England, Scotland and Wales, respectively, on (a) regional development grants, (b) regional selective assistance and (c) regional and general industrial support in cash and real terms, together with the amounts of planned expenditure for the years 1988-89, 1989-90 and 1990-91.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 10 March 1988]: The information requested in cash and constant (1986-87) price terms is as follows:

Also incorporating expenditure in England only under the regional investment grant element of the package, and expenditure on task forces and city action teams.
[8] Including (in addition to RDG and RSA) expenditure under the Industry, Energy, Trade and Employment (excluding tourism) Vote on support for nationalised industries (except transport), general labour market services, support for the Scottish Development Agency and the Highlands and Islands Development Board, and other central and miscellaneous services.
[9] Including (in addition to RDG and RSA) expenditure under the regional investment grant element of the enterprise initiative package, and support for the Welsh Development Agency and Mid-Wales Development.

EMPLOYMENT

London Docklands (Construction Sites)

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) how many successful prosecutions have been made against companies on construction sites in London docklands for breaches of health and safety legislation; and if he will enumerate these on an annual basis since 1981, with an annual total of fines imposed;

(2) how many accidents and deaths have been recorded by the Health and Safety Executive on construction sites in London docklands since 1981 on an annual basis.

Mr. Nicholls: The information is not available in the detail requested and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Police Stations

Mr. John M. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about the design of police stations in relation to the accessibility to the public of a general reception and injury desk.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Guidance issued by the Home Office on the design of new police stations recommends that the public entrance to the station should have a suitable ramp, and that all parts of the entrance hall should be visible from the inquiry counter.

Prison Statistics

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the number of inmates in each of the prisons in England and Wales who on 1 March were in single cells and who were (a) sharing two to a cell and (b) sharing three to a cell.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The information tabulated as follows relates to 10 January this year, the latest date for which figures are available.

Police Cells (Remanded Persons)

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many unconvicted prisoners were remanded in police cells in Peterlee and Seaham on 1 March; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No unconvicted prisoners were held in police cells at either Peterlee or Seaham police stations on 1 March 1988.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the number of complaints made following official visits to either police or magistrates court cells in the London area to see people being held on remand during the last 12 months.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: This information is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the number of juvenile remand prisoners being held in police cells on 1 March; and if he will list the police stations and the age of the remand prisoners.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: On 1 March 1988, a total of eight juvenile remand prisoners were held in cells at Croydon, Wimbledon, Coalville and Cowley police stations. A record of their ages is not available.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give a breakdown of the charges facing remand prisoners being held in either police or magistrates' court cells on 7 March.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: This information is not collated centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the number of (a) men and (b) women being held on remand in police cells in England and Wales on 7 March.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: On Monday 7 March, 1,510 male and eight female prisoners, most of whom would have been on remand, were held in police cells in England and Wales.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the number of remand prisoners who had to sleep on the floor in either police or magistrates' court cells on 6 March.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Prisoners held in police and magistrates' courts cells are all provided with mattresses and most sleep on beds. Further information is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the number of pregnant women being held on remand in either police or magistrates' court cells on 7 March.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: This information is not available.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the visits, and their dates, that he, or other Ministers in his Department, have made to police or magistrates' court cells to see the conditions under which remand prisoners are being held; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary visited prisoners in the Liverpool main bridewell on 2 October 1987 and my noble Friend the Earl Ferrers visited prisoners in police cells at Bradford police station on 23 February, Ealing police station on 1 March and Newcastle bridewell on 8 March this year. I visited the prisoners in police cells at Croydon police station on 23 November last year and the Metropolitan police holding cells at Lambeth on 18 February this year. My hon. Friend the Member for Oxford West and Abingdon (Mr. Patten) plans to visit the cell area at Horseferry road magistrates' court shortly. In addition to these particular visits, Ministers in the Department undertake frequent visits to police stations during which we often take the opportunity to visit the cells.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the following places of detention were last visited for the purposes of inspection, and by whom: Bow road police station, Camberwell road magistrates' court, Horseferry road magistrates' court and South Western magistrates' court; and if he will place in the Library a copy of any resultant reports on conditions.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I am informed by the Metropolitan police that the local chief superintendent has responsibility for ensuring that conditions in places of detention at police cells and magistrates' courts are maintained at the highest possible level. So far as access to individual prisoners is concerned, lay visitors already have access to persons detained by the police in police cells; these arrangements will be extended to include detainees who would normally be held in prison service establishments.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he intends to take to monitor the number of days persons are being held in either police or magistrates' court cells while on remand; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have no plans to do so.

Remanded Persons (Complaints)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what provision is made for prisoners held on remand to complain as to the conditions under which they are kept; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Remand prisoners in prison custody may make complaints about conditions in the following ways:

- by speaking to supervising prison staff;
- by applying to see the governor, chaplain, medical officer, education officer or welfare officer;
- by applying to see the board of visitors or a visiting member of the board;
- by applying to see a visiting officer of the Secretary of State;
- by petition to the Secretary of State, to Parliament or to Her Majesty The Queen;
- by writing to a Member of Parliament;
- by writing to the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration, directly or through a Member of Parliament;
- by petition to the European Commission of Human Rights.

Remand prisoners held in police custody may raise any complaints about conditions with the supervising police officers or by writing to the chief officer of the force concerned. It has also been decided that prisoners held in police custody should have access to an independent body concerned with the supervision of their custodial conditions and treatment. Lay visitors have been asked to take on this task as we are discussing with the Metropolitan police what guidance needs to be given to assist them in carrying out these duties.

Police Cells

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the number of people held in police or magistrates' court cells in each of the last five years in England and Wales.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Annual averages are given in the table. Further details are published annually in "Prison Statistics England and Wales" at table 1.9 of the latest volume, for 1986 (Cm. 210), a copy of which is in the Library.

Wandsworth Prison

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when each member of staff at Wandsworth prison is to be allocated an individual locker; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Where space is available, policy is to provide each prison officer with an individual locker. At Wandsworth, because of space constraints, it has only been possible to provide two thirds of the staff with individual lockers. We are presently looking at ways in which extra space might be secured to provide for additional lockers.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the number of showers for the use of prison officers in each of the wings or relaxation areas in Wandsworth prison; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Staff showers are provided at Wandsworth prison in the hospital, the gymnasium, the reception area and the works department. There are no staff showers elsewhere.

Crime Statistics

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the annual number of homicides reported by the police in England and Wales in each year since 1958; and if he will express these figures per million of population in England and Wales.

Mr. John Patten: The number of offences initially recorded as homicide per million population is given in the following table. In each year since 1967, some 10 to 15 per cent. of such offences were not finally recorded as homicide. Figures for homicides recorded by the police are published annually in chapter 4 of "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales", (figures for offences currently recorded as homicide related to population are in table 4.1), copies of which are in the Library. Corresponding information for 1987 is not yet available.

[1] Murder, manslaughter and infanticide.

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about the current level of burglaries and violent attacks on members of the public.

Mr. John Patten: In the first nine months of 1987 recorded offences of burglary fell by 2·5 per cent. compared to the same period in 1986. Burglaries in dwellings fell by nearly 4 per cent.

Recorded offences of violence against the person rose by 11 per cent. Some of this increase is likely to be attributable to increased recording and the greater willingness of victims to come forward, especially to report racial attacks, rapes and domestic violence which have been receiving special police attention in the last year.

The handbook "Practical Ways to Crack Crime", published last week, provides valuable guidance for members of the public about how to prevent burglaries and reduce the risk of becoming a victim of violent crime.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the annual number of armed robberies in England and Wales in each year since 1958.

Mr. John Patten: The number of offences recorded by the police in which firearms were reported to have been used, by offence type, is published annually in table 3.1 of "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales", copies of which are in the Library. Comparable figures are not available before 1969.

ENVIRONMENT

Inner City Partnership Authorities

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which inner city partnership authorities underspent their allocations in 1986-87; and by what percentage.

Mr. Trippier: The information is provided in the table:

Authority	Estimated 1986-87 Outturn £ million	Allocation £ million	Percentage Underspend
Lambeth	11·323	13·1	13·6
Hackney	10·973	11·6	5·4
Islington	9·267	10·0	7·3
Manchester/Salford	21·987	23·8	7·6
Liverpool	22·986	23·5	2·2
Birmingham	25·943	26·5	2·1

My Department impresses on local authorities the importance of reporting projected underspends during the course of the financial year, so that resources can be reallocated to local authorities which can make effective use of them.

Housing Act 1985

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to how many local authorities are (a) imposing and (b) not imposing the availability and fair rent conditions, as contained in sections 503 and 504 of the Housing Act 1985, in (i) housing action and general improvement areas and (ii) in all other areas.

Mr. Waldegrave: The information is not collected centrally, but it is a requirement of section 503 of the Housing Act 1985 that, with certain specified exceptions, local authorities must impose the further letting conditions listed in section 504 in relation to any grant-aided property situated in a housing action area or general improvement area.

Rural Economy

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on his plans to revise the removal of agricultural occupancy conditions in the light of his policies for the diversification of the rural economy.

Mr. Waldegrave: The revised guidance on the removal of agricultural occupancy conditions in our circular on development involving agricultural land (DOE circular 16/87, Welsh Office 25/87, May 1987) took full account of Government policies for the rural economy.

Urban Development

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what percentage of the land allocated for urban development corporation development is owned by international financial companies; and what is the investment total, as a percentage of overall capital expenditure in real terms, they have provided to date in (a) the Merseyside Development Corporation, (b) the London Docklands Development Corporation and (c) the Tyne and Wear Development Corporation.

Mr. Trippier: The information requested is not available.

Circular 26/85

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he proposes to take in the light of the judgments given in the Queen's Bench Division on 9 June 1987 that the guidance given to local authorities in circular 26/85 should be clarified.

Mr. Waldegrave: We are currently considering whether it would be appropriate, in the light of the judgment in respect of R. v. Camden London Borough Council ex parte Christey, to issue further guidance to local authorities about the imposition of further letting conditions in relation to mandatory home improvement grants.

Committee Room 12 (Tapestries)

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he will take to restore the tapestries in Committee Room 12 of the House to their original condition.

Mr. Chope: Following examination by experts during the last summer recess these tapestries have been included in the forward programme of conservation work. But this work is unlikely to be done for about three years.

Rating Reform

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the conclusions of the report from the Institute for Fiscal Studies on the proposed poll tax.

Mr. Howard: I know of no such report.

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will publish in the Official Report the advice he was given by the International Commission for Radiological Protection and the National Radiological Protection Board when determining what weekly level of megabecquerels should be specified in the certificate of authorisation for the disposal of radioactive waste.

Mr. Moynihan: The International Commission for Radiological Protection and the National Radiological Protection Board periodically publish formal recommendations to Governments on the criteria to be adopted when setting discharge limits. The Government's objectives for radioactive waste management based on this advice are given at paragraphs 13 and 14 of the Government's response to the Environment Committee's report on radioactive waste (Cmnd. 9852, 1986).

Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if any study has been carried out by his Department as to the environmental implications of the release into the atmosphere of polonium 210; and at what rate polonium 210 decays when discharged.

Mr. Moynihan: Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Pollution required an environmental assessment of the radiological implications of the polonium 210 discharge. The National Radiological Protection Board undertook this for Capper Pass Limited. The report concluded that radiation exposures from discharges are insignificant. Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution has checked and confirmed this assessment. Half of the polonium decays every 138 days due to natural processes.

Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish in the Official Report the National Radiological Protection Board's evaluation of the official radiological consequences of the work undertaken by the north Humberside firm, Capper Pass, prior to the granting of the certificate of authorisation for the disposal of radioactive waste.

Mr. Moynihan: The evaluation was undertaken by the National Radiological Protection Board at the request of the company and I have asked the company if a copy can be placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will outline the system of monitoring for emissions of polonium 210 from the chimney stack at the North Humberside Smelting and Refining Company, Capper Pass, distinguishing between the differing responsibilities of the company, the National Radiological Protection Board and Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution; and if he has any plans to change the current arrangements.

Mr. Moynihan: Samples of stack discharges are collected by the company. Stack samples are routinely analysed by the company and check samples have been analysed independently for Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution. The National Radiological Protection Board analyses air samples taken from sites near the plant. I am satisfied with these arrangements.

Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will consider introducing a more frequent system of monitoring by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution of smelting and refining installations such as that at Capper Pass in north Humberside.

Mr. Moynihan: The onus is on operators to demonstrate compliance with the conditions of a discharge authorisation. I am satisfied that the check monitoring undertaken by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution is adequate.

Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will outline the findings of Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution's 1986 assessment of samples taken from the main chimney stack and the environmental monitoring stations at the North Humberside Smelting and Refining Company, Capper Pass; and what information he has as to the level of naturally occurring radiation.

Mr. Moynihan: The results indicated that the most exposed member of the public would receive less than 1 per cent. of the dose received from natural radiation.

Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will instruct Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution to conduct an immediate investigation into emissions of polonium 210 from the chimney stack of the North Humberside Smelting and Refining Company, Capper Pass.

Mr. Moynihan: As part of the investigation I have asked Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution to review the discharge authorisation issued to Capper Pass Limited before the end of this year. A part of that review will be a study of current and planned emissions, together with an assessment of any health effects which could result.

Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to how many tests for polonium 210 have been carried out at the North Humberside Smelting and Refining Company, Capper Pass; by whom the tests were conducted; and if he will publish the results.

Mr. Moynihan: Tests are made weekly. Subject to the agreement of the company, results will be published in the report to be prepared by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution.

Housing (Bolton)

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many acres are designated for housing in the Bolton council area; and what is his estimate of how many new homes could be constructed on this land.

Mr. Waldegrave: This is one of the disputed issues currently before the Secretary of State in connection with the application to remove a covenant preventing development at Birtenshaw farm, Bolton. I therefore cannot prejudge the decision to be made on that application by expressing an opinion on this issue.

The borough council is required by the Greater Manchester county structure plan to provide sufficient land for 11,800 dwellings in the period from mid-1981 to mid-1991. Government policy requires that they should at all times ensure that a five years supply of land is available.

Historic Covenants

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how many decisions he has made about historic covenants in respect of planning appeals during the last 12 months;

(2) if he will make a statement about his current policy on historic covenants, with particular reference to their relevance in planning appeals.

Mr. Waldegrave: I assume that my hon. Friend's questions relate to agreements which were made under section 34 of the Town and Country Planning Act 1932 and restrict the planning, development or use of land. Applications may be made to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State under paragraph 88(3) of schedule 24 to the Town and Country Planning Act 1971 for the discharge or modification of restrictions imposed by an agreement under section 34 of the 1932 Act. Such an application may sometimes be required before development which has been granted planning permission on appeal or otherwise can be started. Applications are considered on their individual merits. Only one application under the paragraph has been determined during the last 12 months.

Planning Appeals

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment on how many occasions during the latest 12 months for which figures are available he overruled his inspector's advice on planning appeals; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: In 1987 the Secretary of State made 26 decisions on planning appeals contrary to the inspectors' recommendation, following a public inquiry.

Green Belt and Housing Restraint Areas

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent representations he has received about establishing protected green belt areas and designating housing restraint areas; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave [holding answer 14 March 1988]: We receive frequent representations on various aspects of green belt and housing policies. Green belt policies already provide adequate and necessary restraint on inappropriate development in such areas.

Building Regulations (Disabled Persons)

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to alter the building regulations as they affect disabled people in order to broaden their scope and assist those disabled people who are not confined to a wheelchair.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 14 March 1988]: The building regulations were amended last December so as to require reasonable provision to be made to enable disabled people to gain access to offices, shops, and the principal entry storey of factories, schools and other public buildings. These requirements benefit people with a physical impairment which limits their ability to walk as well as people who need to use a wheelchair for mobility. We now intend to develop proposals for widening the scope of these requirements, and I am asking the Building Regulations Advisory Committee to consider how we might best proceed.

Palace of Westminster (Carpets)

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the composition of the carpeting in the Norman Shaw, North and South buildings, St. Stephen's House and the Old Palace Yard, respectively; whether these carpets are regularly treated with anti-static fluid; and what is the most recent date of treatment in each of these buildings and in the Palace of Westminster.

Mr. Chope: The carpet in all the buildings listed is predominantly 80% wool, 20% nylon Wilton, with some specialised areas in 100% polyamide heavy duty low loop pile carpet with static control, or polyamide/polypropylene blended fibre bonded carpet.

The carpets are spray treated with anti-static fluid only on request and no record is kept of when the treatment is applied.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any measure of the levels of static electricity in carpets in the Palace of Westminster; what percentage of carpets in the Palace have been treated with anti-static fluid; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: No measurements are taken of the levels of static electricity. Nor is the percentage of carpets treated known, as this is carried out only when requested and its effects are relatively short-lived.

WALES

Rating Reform

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received concerning the replacement of rates by the community charge in respect of self-catering accommodation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: After considering representations about the position of self catering accommodation under the new local government finance system we have decided that holiday-let self catering accommodation, which includes services and facilities similar to those provided in a hotel, should remain in rating and be subject to the non-domestic rate. Further consideration is being given to the precise boundary between the domestic and non-domestic sectors.

Withybush Hospital

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received from the Pembrokeshire health authority in respect of defective roofs at the Withybush hospital, Haverfordwest; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: Discussions have taken place between the Department and Pembrokeshire health authority, and the Department has agreed to make a contribution of £500,000 towards the total estimated cost of £750,000 needed to remedy roofing defects at Withybush hospital. This offer is subject to the availability of funds.

Welsh Water Authority

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he has received proposals from the Welsh water authority on the implementation of the EEC drinking water directive including a time scale for full implementation, along with the estimated extra cost.

Mr. Grist: As a consequence of the change in guidance issued by the Government in respect of directive 80/778/EEC, officials are now seeking the relevant information from Welsh water authority.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if the Welsh water authority will be eligible for grants from the European regional development fund in the run-up to and after plc status.

Mr. Grist: Water authorities will be eligible to apply for grant both before and after privatisation. It is, however, for the European Commission to consider individual applications on their merits.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what aid the Welsh water authority has received from the European regional development fund in each year since 1980; and what projects it currently has under consideration for grant application to the European regional development fund up to 1988.

Mr. Grist: Gross European regional development fund commitments to the Welsh water authority since 1980 are as follows:

1980	2,268,059
1981	1,596,468
1982	3,117,044
1983	2,776,064
1984	2,362,322
1985	570,649
1986	2,366,863
1987	7,638,029
1988	4,194,500

Five further applications for European regional development fund aid have been submitted to the European Commission and are awaiting decisions; the Department is also currently considering nine applications. A number of projects are also likely to be brought forward for consideration under the terms of integrated operations programmes which are either under negotiation with the Commission, or in preparation with the local and public authorities concerned.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what bonus on salary was paid to the chairman of the Welsh water authority, board members and senior officers in 1987-88; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: No decision on the payment of bonuses for 1987-88 has yet been made. In 1987 both the chairman and chief executive of the Welsh water authority received a bonus based on the authority's performance during the 1986-87 financial year, of 5 per cent. of their actual salaries.

Fair Rents

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he has issued any recent guidelines to rent officers for assessing fair rents.

Mr. Grist: No. The requirements are laid down in the Rent Act 1977.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what information he has on the level of fair rents being set by the rent officer in Mid Glamorgan.

Mr. Grist: Levels of rent on individual dwellings are not held centrally, but the mean registered rents for the private sector and housing associations are published in "Welsh Housing Statistics." The latest figures for Mid Glamorgan based on cases dealt with by rent officers are as follows:

	Mean registered rent (£ per year)	Number of cases
1986
Private Sector[1]	685	895
Housing Associations[2]	1,098	1,122

[1] Figures relate to unfurnished premises re-registered, excluding housing associations, where re-registration has taken place within 1·75 to 2·75 years of previous registration.

[2] Figures relate to housing association, unfurnished tenancies where re-registration has taken place within 1·75 to 2·75 years of the previous registration.

Ward Closures (Mid Glamorgan)

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he has received any application from Mid Glamorgan district health authority for the permanent closure of high dependency wards at St. Tydfil's hospital; if he has received any representations about the closure of high dependency wards in Mid Glamorgan; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: I have received no application from Mid Glamorgan district health authority for permanent closure of the 5-bed high dependency unit at St. Tydfil's hospital. I have received three representations about the unit's temporary closure. I understand that Mid Glamorgan health authority is committed to the unit's longer-term future.

SCOTLAND

Private Nursing Homes

Mr. McTaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to monitor the growth of private nursing homes for the elderly and to inspect these homes at regular intervals.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Information is collected annually by the information and statistics division of the Common Services Agency for the Scottish Health Service on the number of private nursing home places in Scotland. The Nursing Homes Registration (Scotland) Act 1938 requires health boards to undertake regular inspections of private nursing homes.

Unemployed Disabled People

Mr. McTaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what facilities are available for retraining for the disabled unemployed in Scotland.

Mr. Lang: The full range of Manpower Services Commission training programmes is available to the disabled in Scotland. In addition, there are four employment rehabilitation centres located at Bellshill, Dundee, Edinburgh and Glasgow geared to helping the disabled and disadvantaged into employment. The range of training programmes and special help for the disabled is outlined in the Government's publication "Action for Jobs".

National Health Service Hospitals (Medical Equipment and Facilities)

Mr. McTaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many major pieces of medical equipment and facilities were funded by public donation to Health Service hospitals for each of the last five years; and what is the total value of these donations.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This information is not held centrally.

Non-Domestic Rate

Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the non-domestic rate for each regional, district and islands council in Scotland for the financial year 1988-89.

Mr. Lang: The figures, which have been provided to my Department by the local authorities, are set out in the table.

Surgical Operations (Fife)

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list by specialty the numbers of people presently awaiting operations within Fife health board's area.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Information is not collected in precisely the form requested. The number of persons waiting for in-patient hospital treatment (including operations) in each specialty is published in table 6.5 of "Scottish Health Service Statistics 1986/87", copies of which are held in the Library.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many operations were performed in National Health Service hospitals in Fife in the last five years for which information is available.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The numbers of inpatient cases operated on in National Health Service hospitals in Fife for the years 1981-1985 are as follows:

Year	Number
1981	13,131
1982	10,552
1983	13,583

Nurses (Fife)

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many nurses have resigned or retired from the service of Fife health board in the last five years for which information is available.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information requested is not available except at disproportionate cost.

Hospital Consultants (Fife)

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list by specialty the number of consultants employed by Fife health board in the last five years for which information is available; and the number of vacancies currently in such posts.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The number of consultants employed by Fife health board for 1983-87 is shown in the table. Information on consultant vacancies is not available centrally.

Scottish Islands (Agricultural Development)

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what progress has been made in finalising the details of the agricultural development programme for the Scottish islands; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Government's proposals for an agricultural development programme for the Scottish islands were formally approved by the European Commission on 8 March. The regulations to bring the programme into effect from 5 April have been laid today.

Recidivism

56. Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many persons in Scotland who were granted parole in 1985 and 1986 whose original offence involved violence, sexual assault or robbery were sentenced again (a) during the period of their parole licence or (b) within 12 months of the expiration of that licence.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [pursuant to his reply, 8 March 1988, c. 146]: Information on the numbers of persons convicted within 12 months of their parole licence expiring are not collected centrally; the other information requested could be compiled only at disproportionate cost.

However, figures for the number of persons released on parole or life licence reported for breaches of licence conditions and issued with recall orders are given in the annual reports of the Parole Board for Scotland (copies of which are available in the Library). Persons reported for breach of parole or life licence conditions and persons issued with a recall order were not necessarily released on parole or life licence in the same year.

PRIME MINISTER

War Widows

Q72. Mr. Bendall: To ask the Prime Minister whether Her Majesty's Government are now in a position to remove the differences which currently exist between the pension entitlements of pre-1973 and post-1973 war widows.

Q99. Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Prime Minister when Her Majesty's Government expect to remove the differences which currently exist between the pension entitlements of pre-1973 and post-1973 war widows.

Q139. Mr. Michael Morris: To ask the Prime Minister when Her Majesty's Government expect to remove the differences which currently exist between the pension entitlements of pre-1973 and post-1973 war widows.

Q152. Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Prime Minister whether Her Majesty's Government will undertake a review of provision for pre-1973 war widows.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Members to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Wallsend (Mr. Garrett) on 7 March 1988, at column 19, and to my hon. Friend the Member for Macclesfield (Mr. Winterton) on 10 March, at column 518.

Q130. Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Prime Minister if she has any estimate of the number of pre-1973 war widows.

The Prime Minister: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Health and Social Security to my hon. Friend the Member for Macclesfield (Mr. Winterton) on 1 March 1988, at column 550.

Q131. Mr. Ken Hargreaves: To ask the Prime Minister what representations Her Majesty's Government have received on the differences which currently exist between the pension entitlements of pre-1973 war widows.

Q132. Mr. Walden: To ask the Prime Minister what representations Her Majesty's Government have received on the differences which currently exist between the pension entitlements of pre-1973 and post-1973 war widows.

Q135. Mr. Neil Hamilton: To ask the Prime Minister what representations Her Majesty's Government have received on the differences which currently exist between the pension entitlements of pre-1973 and post-1973 war widows.

Q138. Mr. Cummings: To ask the Prime Minister what representations Her Majesty's Government have received on the differences which currently exist between the pension entitlements of pre-1973 and post-1973 war widows.

The Prime Minister: Numerous representations have been received in recent years about the comparative positions of pre-1973 and post-1973 war widows.

Q157. Mr. Churchill: To ask the Prime Minister what recent representations she has received concerning the situation of pre-1973 war widows.

The Prime Minister: I have received a number of letters in the past year.

Q158. Mr. Jessel: To ask the Prime Minister if she has any plans for a meeting with representatives of the British War Widows and Associates.

Q160. Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Prime Minister when she last had a meeting with representatives of the British War Widows and Associates.

The Prime Minister: I have not held such a meeting and I have no plans to do so.

Weymouth and Portland

Q113. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Prime Minister whether she has any plans to visit Weymouth and Portland.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Engagements

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 15 March.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 15 March.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 15 March.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 15 March.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 15 March.

Mr. Stern: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 15 March.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 15 March.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House I shall be having further meetings later today.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Waste Disposal

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will commission a report on the present disposal method for domestic refuse in East Antrim, future land fill operations and alternatives to present procedures, including the possible use of waste-derived fuels.

Mr. Needham: No. I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave him on 17 November 1987 at columns 531-32.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what financial assistance is available to district councils in East Antrim for carrying out a research and feasibility study into alternative methods of waste disposal in conjunction with a local university department.

Mr. Needham: None. I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave him on 17 November 1987, at columns 531-32.

Heavy Industry

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland which constituency outside Belfast has the highest concentration of heavy industry in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Viggers: Results from the 1984 census of employment show that, outside Belfast, the parliamentary constituency of Antrim, East had the highest total number of employees in the following industries:

Energy and water supply industries.
Extraction of minerals and ores (other than fuels); manufacture of metals, mineral products and chemicals.
Metal goods, engineering and vehicle industries
Construction industries.

Larne and Carrickfergus

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish details of the number of ships which entered (a) Larne and (b) Carrickfergus ports during 1987.

Mr. Viggers: During 1987 there were 5,107 ship visits to Larne and some 250 to Carrickfergus.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) how many passengers travelled through Larne port in 1987;

(2) how many (a) commercial vehicles and (b) cars and caravans passed through Larne harbour in 1987;

(3) what is the estimated number of vehicles entering and leaving Larne harbour annually;

(4) how many persons are estimated to have been at Larne harbour meeting or leaving passengers during 1987.

Mr. Viggers: The information requested is as follows:

Shipping traffic through Larne harbour in 1987

	Numbers
	Inwards	Outwards	Total
Passengers	737,665	722,072	1,459,737
Vehicles	326,944	287,562	614,506
(a) Commercial vehicles	160,942	147,804	308,746
(b) Cars and caravans	166,002	139,758	305,760

1. The table gives the numbers of vehicles carried on ships. No figures are available for the numbers of vehicles which enter and leave the Larne harbour area.

2. There are no estimates available of the numbers of persons meeting or leaving passengers at Larne harbour.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what tonnage of cargo passed through (a) Larne harbour and (b) Carrickfergus harbour in 1987; and what tonnage of cargo was handled at Ballylumford, Magheramorne and Kilroot in 1987.

Mr. Viggers: The information requested is as follows:

Total tonnage of goods in 1987

	Tonnes
Larne	3,743,268
Carrickfergus	309,970
Ballylumford	785,840
Magheramorne	298,123

Figures for Kilroot are not available for publication. The figures exclude the tare weights of containers.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people are (a) employed and (b) unemployed in east Antrim; and what percentage of the total unemployed in Northern Ireland (b) represents.

Mr. Viggers: On the basis of the most recent information available, there were in 1984 an estimated 22,050 employees in employment in the parliamentary constituency of Antrim, East.

At 11 February 1988 the number of unemployed claimants in the Antrim, East parliamentary constituency was 6,056. This represented 5 per cent. of the total number of unemployed in Northern Ireland at that date.

Accidents at Work

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many accidents at work have been reported in each year since 1979 in east Antrim.

Mr. Viggers: The information sought is not available.

European Social Fund

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish, by recipient organisation or body, allocations from the European social fund made to projects in Northern Ireland during 1987.

Mr. Viggers: In Northern Ireland the beneficiaries of European social fund aid during the calendar year 1987 were as follows:

Organisation	Allocation £
Department of Economic Development	49,883,189
Department of Health and Social Services	1,573,300
Department of Education	1,013,245

LEDU	143,850
Bryson House	127,425
Total	58,957,215

Companies

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the total number of non-British owned companies operating in Northern Ireland and the total number of (a) British citizens, (b) non-British citizens other than Irish Republic and (c) citizens of the Irish Republic working for them.

Mr. Viggers [holding answer 14 March 1988]: There is no requirement on shareholders or EC nationals who are employees of companies operating in the United Kingdom to disclose their nationality and so the information requested is not available.

Farmland

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what has been the average price paid per acre in Northern Ireland for hill farmland and for hill grazing land in the last year for which figures are available; and what were the sums paid five and 10 years ago;

(2) what has been the average price paid per acre in Northern Ireland for arable farmland without buildings in the last year for which figures are available; and what were the sums paid five and 10 years ago.

Mr. Viggers [holding answer 14 March 1988]: Statistical information on sales of agricultural land in Northern Ireland is not available in the detail requested. The average price paid for all farmland sold in Northern Ireland in the year ending June 1987 was £1,310 per acre. The average prices paid in 1981 and 1976 were £1,172 and £563 per acre, respectively.

Training Schemes

Mr. Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the training schemes currently available in the Province and the total number of those engaged in them in the age groups 18 to 25 years, 25 to 40 years and 40 to 65 years.

Mr. Viggers [holding answer 8 March 1988]: The available information is as follows:

Scheme	18 to 24 years	25 to 39 years	40 to 65 years
Training Centres	432	250	124
Attachment Training	476	135	37

New Enterprise Programme	11	—	1
Management Extension Programme	—	4	5
Training Employers Premises Scheme	1,993	1,788	[1]—
Manpower Training Scheme (pilot)	—	—	[2]—

[1] The figures given represent the number of employees for whom claims have been made in the current financial year to January 1988. It is not possible to state how many are currently on the scheme. Information is available only in two categories, those aged under 25 years and 25 years and over. A further breakdown of the latter category could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

[2] This is a discretionary scheme negotiated with individual companies. There are currently 14 companies benefiting from the scheme. Information in the form requested regarding employee participation is not presently available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Aidan McAnespie

Mr. McCusker: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if the police officer from the Irish Republic investigating the death of Aidan McAnespie has asked the pathologist or the Royal Ulster Constabulary to be allowed to examine Mr. McAnespie's clothing or the photographs of the body.

Mr. Tom King [holding answer 10 March 1988]: No.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Maritime Dumping

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action is taken to ensure that the control of maritime dumping from vessels is strictly enforced; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: Maritime dumping from vessels is controlled by the licensing provisions of part II of the Food and Environment Protection Act 1985 administered by my Department. Licences for disposal of industrial waste, sewage sludge and dredged spoil are not issued unless careful scientific examination shows the operation in question to be acceptable in terms of its impact on the marine environment, the living resources that it supports and human health, and unless it conforms to the relevant international conventions. The practical availability of alternative methods of dealing with the wastes is also taken into account.

Departmental scientific staff and officers of my Sea Fisheries Inspectorate carry out inspections to enforce the provisions of the 1985 Act. Checks, often unannounced, are made of licensed disposal operations from the point of production to deposit in the sea. Investigations are mounted into allegations of unauthorised disposals. The Ministry's surveillance aircraft are also used for enforcement purposes.

Responsibility for the deposit of sewage and rubbish originating on a vessel rests with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport.

Fishing Grounds (Contamination)

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what environmental impact analysis has been made by his Department of a possible accident in the English channel involving the crash of an aircraft carrying plutonium to or from Sellafield; and what assessment has been made of any potential contamination of fishing grounds.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 14 March 1988]: I understand that evidence submitted by British Nuclear Fuels to the European demonstration reprocessing plant (EDRP) inquiry at Dounreay showed that in the event of an air crash in the sea there would be no release of radioactivity, and therefore the question of contamination of fishing grounds would not arise.

Radioactivity (Skipton)

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will place in the Library the results of the surveys of deposition of radioactivity in the Skipton area of Yorkshire following the Chernobyl fallout.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding answer 14 March 1988]: I am placing in the Library of the House copies of the report of the surveys which were carried out by the Institute of Terrestrial Ecology (ITE). This report was produced by ITE after full evaluation of the project had been completed; the detailed deposition information was available to my officials at the time the individual surveys were undertaken. The results of our own monitoring in north Yorkshire has already been placed in the Library. The ITE is engaged on my behalf in a further study of radio-caesium deposition in north Yorkshire; when it is completed, I will place that report in the Library.

Irradiated Food

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what representations he has received concerning the effects on the nutritional value of food of the use of irradiation; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what action he intends to take to ensure that the nutritutional value of food is not reduced because of the use of irradiation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding answer 14 March 1988]: Both international expert committees and the United Kingdom Advisory Committee on Irradiated and Novel Foods have advised that the irradiation of food up to an overall dose of 10 kilo gray presents no toxological hazard and introduces no special nutritional or microbiological problems. This view was reaffirmed by ACINF in its further advice to Ministers given after considering the technical representations made during consultation. As part of its ACINF has recommended that the pattern and extent of use of food irradiation should be monitored, and new nutritional data on irradiated foods kept under review.

The need to monitor the effects of irradiated food is one of the factors that will be taken into account as part of the further work, referred to in the reply given by the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Health and Social Security, my hon. Friend the Member for Derbyshire, South (Mrs. Currie), to the hon. Member for Caerphilly (Mr. Davies) on 4 March at column 762, now being carried out to examine the scope and format of controls necessary to enable the phased introduction of food irradiation in this country.

DEFENCE

War Widows

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what benefits are paid by his Department to widows of service men killed in world war 2.

Mr. Freeman: All widows who lost their husbands in action in world war 2 receive a war widow's pension from the Department of Health and Social Security. Additional pensions are paid by the Ministry of Defence to the widows of warrant officers class I and equivalents and to the widows of commissioned officers, where certain qualifications were met, including the completion by the husband of the appropriate minimum period of qualifying service.

Carrasco International Airport (Emergency Landing)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about the emergency landing of a Hercules C-130 at Carrasco international airport and the subsequent discussions and decision about where it would be allowed to fly.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the circumstances in which a Hercules aircraft carrying materials for Exercise Fire Focus in the Falklands was forced to land in Montevideo, Uruguay, on 9 March; when he expects the aircraft to resume its journey; and if he will make a statement on his discussions with the Government of Uruguay.

Mr. Stewart: On 8 March a Hercules C-130 was on a routine flight from Ascension Island to the Falklands. It was only 85 nautical miles north of Mount Pleasant airport (MPA) when the latest report of rapidly changing weather conditions at MPA indicated a very powerful cross-wind, well beyond the aircraft's limit for landing. At this stage the aircraft had insufficient fuel to return to Ascension Island or to rendezvous with a tanker aircraft from Ascension, whilst tankers at MPA were unable to take off because of the wind. An emergency diversion to the South American mainland was therefore essential and landing clearance was given by Carrasco (Montevideo's international airport) where the aircraft landed early on 9 March (British time). It landed on three engines because of a propellor malfunction, which was rectified by the crew in situ. Clearance for the aircraft to depart was sought and given by the Uruguayan authorities on 9 March. The aircraft left Carrasco the following day, after the crew had rested and the aircraft had been refuelled. At Uruguayan request the aircraft returned to Ascension Island.

We are most grateful to the Uruguayan authorities for their humanitarian assistance in this matter.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Education Reform

15. Dr. Twinn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received on financial delegation to schools.

Mr. Dunn: We have received a range of representations on our proposals for financial delegation to schools.

17. Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science upon what dates (a) the consultative documents on the Education Reform Bill were despatched to Devon county council and (b) replies were required; and what is his practice regarding the minimum time for a local authority to distribute, consider, discuss and provide reasoned comment on such papers during the months of school holidays and council recesses.

Mrs. Rumbold: Devon county council was sent copies of the consultation papers at the same time as all other local education authorities which had an interest. My right hon. Friend made it clear that comments received right up to the introduction of legislation on 20 November 1987 would be carefully considered. I will arrange for a table showing the timing of this distribution and the dates by which replies were requested to be published in the Official Report.

21. Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received about his proposals to encourage parental involvement in education; and if he will make a statement.

45. Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what research his Department has carried out into the willingness of parent-governors to accept their increased responsibilities under the Education Reform Bill.

94. Mr. Andrew MacKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans he has for making parents aware of the role they will have in the running of schools under the Education Reform Bill.

95. Mr. Haselhurst: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what initiatives he intends to take to encourage further parental involvement within education, following the extended role given to them in the Education Reform Bill.

Mr. Dunn: A number of responses to the consultation documents issued last year included comments upon parents' increased involvement in and influence upon their children's education. We intend to give greater publicity to the changing role of parents and of school governors, so that they will be able to make full use of the new opportunities offered to them. A free booklet was issued by the Department last December to explain to parents, governors and others the changes proposed in the Education Reform Bill. Last week, the Department published two further leaflets. The first encourages parents and others to become school governors. The second leaflet outlines the changes in school governors' responsibilities already introduced as a result of the Education (No. 2) Act 1986, and now proposed in the Education Reform Bill.

23. Mr. Moss: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received on the opting-out of schools from county education authorities.

43. Mr. Roger King: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many representations he has now received on his proposals for schools to opt out of local education authority control.

Mr. Dunn: My right hon. Friend has received approximately 950 responses to his consultation paper on grant-maintained schools, of which 27 came from local education authorities in county areas.

29. Mr. Hanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what further representations he has received on the Education Reform Bill; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: Since the beginning of the year my Department has received about 2,750 representations concerning the Education Reform Bill.

44. Mr. Marland: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what recent representations he has received concerning assessment testing of children aged seven, 11 and 14 years.

Mrs. Rumbold: More than 100 representations have been received since the publication of the report of the task group on assessment and testing on 12 January. As with the large number of responses to the Government's consultation document on the national curriculum last year, many of the representations have expressed a variety of views about the place of assessment and testing.

87. Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many representations he has received from Scottish universities concerning the Education Reform Bill.

90. Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received from the Association of University Teachers in Scotland and university principals and governing bodies concerning the Education Reform Bill; and what was his response.

Mr. Jackson: We have received many representations from universities about the provisions of the Education Reform Bill, including some from Scotland. My right hon. and noble Friend the Lord Chancellor and my noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State met representatives of the AUT (Scotland) on 1 March to discuss the Bill's academic tenure provisions. The Government have taken appropriate account of all representations in carrying the Bill forward.

88. Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received seeking further details on the proposed foundation subjects in secondary schools in the Education Reform Bill.

Mrs. Rumbold: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply which I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Chipping Barnet (Mr. Chapman) on 19 January at columns 616-7.

Teachers (Shortage)

19. Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has any plans to discuss with the Universities Council for the Education of Teachers problems caused by teacher shortages; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: My officials have regular meetings with the Universities Council for the Education of Teachers at which they discuss teacher shortages and recruitment to initial teacher training. The most recent such meeting took place last Thursday. The latest figures for overall applications for initial teacher training this year are up almost 3 per cent. over the same period in 1987.

36. Mr. Wall: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has any plans to meet the Universities Council for the Education of Teachers to discuss teacher shortages; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave earlier to the hon. Member for Fife, Central (Mr. McLeish).

School of Physiotherapy, Coventry

20. Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations his Department has received about the educational effects of the proposed closure of the School of Physiotherapy, Coventry, and its relations with Coventry polytechnic; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: None. The working group which envisaged the discontinuation of physiotherapy training at Coventry polytechnic was established by the West Midlands regional health authority. I understand that the authority has yet to consider the working group's report.

Scottish Universities (Vice-Chancellors)

22. Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he last met the vice-chancellors of the Scottish universities.

56. Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he last met the vice-chancellors of the Scottish universities; and what matters were discussed.

60. Mr Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he last met the vice-chancellors of the Scottish universities; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Robert Jackson: My right hon. Friend meets the Committee of Vice-Chancellors and Principals from time to time and addressed its conference on 30 October. He has not met the Scottish vice-chancellors as a group, though my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for Scotland did so on 4 March. I visited Edinburgh, Heriot-Watt and Stirling universities last October and will be visiting Aberdeen, Glasgow and Strathclyde shortly. A wide range of higher education matters is discussed during these meetings and visits.

City Technology Colleges

24. Mr. Soames: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many places he expects to be available at city technology colleges; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: It is envisaged that each city technology college will provide between 750 and 1,200 places depending on the local circumstances. It is not possible to give a precise figure for the overall number of places which will be available but the target is to establish 20 such colleges.

26. Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the progress to date in the setting up of city technology colleges.

Mrs. Rumbold: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Leeds, Central (Mr. Fatchett) on 1 February at column 442. Since then my right hon. Friend has announced plans for a C T C in Middlesbrough.

50. Mr. Wood: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many local education authorities have now shown an interest in the establishment of city technology colleges.

Mrs. Rumbold: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Rugby and Kenilworth (Mr. Pawsey) on 19 January at column 619.

72. Mr. Brandon-Bravo: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what further plans he has for introducing additional city technology colleges in parts of the United Kingdom not yet earmarked for such a college.

Mrs. Rumbold: The list of possible locations for city technology colleges in the booklet, "A New Choice of School" was not definitive and my right hon. Friend will consider proposals to establish CTCs in other locations. The Government's first objective is to establish CTCs in England. It is for my right hon. Friends to decide if and when the programme should be extended elsewhere to other parts of the United Kingdom.

Church Schools

25. Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received concerning the future management of Church schools.

Mr. Dunn: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Suffolk, South (Mr. Yeo).

Further and Higher Education

27. Mr. Kirkhope: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what further steps he intends to take to encourage further business sponsorship in further and higher education.

Mr. Jackson: The Government welcome the growing involvement of industry in all levels of education, and continue to support initiatives to maintain and enhance the various education-industry partnerships which are vital for the country's economic well-being. Notable examples of specific initiatives jointly supported by my Department and industry include the engineering and technology programme and the manufacturing systems engineering programme, which are designed to provide an additional 6,500 graduate and postgraduate places in engineering and technology disciplines by the end of the decade; and an education support grant initiative to provide modern computer-aided engineering equipment for senior technician courses in colleges of FE. The ETP was launched in 1985 and will continue to perform a vital function for the foreseeable future. The MSE and ESG initiatives will be launched in the 1988-89 academic year. These initiatives are based on partnerships between education and industrialists. Employers participate by providing equipment on loan or as gifts, and giving access to leading edge technology which educational institutions do not always possess; sponsoring students on relevant technician, undergraduate and postgraduate courses; and providing opportunities for students to obtain industrial and commercial experience within academic programmes.

General Certificate of Secondary Education

28. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the progress of the general certificate of secondary education; and if he will make a statement.

33. Mr. Colin Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what further representations he has received concerning the GCSE examination.

59. Mr. Haynes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he is satisfied with the progress of the general certificate of secondary education examination; and if he will make a statement.

76. Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has received any representations on the funding and the organisation of the GCSE examinations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he is satisfied with the progress of the GCSE examination; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: The recently published HMI interim report on the GCSE provides reassuring evidence that the new examination is being successfully introduced. It is already leading to better teaching and learning in many classrooms across a wide range of subjects. There have been some teething problems which must be addressed but HMI considers that these are not endangering the progress already made. It is important to ensure that the first pupils to sit the examination are fairly treated, and to press on to ensure that the new exam will—as the Government intend — bring higher standards in schools and give pupils a good preparation for adult and working life.

31. Mrs. Maureen Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what percentage of school leavers in the current year will have taken a GCSE in (a) science and (b) mathematics.

Mrs. Rumbold: Information on the number of school leavers in 1987-88 who will have taken GCSE is not yet available. Of those who left school in the academic year 1985-86, 65·5 per cent. had attempted a science subject and 81·1 had attempted mathematics at either GCE O-level or CSE.

Religious Instruction

30. Mr. Ken Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what discussions he has had with Church leaders and representatives of the teaching profession about improving the teaching of religious instruction.

71. Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps he is taking to ensure religious education in schools, following enactment of the Education Reform Bill.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend and I have had a number of meetings in recent months with Church leaders and representatives about the place of religious education in the national curriculum and the quality of religious education provision. The Education Reform Bill clarifies the duty on local education authorities, governing bodies and head teachers to comply with the 1944 Act provisions relating to religious education. It also proposes a procedure under which parents and others will have a right of complaint to their local education authority or to aided school governors in cases where they believe schools are failing to provide religious education in accordance with the law.

61. Mr. John M. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received regarding the possible inclusion of religious education as a foundation subject within the core curriculum; and if he will make a statement.

96. Sir John Biggs-Davison: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what reconsideration he has given, in the light of representations from Christian leaders and bodies, to the absence of religious education from the national curriculum; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend has received a number of representations from Christian leaders and bodies about the possible inclusion of religious education as a foundation subject in the national curriculum. In response to these, my right hon. Friend and I have stressed the importance we attach to maintaining the current statutory arrangements for local determination of religious education syllabuses.

The position of religious education in the curriculum of maintained schools is secured by the relevant provisions of the 1944 Act and the Education Reform Bill strengthens these in certain respects.

Nursery Education

32. Mr. Boateng: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what action he intends to take to ensure that nursery classes in primary schools are staffed as nursery and not as reception classes.

Mr. Dunn: None. Levels of staffing in schools are for determination by local education authorities and schools.

37. Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will introduce legislation to impose upon local education authorities a statutory duty to provide some form of nursery education to all children of three and four years of age whose parents wish them to benefit from it; and if he will make a statement.

82. Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he expects to publish proposals to improve pre-school provision for children.

Mr. Dunn: I refer the hon. Members to my reply to the hon. Member for City of Durham (Mr. Steinberg) on 19 January at column 805.

101. Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how spending on nursery education has varied since 1979 with the number of children participating.

Mr. Dunn: Relevant current spending on under fives pupils in maintained nursery and primary schools in England rose by 22 per cent. in real terms between 1979-80 and 1985-86 while the number of pupils rose by 20 per cent..

Education Expenditure

34. Mr. Stevens: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what increase has been made in education spending in the last two years; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: The table below shows the total spending on education in cash over the last three years and the related percentage increases.

	1985-86 outturn	1986-87 outturn	1987-88 estimated outturn	Per cent. increase 1985-86 to 1986-87	increase 1986-87 to 1987-88

Miscellaneous education services, research and administration	826	892	975	8·0	9·3
	13,840	15,083	16,512	9·0	9·5

These figures exclude expenditure by the research councils and related bodies.

A-level Statistics

35. Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will give the proportion of both girls and boys taking A-level mathematics, craft design and technology and physics, who have obtained grades A and B since 1979; and if he will make a statement.

80. Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will give the proportions of both girls and boys who took A-level mathematics, craft, design and technology and physics since 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: Information on the proportion of girls and boys leaving school since 1979 attempting and passing A level mathematics, craft design and technology, and physics is given in the table. Information on grades is not readily available.

Coal Mining Subsidence

38. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has as to how many schools have been subject to coal mining subsidence in the last five years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: This information is not collected centrally

School Leavers (Illiteracy)

39. Mr. Andy Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he proposes any further steps to reduce the level of illiteracy among school leavers; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: English is one of the core subjects in our proposed national curriculum. The introduction of attainment targets in English will raise standards of literacy by identifying pupils needing further help. A national curriculum working group on English will be established after Easter, building on the work of the Kingman committee on what children should know about language, to advise on attainment targets and the associated programmes of study for all aspects of English.

Universities (Funding)

40. Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received in connection with the funding of research in universities since June 1987.

Mr. Jackson: About 260 in response to the discussion document "A Strategy for the Science Base", issued by the Advisory Board for the Research Councils. Representations concerning the funding of individual universities frequently also make reference to research.

48. Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what recent representations he has received about the level of funding for the universities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: My right hon. Friend receives many representations bearing on university funding. As shown in table 12.1 of "The Government's Expenditure Plans 1988-89 to 1990-91" volume II (Cm 288) current provision for the universities is planned to increase by 7·9 per cent. between 1987-88 and 1988-89.

Schools (Spare Places)

41. Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what estimate he has made of the scope for local education authorities to make greater use of existing spare places in schools.

Mr. Dunn: My right hon. Friend encourages local education authorities to make the maximum use of the school accommodation available to them and, where places are surplus to requirements, to take them out of use. The Government's proposals for more open enrolment are designed to ensure that no child is refused admission to a school which has places available.

Student Grants

42. Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has about the financial position of students in higher education in other countries in the European Economic Community.

Mr. Jackson: Students in higher education in Great Britain are more dependent on maintenance grants than those in other European Community countries. But a precise comparison of financial circumstances is very difficult because of the variety of forms that student support may take. The student support review group under my chairmanship is examining the available evidence.

Task Groups on Assessment and Testing

46. Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will include, within the objectives of the subject working groups and the task group on assessment and testing, the elimination of sex bias; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Government are clear that there is no room for sex bias in the curriculum. The remit letters to the subject working groups on science and mathematics emphasise that the curriculum should provide equal opportunities for boys and girls. In framing its advice the group has been asked specifically to consider the expectations and attitudes of girls. Other subject working groups will be similarly guided. The task group on assessment and testing has recommended ways of dealing with gender bias in the proposed assessment arrangements within the national curriculum.

Swimming Instruction

47. Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has any proposals to increase the level of availability of swimming instruction within education authorities.

Mrs. Rumbold: Any increase in the level of availability of swimming instruction would be a matter for local education authorities to determine. The Government's proposals for a national curriculum include physical education as one of the foundation subjects and it is envisaged that guidelines for the study would cover swimming instruction.

Funding Councils

49. Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will take steps to ensure that women are represented on (a) the Universities Funding Council and (b) the Polytechnics and Colleges Funding Council.

Mrs. Rumbold: I refer the hon. Lady to the answer I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Gateshead, East (Ms. Quin).

School Buildings

51. Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received concerning the state of primary school buildings.

Mr. Dunn: The state of repair of primary school buildings is raised from time to time in correspondence from or in meetings with hon. Members and others.

Teachers

52. Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans he has to improve the professional effectiveness of teachers and the management of the teaching force.

Mrs. Rumbold: The main instrument for this purpose is the local education in-service training grant scheme which was introduced in 1987. The coverage and structure of the scheme is reviewed annually. As to initial teacher training, the Council for the Accreditation of Teacher Education was established in 1984 to review all courses against new specific criteria. The council is expected to complete its scrutiny of existing courses by the end of 1989. My right hon. Friend will be considering what arrangements should thereafter be made for the approval of initial teacher training courses.

84. Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science in what way he will seek to secure the conditions of employment of teachers in grant-maintained schools which are established as a result of the Education Reform Bill.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Government intend that grant maintained schools shall be subject to statutory provisions on school teachers' pay and conditions under the Teachers' Pay and Conditions Act 1987 or succeeding legislation. When teachers transfer to grant maintained schools which are being set up they will retain the provisions of their previous contract of employment and the school must honour those provisions so far as is practicable.

Research Funding

53. Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has on Government funding of academic and academically related research in France, Germany and the United Kingdom as a percentage of gross domestic product at the latest available common date.

Mr. Jackson: The information for 1982, the latest available common date, is contained in the following table:

	Percentage
United Kingdom	0·38
Germany	0·49
France	0·44
Netherlands	0·63
United States of America	0·31
Japan	0·25

Source: ABRC Science Policy Study No. 2—An International Comparison of Government Funding of Academic and Academically Related Research October 1986.

Village Schools

54. Mr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans he has for continuing the service provided by village schools.

Mr. Dunn: It is the responsibility of local education authorities to provide a proper service to villages and rural areas as well as to other areas. My right hon. Friend is currently supporting a number of projects, including one in Cornwall, designed to identify ways of enriching the curriculum of rural primary schools. Any proposal for the closure of a village school which comes before my right hon. Friend is considered very carefully in the light of the criteria set out in the Department's circular 3/87, which makes it clear that size alone is not a criterion for closure.

Science Budget

55. Mr. Millan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what was the science budget, defined as research council and associated funding, as a percentage of gross domestic product in 1964-65, 1970-71, 1974-75, 1979-80 and 1986-87, respectively.

Mr. Jackson: The figures are as follows:

	Percentage
1964-65	0·13
1970-71	0·20
1974-75	0·17
1979-80	0·15
1986-87	0·16

The elements that make up the science budget have changed considerably since 1964-65. The above figures should be read in the light of the following notes:

(1) The 1964-65 science budget has been assessed as Government funding for the Department of Scientific and Industrial Research (dissolved by the Science and Technology Act 1965), the Agricultural Research Council (later the Agricultural and Food Research Council), the Medical Research Council, the Nature Conservancy (absorbed the following year by the newly established Natural Environment Research Council) and Grants for Science (which included grants-in-aid for both The Royal Society and the Royal Society of Edinburgh). The Economic and Social Research Council (formerly the Social Science Research Council), the Natural Environment Research Council and the Science and Engineering Research Council (formerly the Science Research Council) first received Government funding in 1965-66.

(2) Under arrangements described in Cmnd. 5046 of July 1972, £11·6 million, £20·7 million and £34·6 million were transferred in 1973-74, 1974-75 and 1975-76 respectively from the science budget to customer Departments. On 1 April 1981, £14 million was transferred back to the science budget from the health Departments.

(3) The Royal Society of Edinburgh continued to receive a grant-in-aid from the science budget until 1972-73. Since 1984-85, the Fellowship of Engineering has received a small grant-in-aid from the science budget.

(4) For all years shown in the table, the science budget has been deemed to exclude provision for the British Museum (Natural History) which was transferred to the Office of Arts and Libraries on 1 August 1987.

AIDS

57. Dr. Moonie: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what support he is giving to the Medical Research Council for research into the epidemiology of AIDS in Africa.

Mr. Jackson: It is for the Medical Research Council to decide its scientific priorities. I understand that the council is at present funding three projects on epidemiological research in Africa. A total of some £250K has been awarded for these studies.

Sports Facilities

58. Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received on the dual use of sports facilities in schools.

Mr. Dunn: Comments were sought from a number of organisations on the findings of our recent study into the economics of the dual use of school sports facilities. My hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State with responsibility for sport and I will take account of these comments in the preparation of the practical guidance to which I referred in my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Sheffield, Hallam (Mr. Irvine) on 16 February at column 579.

Teachers (Pay)

62. Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what recent representations he has received about teachers' pay; and if he will make a statement.

74. Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what recent representations he has received about teachers' pay; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend continues to receive some representations from teachers about their pay, both directly and through hon. Members.

Medical Research Council (Grants)

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will give for each year in 1980 the number of Medical Research Council project grants approved but not funded.

Mr. Jackson: My right hon. Friend understands from the Medical Research Council that the number of alpha graded research project grants awarded but unfunded since 1980 are as follows:

Award year	Number
1980-81	60
1981-82	66
1982-83	25
1983-84	199
1984-85	87
1985-86	90
1986-87	235

"A Strategy for the Science Base"

64. Dr. Bray: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he expects to reply to the Advisory Board for the Research Councils' discussion document on "A Strategy for the Science Base".

Mr. Jackson: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Kirkcaldy (Dr. Moonie) on 16 February 1988 at column 586.

Dyslexia

65. Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what recent representations he has received about the assessment of children for dyslexia.

Mr. Dunn: The assessment of children with special educational needs, including dyslexia, is a matter for local education authorities. No records are kept which would show the number of letters my right hon. Friend has received on this subject.

University Dental Schools

66. Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement about the Government's plans for funding of university dental schools.

Mr. Jackson: A working party set up to review dental education reported to the University Grants Committee on 25 February. The report, copies of which are available in the Library, has been sent to universities, relevant Government Departments and professional bodies for comment. A reduction of 10 per cent. in the intake to dental schools will be effected in October 1989, but no final decisions have been taken on the funding of individual schools.

Core Curriculum

67. Mr. Fallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what recent representations he has received on the core curriculum for schools.

Mrs. Rumbold: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply which I gave him on Monday 7 March 1988. Many of the letters commenting on our national curriculum proposals have welcomed the inclusion of English, mathematics and science as core subjects.

School Governors

68. Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received on the giving of increased powers to governors; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: My right hon. Friend has received a range of representations about the allocation of functions to school governing bodies under the Education (No. 2) Act 1986 and about the proposals in the Education Reform Bill which would further increase their powers. He believes that these enhanced responsibilities will attract many parents and others in the community who would not previously have considered becoming governors.

70. Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what initiatives he is taking to encourage the training of school governors.

Mr. Dunn: For the last two years, the Government have been supporting the development of suitable training strategies in 10 local education authorities by means of education support grants. My right hon. Friend also announced his intention recently to give grant support to the National Association of Governors and Managers. We are discussing with the education authorities, voluntary bodies and business interests what further steps might usefully be taken at national level, drawing on the findings of a research study into existing training methods and materials, which we commissioned late in 1987.

85. Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans he has to give parents the right to elect parent governors to temporary school governing bodies.

Mr. Dunn: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave on 16 February last to my hon. Friend the Member for Amber Valley (Mr. Oppenheim) at column 581.

Workers' Education Association

69. Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish the Government's funding plans for the Workers' Education Association for 1988-89, 1989-90 and 1990-91; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received concerning the future funding of the Workers' Education Association; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: We are not yet in a position to announce future grants to the Workers' Educational Association districts. These will be determined in the light of the resources available and the Government's priorities.

In the current Session, three letters about the association have been received from hon. Members. Additionally, my noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, received a request for a meeting from the association's national executive to discuss the work of the WEA and the funding arrangements.

Officials from the Department are currently discussing the future of the association with its representatives.

Student Finance

73. Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he expects to complete his review of student finance; and if he will make a statement.

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he expects to complete his review of student finance; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: I refer the hon. Members to the answer my right hon. Friend gave earlier today to my hon. Friends the Members for Stamford and Spalding (Mr. Davies) and for Bristol, North-West (Mr. Stern).

School Closures

75. Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what weight he attaches to parental choice in deciding upon school closures; how he applied this criterion specifically in the case of the closure of the Pilgrim school, Bedford; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: The Secretary of State's policy in respect of parental choice in the context of school reorganisation proposals is set out in DES circular 3/87. There was a substantial volume of representations both in objection to and support of the LEAs proposals in respect of Pilgrim school, and my right hon. Friend took account of this with other relevant facts and arguments in reaching his decision.

Japanese Language

77. Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many students graduate each year from United Kingdom institutions of higher education with degrees in Japanese; what priority he attaches to developing the study of Japanese language and society; and what plans he has to encourage such study.

Mr. Jackson: Twenty students with degrees in Japanese as a single subject graduated from universities in Great Britain in 1986. The Government recognise the importance of Japanese studies. These fell within the scope of the review of Asian and African languages and area studies conducted by Sir Peter Parker in 1985-86. The University Grants Committee has accepted, and is now implementing, the recommendations of the Parker report.

Inner London Education

78. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has any plans for taking into consideration the wishes of London parents regarding the existence of a single education authority in inner London; whether he intends to review his decision not to grant financial assistance for the ballot to be conducted by the Electoral Reform Society; and whether he will make a statement about the means available to London parents to influence the Government's proposals for education in London.

Mr. Dunn: It would not be appropriate for the Government to fund a ballot on a constitutional matter such as this, affecting the organisation of local government. The decision on the Government's proposals must be for Parliament, taking account not only of the views of parents but also those of other ratepayers who share the bill for education. Local people, including parents, will have an opportunity to influence and comment on boroughs' development plans for their education service from 1990.

Education Resources

79. Mr. Forth: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans he has to make sure existing resources in education are used more effectively.

Mrs. Rumbold: Our policies for education, incuding the measures set out in the Education Reform Bill, are designed to ensure that we secure the best possible return from the very substantial resources invested in the education service. The implementation of those policies will lead to an improvement in standards and to the more effective use of resources.

Capital Expenditure (Inner Cities)

81. Mr. Ashdown: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what percentage of the total amount of capital expenditure bids made by inner city local education authorities was given in capital allocations in 1987.

Mr. Dunn: There is no precise definition of inner city to enable local education authorities to be described in this way. For all authorities I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 11 January to the hon. Member for Burnley (Mr. Pike) at columns 50-52.

Academic Year

83. Mr. Holt: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what proposals there are to alter the present academic year.

Mr. Dunn: The Government have no such plans.

Inner London Education Authority (Abolition)

86. Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received concerning the abolition of the Inner London education authority.

91. Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for education and Science how many representations he has received on the abolition of the Inner London education authority.

102. Mr. Arbuthnot: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received since he announced his decision to abolish the Inner London education authority; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: We have received some 800 letters from hon. Members, organisations and individual members of the public about the proposals announced by my right hon. Friend on 4 February. Many of these are concerned with the future arrangements for particular aspects of the education service in inner London.

Local Education Authorities

89. Mr. Robert B. Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans he has for intervening where a local education authority is acting improperly in its role of providing the best education service possible for the people who live within the area of that local education authority.

Mr. Dunn: Local education authorities have the responsibility of providing efficient education for the areas they serve. Under sections 68 and 99 of the Education Act 1944 my right hon. Friend may intervene where he is satisfied that an authority has acted or is proposing to act unreasonably in respect of any duty under the Education Acts or where he is satisfied that it is in default of such a duty, and may then make such directions as appear to him to be expedient.

Headmasters

92. Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans he has for increasing the training and administrative support of headmasters, in the light of their enhanced role under the Education Reform Bill.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Government support training in management for head teachers and other senior staff in schools with specific grant under the LEA training grant scheme. Grant at 70 per cent. will be payable in 1988-89 on £4·3 million of LEA expenditure. The Government are also providing grant in support of the production of various training materials and are consulting a range of organisations on the possibility of further measures to enhance management training for heads.

Universities (Central Funding)

93. Mr. Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what increases he has made in the central funding of universities in the last two years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: The information is provided in table 12.1 of "The Government's Expenditure Plans 1988-89 to 1990-91" Volumn II (Cm. 288). Current provision for the universities increased by 10·5 per cent. from 1986-87 to 1987-88 and by 7·9 per cent. from 1987-88 to 1988-89.

Students (Rates Compensation)

97. Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will take steps to compensate students who from April will have to pay 20 per cent. of their rates for the first time.

Mr. Jackson: There will be no addition to student grants in respect of liability for rates in the current academic year. Changes in the housing benefit system, which will apply to all categories of claimant from April this year, were among the factors taken into account in determining grant levels for 1988-89 and will be considered in coming to decisions about future levels of student support.

Polytechnics

98. Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what further plans he has for increasing the role of the polytechnics in higher education.

Mr. Jackson: The Education Reform Bill, now before Parliament, provides for the 29 English polytechnics to be re-established as free-standing corporate bodies outside local authority control and under contract to a new Polytechnic and Colleges Funding Council. This reform will enable the polytechnics to develop further their role as national providers of high quality vocational courses of higher education and promote better management and closer ties with industry.

Science and Technology

99. Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how he intends to increase further the emphasis on science and technology in schools and the relevance of education to the job market.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Education Reform Bill proposes that science should be a core subject, and technology a foundation subject, in the national curriculum. My Department supports the many organisations which aim to increase the links between school and industry, and it is actively promoting the development of a coherent programme of careers education and guidance in schools.

Education Budgets

100. Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans he has for ensuring that local authorities maximise the percentage of their education budgets which are devoted directly to pupils and equipment; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: Provision for local authority spending on education is mainly channelled through block grant which is unhypothecated. The Government's plans identify particular levels of expenditure on areas of education provision and it is for the individual local authorities to decide on their own priorities to be met from within the resources available to them. However, education support grants are allocated for specific purposes, including the provision of books and equipment for the GCSE, and must be used for the prescribed purpose.

Geffrye Museum

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what arrangements are being made to secure the future of the Geffrye museum.

Mr. Dunn: As my right hon. Friend the Member for Mitcham and Morden (Mrs. Rumbold) assured the House on 17 February at column 1069, the Government are considering the most appropriate arrangements for securing the future of the Geffrye museum.

SOCIAL SERVICES

NHS Facilities (Usage Rate)

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has regarding the relative usage of National Health Service facilities amongst different age groups of the United Kingdom population.

Mrs. Currie: The following information is for England. Information about the rest of the United Kingdom is the responsibility of my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland and my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Wales and for Northern Ireland.

The following is a list of the NHS facilities in England for which statistics are collected centrally and which show some age breakdown of the patients:

NHS hospital in-patient or day-patient treatment;
Residents of NHS mental handicap hospitals and units;
Residents of NHS mental illness hospitals and units;
Treatment at genito-urinary medicine clinics;
Smear tests for cervical cancer;
Chiropody services;*
Home Nursing Services;*
Family Planning Services;
School health services;
Vaccinations and immunisation;
General and community dental services*.

In addition, the results of the general household survey provide information with an age breakdown on GP consultations, visits to a dentist, and NHS and private hospital treatment.

Information on items marked with an asterisk is published annually in "Health and Personal Social Services Statistics for England": other information is provided in the annual report of the chief medical officer of the DHSS, and a number of statistical booklets and bulletins. Copies of all these documents are available in the Library.

Special Hospital Patients

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if, pursuant to his answer of 16 February to the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire, Official Report, columns 555-56, he will provide the same information as to how many patients were residing in each special hospital who no longer required a secure environment, due to an inability to relocate them in National Health Service or local authority accommodation, at 4 January of each year since 1979.

Mr. Newton: The information provided in my reply to the hon. Member on 16 February at columns 555-56 was derived from current records. I regret that information for earlier periods is not held.

Health Authorities (Expenditure)

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish a table showing in rank order the absolute and percentage increase in spending for each district health authority since 1983.

Mr. Newton: I have placed in the Library tables giving the information requested derived from the annual accounts of district health authorities for 1982-83 and 1986-87 (the latest year available).

Health Expenditure

Dr. Owen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish a table showing expenditure per head in (a) London and (b) the rest of England on (i) general hospital expenditure, (ii) community health services and (iii) psychiatric hospitals.

Mr. Newton: Per capita figures based on total populations of the district health authorities covering the area of the former Greater London council and in England as a whole are shown in the table.

Revenue expenditure—Per capita 1986-87

	Total hospital[1] services £	Psychiatric[2] hospitals £	Community health services £
London	236	27	27
Rest of England	160	17	21
England total[3]	175	19	22

[1] The figures for expenditure on total hospital services cover spending on all categories of hospital including "Mental Illness".

[2] The figures for expenditure on psychiatric hospitals comprise those classified as "Mental Illness". These figures neither include expenditure on the growing volume of activity in psychiatric units in general hospitals and within community health services etc. nor expenditure on hospitals classified as "Mental Handicap".

[3] Relevant expenditure recorded in the accounts of the special health authorities for the London postgraduate teaching hospitals is recorded in the England total figures only. Such expenditure cannot strictly be attributed to London or to particular health regions.

Note: The population figures used make no allowance for people resident in particular districts who receive treatment in others or for differences in morbidity and age/sex structure of particular populations.

Sources:

(a) Annual accounts of regional and district health authorities in England.
(b) Costing returns for hospitals categorised "Mental Illness".
(c) Mid-year estimates of population 1986 (Office of Population Censuses and Surveys).

Dr. Owen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will list for each year since 1979 expenditure per head on the hospital service in England, by regional health authority;

(2) if he will list for each year since 1979 expenditure per head on the hospital service in England, Scotland and Wales.

Mr. Newton: Per capita figures based on total population of the health regions are shown in the table.

Information about hospital services in Wales and Scotland are matters for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales and my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland.

Notes:

1. The figures exclude capital expenditure and all expenditure on other health services (for example, community health, ambulance and blood transfusion services).

2. The population figures used make no allowance for people resident in one region who receive treatment in another or for differences in morbidity and age/sex structure of particular populations.

3. The figures for England include relevant expenditure recorded in the annual accounts of the special health authorities for the London postgraduate teaching hospitals (Predecessor authorities for the years prior to 1982-83). Such expenditure cannot strictly be attributed to particular regions.

Doctors (Budgets)

Dr. Owen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will estimate the budget controlled each year on average by (a) general practitioners including their own time and the drugs they prescribe, and (b) hospital doctors, including their own time and the drugs they prescribe.

Mr. Newton: I regret that the information is not available to answer the question in the terms asked.

General medical practitioners are independent contractors and do not have budgets to control. Gross payments made to them in England in 1986-87 for the provision of general medical services were £1,131 million. The gross cost to the family practitioner services of the drugs prescribed in 1986-87 was £1,378 million.

Determination of individual budgets within hospitals is a matter for each health authority. While medical staff are involved and clinical budgets are being developed, staff of a number of other disciplines (particularly general managers) also share responsibility for budgetary control.

The summarised accounts of health authorities in England for 1986-87 show total revenue expenditure on hospital services as £8,255 million. This figure includes most of the total hospital and community health services expenditure on medical staff pay (£1,094 million) and on drugs (£318 million).

Community Care

Mr. Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make it his policy to ensure that the findings of Sir Roy Griffiths' review of the future development of community care are made available for public debate; if he is able to name the date for publication; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: I refer the right hon. Member to my right hon. Friend's reply to the right hon. Member for Manchester, Wythenshawe (Mr. Morris) and the hon. Members for Caernarfon (Mr. Wigley) and for Ynys Môn (Mr. Jones) on 8 March 1988, at column 171.

Family Planning

Mr. Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has as to what health authorities in England have cut back their provision for family planning clinics.

Mr. Newton: Tables giving the number of health authority family planning outlets and sessions provided in the last five years for which figures are available have been placed in the Library.

Rampton Hospital

Mr. Alexander: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the (a) revenue and (b) capital allocation for Rampton hospital in each year from 1982.

Mrs. Currie: The information is as follows:

	Revenue allocation £	Capital allocation £
1982-83	13,067,000	401,000
1983-84	15,199,000	664,000
1984-85	16,218,000	1,731,000
1985-86	17,336,000	387,000
1986-87	18,078,000	542,000
1987-88	19,498,000	1,250,000

AIDS

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make it his policy to encourage the use of the Karpas test for simultaneous testing for both HIV-1 and HIV-2; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: Our policy is to have all available tests for HIV antibody evaluated so that the users can determine if they are appropriate to their needs. Officials are in contact with the supplier of this test and with suppliers of other tests with similar potential.

Medical Practitioners

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the number of medical practitioners reported to him in 1987 from family practitioner committees as being in breach of their terms of service and the numbers consequently having remuneration withheld.

Mrs. Currie: Information is not available centrally in the form requested. Of cases concluded in 1987, 220 general medical practitioners were found in breach of the terms of service and withholdings were directed against 75 of them.

Dental Caries

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has on the potential effectiveness of a vaccine against dental caries, and if he has any plans to promote the development of such a vaccine.

Mrs. Currie: In 1984 the Department sought advice from the Medical Research Council on the desirability of conducting clinical trials of a dental caries vaccine following research which had been funded by the Department. The Medical Research Council advised in 1986 that there was considerable concern about the prospect of a trial in children of a vaccine of which the mode of action was incompletely understood and about which there were doubts relating to both safety and efficacy. The MRC concluded that more laboratory, field and clinical work would be necessary preliminary to any trial. The council advised that a clinical trial of dental caries vaccine in children in the United Kingdom was not appropriate at that time, nor was this situation likely to change rapidly, and that as the incidence of caries in the United Kingdom is falling the value of a vaccine in the future may be reduced.

In the light of this advice the Department ceased to fund research into the vaccine on 31 July 1987.

Single Payments

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what proportion of claimants received a single payment in 1986-87, 1985-86 and 1984-85; and what was the average value of those payments.

Mr. Portillo: I regret the information is not available in the precise form requested. Data are available from annual statistical inquiries only as follows:

	Percentage of claimants receiving single payments	Average payment (£)
December 1984	20	173
February 1986	24	187

Source: Annual Statistical Enquiries.
Note: The information relates to single payments made in the 12 months preceding the annual statistical inquiry to claimants in receipt of benefit at the time of the inquiry. As a result, it does not record all the single payments made in the year.

Mersey RHA

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the purpose of the recent video commissioned by the Mersey regional health authority; what it cost to produce; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: I understand that the Mersey regional health authority has commissioned five videos in the last three years, as follows:

Title	Approximate Cost £	Purpose
"New People at No. 10"	24,000	To help make the public more aware of the development of community care.
"Getting Better"	20,000	To explain Mersey region's 10-year strategy to 42,000 health service staff.
"Person to Person"	25,000	To be used with a training package designed to improve customer relations.
"Healthy Cities"	8,000	To introduce politicians, local authorities, educationists, industrialists, members of the public and health professionals to the healthy cities project, Liverpool being a WHO pilot city.
"Needle Exchange"	5,000	To provide information to NHS managers, other health professionals and agencies worldwide which are interested in establishing needle exchange schemes.

We welcome the authority's commitment to explaining its policies to staff and the public. The region has recouped more than £80,000 so far from video sales to other health authorities, social services departments and other organisations.

If my hon. Friend requires further details he may care to contact the chairman of the Mersey regional health authority.

NHS (RCN Representations)

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what recent representations he has had from the Royal College of Nursing on the National Health Service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Services has received no representations since he met representatives of the Royal College of Nursing on 1 February.

Elderly People

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will show, for each local authority in England, and the aggregate for the country, for each year from 1978-79 to 1986-87 (a) the number of whole-time equivalent home helps and the number per 1,000 population aged 75 years and over, and per 1,000 population aged 85 years and over, (b) the number of meals provided and the number per 1,000 population aged 75 years and over and per 1,000 population aged 85 years and over, (c) the number of home help hours provided per 1,000 population aged 75 years and over and per 1,000 population aged 85 years and over, (d) the number of whole-time equivalent social workers employed by social services departments per 1,000 population and (e) the number of day centre places per 1,000 population aged 75 years and over and per 1,000 population aged 85 years and over.

Mr. Newton: The table gives the information requested for the total provision in England of social workers, and the ratio per 1,000 population. It is not possible to give meaningful figures for home helps, home help hours, and meals per 1,000 population in particular age groups, since the proportion of the service provided which goes to these age groups is unknown.

Information collected centrally on staff of social services departments and personal social services activities for each local authority is published on an annual basis in:

i. Staff of Local Authority Social Services Departments (S/F 1)
ii. Domiciliary Services — Meals, Aids and Adaptations (A/F 18)
iii. Adult training centres for Mentally Handicapped People and Day Centres for Mentally Ill, Elderly and Younger Physically Handicapped People (A/F 8).

Information collected by the Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy for each local authority is published annually in "Personal Social Services Statistics, Actuals".

Copies of all these publications are available in the Library.

[1] provisional

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will show, for each district health authority in England, and the aggregate for the country, for each year from 1978-79 to 1986-87 (i) the number of whole-time equivalent district nurses per 1,000 population aged 75 years and over and per 1,000 population aged 85 years and over, and (ii) the number of whole-time equivalent chiropodists employed per 1,000 population aged 75 years and over and per 1,000 population aged 85 years and over.

Mr. Newton: It is not meaningful to provide the ratios of staff to population in specific age groups as the staff provide care to patients of all ages.

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the most recent information available to him on what proportion of elderly persons resident in the community are (a) housebound, (b) bedfast, (c) unable to negotiate stairs independently, (d) unable to bath or shower or wash all over alone, or (e) unable to go to the toilet unaided.

Mrs. Currie: The most recent information available is from the 1985 general household survey.

Among those aged 65 and over included in the sample interviewed for the survey:

(a) 8·0 per cent. were not able to go out of doors.

(b) 1·9 per cent. needed help to get in and out of bed and 0·2 per cent. could not get in and out of bed at all.

(c) 3·6 per cent. needed help to negotiate stairs and 5·4 per cent. could not negotiate stairs at all.

(d) 7·3 per cent. needed help to bath, shower or wash all over and 1·3 per cent. could do none of these tasks at all.

(e) 1·2 per cent. needed help to get to the toilet and 0·5 per cent. could not get to the toilet at all.

The 1985 general household survey interviewed nearly 20,000 people aged 16 and over living in private households in Great Britain.

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many elderly people received respite care in each local authority social service department during 1986-87.

Mrs. Currie: Information is not available in the form requested. The number of short-stay admissions to local authority homes during 1985-86, the latest year for which information is available, is given in table 11 of "Residential Accommodation for Elderly and for Younger Physically Handicapped People: All Residents in Local Authority, Voluntary and Private Homes Year ending 31 March 1986 England"; a copy of which is in the Library.

Mentally Handicapped People

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many persons have been discharged from long-stay mental illness and mental handicap institutions since 1978-79; and into what forms of care and in what numbers these persons have been discharged.

Mrs. Currie: I regret that I am unable to give the hon. Member the exact information requested. Information on discharges of people from mental illness and mental handicap hospitals since 1978 is given in statistical bulletins 2/2/88 ("Mental Illness Hospitals and Units in England: Results of the Mental Health Enquiry 1986") and 2/3/88 (for mental handicap hospitals and units). These bulletins are in the Library.

Table 1 of both publications gives the total numbers of discharges, and figure 6 of bulletin 2/2/88 and figure 4 of bulletin 2/3/88 show an indication of the number of people discharged after, in effect, living in the hospital. Some people may require to be readmitted depending on their circumstances.

Central information cannot trace people out into the community after discharge from hospital, but I am placing in the Library a research register prepared by "Good Practices in Mental Health" which includes a number of studies of particular areas with relevant information.

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will provide figures for each year from 1978-79 to 1986-87 showing (a) the numbers of mentally handicapped children leaving education, and the numbers of mentally handicapped people discharged from residential care, and (b) the corresponding trends in provision of day care services for mentally handicapped persons over the same period.

Mrs. Currie: Information requested at (a) is not available centrally. The following tables give information on (b).

Carers (Support)

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what proportion of local authority social services departments provide 24-hour, seven days a week availability of relief services to carers;

(2) what is the most recent estimate available to him of the number of carers in Britain; and what proportion of these are known to service agencies and supported in their efforts.

Mr. Newton: We have no reliable information at present about the number of carers. A series of questions was included in the 1985 general household survey to identify people looking after a sick, handicapped or elderly person, with the aim of providing national estimates of the number of people who are providing care of this kind. The results of the survey will be available later this year. Information about the numbers of local authorities and other agencies which provide service for carers is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has on the proportion of households caring for a dependent member who are in receipt of (a) home help support, (b) district nursing services, (c) social work support or (d) other services.

Mr. Newton: The information requested is not centrally available. The Office of Population, Censuses and Surveys hopes to publish later this year a report on carers based on data collected as part of the 1985 general household survey.

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has on the numbers of households with a mentally handicapped member who receives (a) sitting services, (b) respite care or (c) holiday relief schemes.

Mrs. Currie: I regret that this information is not held centrally.

Private Residential Homes

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what evidence is collected by his Department on the adequacy of the inspection of private residential homes by local authorities; and if he will publish a summary of this information.

Mrs. Currie: The Department's Social Services Inspectorate has carried out a study of the implementation of the Registered Homes Act 1984 by local authorities. The report was published on 14 March 1988 and a copy has been placed in the Library.

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the local authorities which make further inspection visits to private residential rest homes in addition to the statutory annual visit.

Mrs. Currie: I regret that this information is not collected centrally.

Personal Social Services

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will rank all local authorities by net real expenditure, as indicated by personal social services pay and prices, on personal social services for 1978-79 and 1986-87 per 1,000 population, all ages.

Mr. Newton: The requested information for social services departments is given in the tables. 1978-79 expenditure has been revalued to 1986-87 prices by a national personal social services current expenditure revaluation factor. Non-metropolitan district councils, which incur only minimal expenditure on the personal social services, are excluded from the tables.

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list those local authorities which did, and those which did not, experience real expenditure increases on the personal social services of 3½ per cent. or more during 1987-88.

Mr. Newton: Following are the requested lists, showing relevant authorities in alphabetical order. The lists are based on a comparison of each authority's 1987-88 budgeted expenditure with actual expenditure, or estimated expenditure where actual is not available, for 1986-87. The 1986-87 figures have been revalued to 1987-88 prices by use of the gross domestic product deflator. Non-metropolitan district councils, which incur only minimal expenditure on the personal social services, are excluded from the lists.

Camberwell Resettlement Unit

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how many direct access beds have been provided to replace the provision previously made at the Camberwell resettlement unit;

(2) if all the replacement units funded under the Camberwell replacement scheme are still in existence and providing the original number of beds;

(3) if he will itemise the type and extent of alternative provision funded under the Camberwell replacement scheme.

Mr. Portillo: The Camberwell replacement scheme will provide a total of 929 beds, of which 108 will be situated in three hostels designed to cater for emergency admissions off the street (direct access). A further 221 second stage beds will provide a high level of care and the remaining 600 beds will cater for those needing lower levels of care.

The 108 direct access beds to be provided by three London boroughs are not yet open. When the Camberwell resettlement unit closed in 1985, 184 beds in the Department's resettlement units were designated "direct access" to serve as an immediate replacement.

Up to 31 December 1987, 622 beds had been provided under the Camberwell replacement scheme and all of them are still open.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the cost of running the Camberwell resettlement unit in the last three years of its existence; and what has been the cost of the replacement provision in each financial year so far.

Mr. Portillo: The cost of running the Camberwell resettlement unit in the last three years of its existence was:

	£ million
1983-84	2·0
1984-85	1·9
1985-86	1·1

The cost of the replacement provision in each financial year so far has been:

Capital
1981-82	0·1	0·8
1982-83	0·3	2·2
1983-84	0·5	5·6

1985-86	210,000	107,000
1986-87	359,000	298,000

Resettlement Units

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement about the future administration and management of resettlement units.

Mr. Portillo: All 22 DHSS resettlement units are to be closed and replaced by groups of smaller hostels, run by voluntary bodies and local authorities, but funded by the Department. That process will take some years, during which the units will continue to be run by the Department. The Department has under consideration the establishment of the units and their associated headquarters branch as a departmental agency under the initiative announced by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on 18 February.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how much has been spent, and under what headings, on the process of replacing the existing resettlement units.

Mr. Portillo: Capital and revenue expenditure of £229,424 and £35,218 respectively has been incurred in respect of facilities to replace the existing units. In addition, £64,452 has been spent in the review process itself, mainly on development workers but also on the review teams and the advisory steering group.

Patients (Spending)

Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give the average annual expenditure per patient in each regional health authority in 1986-87.

Mr. Newton [holding answer 23 February 1988]: Regional tables showing this information by type of hospital and type of patient, with comparative figures for England, have been placed in the Library.

NHS Staff

Mr. Walden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many National Health Service staff fall into each of the following categories: (a) medical, including doctors, dentists, nurses and technicians, (b) non-medical but providers of services, including hospital administrators, clerks, receptionists, cleaners, and (c) other.

Mr. Newton [holding answer 9 March 1988]: Information in the exact format requested is not readily available. The total number of employed staff in the National Health Service at 30 September 1986 was 801,600. A breakdown of these staff is shown in the table. Ambulance staff have been counted in the "direct care" staff category.

NHS directly employed staff at 30 September 1986: England

	Whole time equivalent[1]
(a) "Direct care staff"[2]	541,000
(b) Total non-medical "support staff"[3]	260,600

Source: DHSS Annual censuses of NHS medical and non-medical manpower.

[1] Figures are independently rounded to the nearest 100 whole-time equivalents.

[2] Includes medical-dental including locums, nursing-midwifery including agency and professional-technical staff and ambulance staff.

[3] Includes works, maintenance, administrative-clerical, and ancillary staff.

Great Ormond Street Hospital

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when the first admission to the cardiac block at Great Ormond street hospital took place; and when the block will achieve full occupation.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 14 March 1988]: Twenty four patients were admitted to the new block, which currently houses 38 children, on 29 December. Provided the current rate of nurse recruitment can be sustained, the authority expects the total capacity of 52 patients to be reached by the end of July.

WALES

North Wales Newspapers Ltd.

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the amount and type of each grant made available to North Wales Newspapers Limited to assist in the relocation and re-equipping of the company's premises from Oswestry in Shropshire to Mold, Clwyd; what information he has as to the proportion of the company's costs for (a) rebuilding, (b) relocating and (c) new plant and equipment which were met by such aid; if the company gave any information or undertakings on the creation of new jobs as a result of the move or about the continued employment of existing staff after the company's relocation; and if any assurances or undertakings were given on the maintenance of terms and conditions of employment, including trade union recognition, for existing staff after the company's relocation.

Mr. Peter Walker: Details of regional selective assistance offers (exceeding £5,000 and regional development grant payments cumulatively exceeding £25,000 in any quarter) to individual companies are published in British Business following a payment under the grant concerned. No information has been published about grants payable to North Wales Newspapers Ltd. in respect of this project. Both the RSA and RDG schemes are linked to the provision of employment opportunities but aspects relating to the terms and conditions of employment and trade union recognition are not subject to the formal criteria of the schemes.

Wales Tourist Board

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the total grant to the Wales Tourist Board in cash terms and expressed at constant 1988 prices in each of the past 10 years.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The information is as follows:

Net expenditure for Wales tourist board

(£ thousand)

Year	Current prices	[1]Constant 1987-88 prices
1978-79	3,200	6,507
1979-80	3,400	5,916
1980-81	4,000	5,870
1981-82	4,887	6,530
1982-83	5,362	6,682
1983-84	4,827	5,746
1984-85	6,177	7,039
1985-86	7,579	8,151
1986-87	7,746	8,075
1987-88[2]	8,707	8,707

[1] The figures have been converted to 1987-88 prices using the gross domestic product (market price) deflator.
[2] Estimate of likely outturn.

Wales Tourist Board—Welsh Development Agency

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what arrangements are in place for liaison and co-operation between the Wales Tourist Board and the Welsh Development Agency; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The Wales Tourist Board and the Welsh Development Agency work closely on a wide range of issues.

Community Nursing

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the total annual expenditure and the number of staff employed in the community nursing service in each Welsh health district.

Mr. Grist: The information requested is set out in the following table:

District Health Authority	Community Nursing Expenditure 1986-87 £ Thousand	Community Nursing Staff Whole-Time Equivalents
Clwyd	5,309	375
East Dyfed	3,574	244
Pembrokeshire	1,467	111
Gwent	6,407	415
Gwynedd	3,478	235
Mid Glamorgan	7,160	489
Powys	1,617	112
South Glamorgan	5,348	425
West Glamorgan	5,076	366
Total Wales	39,436	2,772

Notes:
1. Community nursing expenditure includes both salary expenditure and other associated non-staff expenditure such as travel and subsistence expenditure.
2. Community nursing staff whole-time equivalents as at 30 September 1986 including school health nurses.

Integrated Operations Programmes

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Caernarfon of 10 December 1987, Official Report, column 216, what progress has been made in securing an early and favourable decision by the European Community Commissioner on the integrated operations programme for Dyfed, Gwynedd and Powys.

Mr. Peter Walker: I went to Brussels on 3 February to discuss integrated operations programmes with Commissioner Varfis and I understand that he intends to consult the other Commissioners about the Dyfed, Gwynedd and Powys programme before the end of this month.

PICKUP

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the progress of PICKUP in Wales.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The Welsh Office joined the PICKUP programme in 1984 with the appointment of the PICKUP agent for Wales. I am pleased to be able to report that progress to date has been steady and continuous. A second full-time officer was appointed in September 1987 who is primarily engaged in the development of in-service training for college lecturers involved with running PICKUP courses.

The eight local education authorities in Wales have appointed PICKUP co-ordinators with funding from education support grant arrangements and six of the colleges of the University of Wales have received Welsh Office funding to promote and develop PICKUP provision through the appointment of co-ordinators.

Major advances have been achieved through the local collaborative project programme, funded jointly with the MSC, with a total of 30 projects being commissioned during 1986-87 involving some 140 firms and 24 colleges. An important feature of the LCP programme was the launch in 1987 of the Technology Centre for Wales, located with WINTECH, the first of its kind in the United Kingdom, and the Language Exports Centre for Wales based at University College, Swansea.

The Wales Advisory Body has also been actively concerned with the development of PICKUP activities, allocating funds to the Polytechnic of Wales and five higher education institutions to fund the appointment of PICKUP co-ordinators. Also, three of the colleges of the University of Wales have successfully bid for PICKUP funding from the University Grants Committee.

The response from participants has also been encouraging. A survey of PICKUP activities in colleges undertaken in November 1986 indicated that some 6,800 individuals were receiving updating/re-training during that month. The last two years have seen increases of about 40 per cent. in the number of PICKUP courses provided and 100 per cent. in the number of students benefiting from those courses.

THE ARTS

Arts Council (Equal Opportunities Policy)

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister for the Arts by what means and at what annual cost the implementation of the Arts Council's equal opportunities policy is monitored.

Mr. Luce [holding answer 4 March 1988]: As regards council staff, an equal opportunities policy is part of the council's personnel work, and monitored by its senior management. In respect of its clients the council looks at their equal opportunities policies as part of its evaluation procedures.

No separate account is kept of the cost in either case.

National Theatres and Opera Houses (Ethnic Minorities)

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister for the Arts how many (a) black, (b) Asian and (c) other ethnic minority people are employed (i) full-time and (ii) part-time in the Royal Shakespeare Company, the National Theatre, the Royal Opera House and the English National Opera as (1) artists, (2) administrators, (3) secretaries and (4) cleaners, caretakers and caterers.

Mr. Luce [holding answer 4 March 1988]: This information is not held centrally.

Arts Council (Ethnic Minority Employees)

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister for the Arts how many (a) black, (b) Asian and (c) other ethnic minority people are employed (i) full-time and (ii) part-time at the Arts Council in (1) executive, (2) clerical and secretarial and (3) ancillary, cleaning, caretaking and catering grades.

Mr. Luce [holding answer 4 March 1988]: The reply is based on ethnic monitoring questionnaires voluntarily completed by staff; not all questionnaires were returned. Answers relate only to full-timers; no part-timers were identified in any ethnic minority group.

	Blacks	Asians	Other ethnic minorities
Executive	5	1	1
Clerical	5	3	3

The Arts Council employs no ancillary grades directly.

Office of Arts and Libraries (Ethnic Minority Employees)

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister for the Arts how many (a) black, (b) Asian and (c) other ethnic minorities people are employed (i) full-time and (ii) part-time at the Office of Arts and Libraries in (1) executive, (2) clerical and secretarial and (3) ancillary, cleaning, caretaking and catering grades.

Mr. Luce [holding answer 4 March 1988]: The reply is based on ethnic monitoring questionnaires voluntarily completed by staff in post on 1 October 1987; not all questionnaires were returned.

	Black	Asian	Other ethnic minorities
Clerical	[1]	[2]	0

[1] Full-time.
[2] Part-time.

The Office of Arts and Libraries has only a small staff and employs no ancillary grades directly.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Income Tax

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information he has about the starting rates and top rates of income tax and the level of gross income at which those rates become payable in (a) Canada, (b) France, (c) Germany, (d) Italy, (e) Japan and (f) the United States of America, for a married couple with no children.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The information requested is given in the table:

Country	Starting rate Per cent.	Starting rate threshold (£)	Top rate Per cent.	Top rate threshold (£)
Canada	25·5	5,003	43·5	25,000
France	12·8	6,698	56·8	53,463
Germany	22	3,439	56	65,670
Italy	22	3,358	62	253,924
Japan	17·5	4,286	78	152,607
United States of America	15	5,086	34·7	22,086
United Kingdom	25	4,096	40	19,301

Notes

1. The figures relate to 1988 (1988-89 in the case of the United Kingdom).
2. It is assumed that the income of the married couple is wholly employment income of the husband.
3. Conversions to sterling were made at the purchasing power equivalent of sterling in July 1987 (the latest date for which we have figures). The purchasing power equivalents are calculated on the basis of updating OECD figures. Purchasing power parities give a better indication of real values than exchange rates as they are calculated by reference to prices of the same basket of commodities.
4. In determining gross income levels, personal reliefs, employment income reliefs and other standard reliefs have been taken into account. Where social security contributions are deductible in computing taxable income they have also been taken into account (France, Germany, Italy, Japan).
5. The figures in the tables reflect national taxes and, where applicable (Canada, Japan and the United States), local income taxes at typical rates.

Share Ownership

Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a further statement on the level of share ownership in Great Britain.

Mr. Norman Lamont: A joint Treasury/stock exchange survey carried out in January and February this year shows that:

- Nine million people, or 20 per cent. of the adult population, now own shares, compared to 19·5 per cent. one year ago, and seven per cent. in 1979.
- 13 per cent. hold shares in privatised companies, and six per cent. own only privatised shares.
- Three per cent. hold shares in the company for which they work.
- The increase in share ownership is widely spread; two thirds of British shareholders come from outside the ranks of managers and the professions; similarly, two thirds come from outside the south-east.

I am placing copies of the survey report in the Libraries of both Houses.

Independent Taxation

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the total reduction in income tax liability from introducing independent taxation in 1990-91; and how that reduction will be distributed amongst taxpayers at different levels of income.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The proposals for independent taxation of personal income outlined in the Budget are estimated to reduce income tax liability by about £670 million in a full year at 1990-91 levels of income and reduce income tax receipts by £500 million in 1990-91. The distribution of the full year cost by income of the individual taxpayers who benefit is as follows:

Income £000s	Cost £ million
0 to 5	260
5 to 10	100
10 to 15	60
15 to 20	50
20 to 25	50
25 to 30	50
30+	100
All	670

The costs are estimated by comparing tax liabilities on husbands' and wives' incomes separately before and after independent taxation. Liability on the wife's income before independent taxation is estimated by treating her income as the top slice of the couple's income. The calculations assume that the 1988-89 income tax regime is indexed to 1990-91 by the statutory formula, and the composite rate of tax on bank and building society interest does not change between 1989-90 and 1990-91. Estimates are based on a projection of the distribution of the incomes of husbands and wives in the 1985-86 survey of personal income and are therefore provisional.

Public Service Pensions

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the charities which are to receive donations from the Government in respect of the underpayment of public service pensions, indicating the sums likely to be received by each.

Mr. Brooke: Pursuant to my answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Croydon, South (Sir W. Clark) on 18 December at columns 845-6, the arrangements have yet to be settled, but I hope to make a statement in the near future.

Credit Union Act 1979

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received concerning possible amendment of the Credit Union Act 1979; and what response he has given.

Mr. Lilley: I have recently received four letters enclosing a copy of the same letter from the acting secretary of Glasgow Licensed Taxi Trade Credit Union, who seeks increases in the limits in the Act on the amount of shares in which a member of a credit union may have or claim an interest and in the total amount on loan to a member of a credit union at any time. I will be replying to the representations in due course and I will also write to my hon. Friend.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Land Ownership

75. Mr. Wray: To ask the Attorney-General what steps Her Majesty's Government will take to make information about land ownership more publicly accessible; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: The Land Registration Act 1988, which implements the Law Commission's recommendation in the report Law Com. No. 148 that the register of title at the Land Registry should be made open to public inspection, received Royal Assent on 15 March. The Act will be brought into force by commencement order made by the Lord Chancellor.

PRIME MINISTER

Nuclear Warheads

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to her oral reply to the hon. Member for Blaenau Gwent (Mr. Foot), Official Report, 4 March, column 1284, if she will set out the basis for her statement that the Soviet Union probably has more nuclear warheads than any other country.

The Prime Minister: My reply to the right hon. Member for Blaenau Gwent (Mr. Foot) reflected the fact that, while there is broad parity in the number of strategic systems held by the Soviet Union and the United States, in the intermediate and short-range category the Soviet Union has many more nuclear capable forces deployed than NATO, as indicated in figures 15 and 16 in annex A to the Statement on the Defence Estimates 1987, a copy of which is in the Library.

No estimate of warhead numbers can be precise, particularly because we cannot assess the number of nuclear warheads held in reserve by the Soviet Union, but on the basis of the number of deployed launchers the Soviet Union retains a considerable advantage over all NATO countries.

Lease-back Transactions

Mr. Heffer: To ask the Prime Minister whether she will provide particulars of all lease-back transactions entered into by Government Departments or agencies since 1 June 1979 showing (a) capital sums received from leases in respect of the assets comprised in the transaction, (b) the time terms of the leases concerned (c) the annual lease rental payable to the leasors by lease-back agreements and (d) the date of the respective transactions.

The Prime Minister: Guidance to Departments emphasises the importance of avoiding unconventional financing which does not provide benefits sufficient to offset any extra costs. Records of departmental assets are not held centrally.

Broadcasting Standards Council

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister what criteria Her Majesty's Government proposes to use in making appointments to the Broadcasting Standards Council; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: These appointments, as in other such cases, will be made on the basis of personal distinction, experience and ability.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister what factors are delaying an announcement of the membership of the Broadcasting Standards Council; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary hopes to make an announcement before long.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Infantry Radars (Export to Sudan)

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether the implications for development will be taken into account when consideration is given to granting a licence for the export of infantry radars to the Sudan.

Mr. Alan Clark: It has been the practice of successive Governments not to discuss their consideration of export licence applications for individual export orders. However, each application is judged on its merits taking into account all relevant factors including the nature of the equipment, its destination and end use.

Westminster Property Group

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if, in the light of the statement by Sir Nicholas Browne-Wilkinson in the High Court on 9 March in connection with the Westminster Property Group, he will again refer the papers relating to the group's activities to the Crown Prosecution Service.

Mr. Maude: Sir Nicholas Browne-Wilkinson has directed that a copy of his judgment be sent to the Director of Public Prosecutions for him to reconsider whether any criminal charges can properly be formulated against Mr. Raper. The Director of Public Prosecutions will contact my Department on this matter if necessary.

Cosmetics (Labelling)

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will introduce legislation to require labelling of cosmetics to indicate whether or not they have been tested on animals.

Mr. Butcher: I have no plans to do so.

"Action for Cities"

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of lancaster what steps were taken to ensure delivery to the House of Her Majesty's Government's brochure entitled "Action for Cities"; what requests were made to his Department in this respect; when copies first were supplied to the Vote Office of the House; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Copies of the Government's "Action for Cities" document were placed in the Library of the House by 11 am on 7 March. One hundred copies of the document were delivered to the Vote Office before 3 pm that day, a further 200 copies were delivered at 3.30 pm, and 200 more on 8 March. In addition, on 7 March I sent personal copies with a letter to 200 hon. Members with urban constituencies.

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what has been the estimated cost to the Government of producing the booklet and accompanying materials of "Action for Cities".

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The total estimated cost of producing the 37,000 copies to date of the "Action for Cities" document and the associated press notices issued by Government Departments on 7 March is £72,900. This expenditure is designed to attract further involvement and financial commitment to the inner cities from the private sector, and is a small part of the approximately £3,000 million each year already committed by the Government to a wide range of policies to help regenerate our inner cities.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what was the total print of the documents associated with the Government's campaign "Action for Cities"; and what was the final cost.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The print to date is 37,000 copies of the document "Action for Cities", 2,000 press notices on each of the 12 announcements about new action by Government Departments and 2,000 press notices summarising these announcements. The total cost is about £72,900. This expenditure is designed to attract further involvement and financial commitment to the inner cities from the private sector, and is a small part of the approximately £3,000 million each year already committed by the Government to a wide range of policies to help regenerate our inner cities.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Pupils (Enrolment)

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether, in view of the fact that Easter is a movable feast, he will take steps to fix 1 May each year as the eligibility date for pupils where entitlement to start school depends on the start of the summer term.

Mr. Dunn: No. The Government have no plans to alter the requirement for schools to admit children at the beginning of the term following their fifth birthday. It is open to local education authorities and schools to admit children earlier than this and it is clear that most are doing so.

Church School Authorities (Finance)

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans he has to speed up the payment of section 2 moneys due to church school authorities.

Mr. Dunn: My right hon. Friend is aware that there have been delays in the making of orders under section 2 of the Education Act 1973. Officials are considering a number of measures to improve the present regrettable situation.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Mentally Disordered Offenders

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received from local authorities and other bodies in Durham concerning the release into the community of mentally disordered offenders; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have received no such representations. If, however, the hon. Member has a particular case in mind I would be ready to consider his views about it.

Political Asylum

Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on Amnesty International's call for a major review of current Home Office procedures for dealing with applications for political asylum in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Renton: I met representatives of Amnesty International on 11 February to discuss their proposals. I stressed at that meeting that the United Kingdom will continue to carry out its obligations under the 1951 refugee convention and that since 1979 we have granted refugee status to over 8,000 applicants and admitted 20,000 Vietnamese refugees as well as allowing over 7,000 applicants who did not qualify for refugee status to remain here on an exceptional basis. Moreover, much of what Amnesty proposes represents current Home Office practice. There does, however, have to be an effective procedure for distinguishing between applications which meet the requirements of the UN convention and those which do not and, in this context, I cannot accept Amnesty's main recommendation that those who are refused asylum on arrival at a port should have a right of appeal exercisable before removal. The experience of other European countries reinforces our view that such a system would be likely to encourage abuse of our asylum procedures.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to review the use by local authorities of moneys granted under section 11 of the Local Government Act 1966; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: Improved arrangements for monitoring the use made by local authorities of posts funded under section 11, introduced in the Home Office circular of 1 October 1986, now apply to all posts approved or reviewed since that date and are being extended to all other funded posts. We shall be considering whether any further changes are needed.

AIDS

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy to screen all prisoners at the reception stage for HIV-1 and HIV-2.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Screening of all prisoners at the reception stage is already undertaken in the form of medical inquiry and investigation. Routine blood testing is not practised and there are no plans to introduce it.

Polyester Security Glazing Film

Sir Eldon Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what studies he has made of recent developments in polyester security glazing film; and if he intends to encourage the use of this form of window protection for police cars and police stations.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Two studies of the resistance of various types of glazing, with and without the addition of polyester film, were conducted in 1986 and their findings were made available to chief constables. Further related work is now in progress.

Since 1977 the Home Office has recommended that wherever necessary windows in new police stations should be shatter-proof or protected by film.

Police (Firearms)

Sir Eldon Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he is satisfied with the present facilities for tactical weapons training; whether he has yet established common physical standards for firearms officers in all English forces; how many forces still lack counselling facilities for officers who may suffer post-shooting traumas; and what response he has made to the recommendation at paragraph 130 of the Home Office working group on police use of firearms that a chief superintendent with knowledge of firearms be seconded to assist Her Majesty's Inspectors of Constabulary.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Home Office working group on the police use of firearms made 36 recommendations for the improvement of policy and procedures relating to the issue to and use by the police of firearms in England and Wales, all of which we support. The majority of recommendations have already been implemented, but there are some on which further work is still required. A working party of the Association of Chief Police Officers is giving urgent attention to identifying a suitable site for a tactical training facility. A second ACPO working group is considering how best to develop a range of physical fitness and medical standards to meet the requirements of each category of firearms specialisation. Although there are some forces where work is still in progress to build into operational contingency plans provision for counselling facilities for officers involved in shootings, most of those forces have made interim arrangements for such counselling to be provided. The suggestion that a chief superintendent with knowledge of firearms should be seconded to assist Her Majesty's Inspectors of Constabulary is being actively pursued by the inspectorate.

Gibraltar (Shooting)

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether the powers contained in the Prevention of Terrorism Act were used at any time in the events leading up to the shooting of three people in Gibraltar; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: No.

Fire Prevention Officers

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will list the lack of outstanding initial, re-inspection and routine fire prevention inspections in each county in the United Kingdom as an annual figure expressed in officer man years for each of the last 10 years;

(2) if he will list the lack of outstanding initial, re-inspection and routine fire prevention inspections for private residential homes in each county in the United Kingdom as an annual figure expressed in officer man years for each of the last 10 years.

Mr. John Patten: This information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Forensic Science Service

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps have been taken by the Home Office forensic science service to improve the quality of scientific evidence provided by the service in criminal cases.

Mr. Hurd: Substantial improvements have been made. Since 1979, there have been formal arrangements to monitor the quality of work in the Home Office forensic science service. These are based on a regular series of open and "blind" trials, organised both within each laboratory, and centrally by the service's research establishment. They cover the problems normally found in case work in a range of disciplines. The results of such trials are thoroughly reviewed, with a view to further improvements in case work procedures; in 1986 a general review of the quality assurance arrangements concluded that they were effective and economical.

These are supplemented, first, by regular inspections of the major Departments of each laboratory by senior officers from other laboratories in the service, and, secondly, by a scientific advisory group, chaired by Sir Ronald Mason FRS, and comprising eminent scientists, which was established in 1986, to advise the service on the development of its scientific standards.

Linked to the efforts to improve the quality of the service's work is an extensive training programme at the service's training unit at Birmingham. This provides an induction course for all newly appointed scientific staff; courses on specific techniques and instruments; and a course to prepare staff to give evidence in court. In 1987, 214 staff received training at the unit, varying from a day to a week.

Parole

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many convicted rapists have been paroled during the past 10 years; and how many have committed subsequent offences.

Mr. John Patten [holding answer 15 March 1988]: The table shows the numbers of persons with a principal offence of rape who were paroled from determinate sentences (excluding life) between 1977 and 1986, together with the numbers considered. To provide information on the number of these parolees who were reconvicted subsequently, whether for rape or any other offences, would involve disproportionate cost. Since 1983, prisoners given sentences of more than five years for rape have been granted parole, other than in wholly exceptional circumstances, for only a few months towards the end of the sentence where this seems likely to reduce the long-term risk of reoffending.

Prisoners serving determinate sentences for rape who were considered for parole: by outcome, 1977-86

Number of persons

	Considered for parole	Released on parole[1]
1977	374	137
1978	385	170
1979	390	149
1980	445	211
1981	496	253
1982	359	146
1983	422	186
1984	489	213
1985	545	201
1986	587	177

Juvenile Boys

Mr. Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what changes he proposes to make to the arrangements for the remand in custody of juvenile boys.

Mr. John Patten [holding answer 29 February 1988]: It is the Government's policy, consistent with the terms of the Bail Act 1976, that remands in custody should be restricted to those cases where they are unavoidable, given all the circumstances of the case. There is a particularly strong argument for keeping untried juveniles out of custody wherever possible, especially when they might otherwise have to be held in an overcrowded local prison. The scope for remanding juveniles in custody has been progressively restricted. After careful consideration and having due regard to the need to maintain adequate safeguards for the public, the Government propose to restrict further the circumstances in which juveniles may be remanded in custody.

The only juveniles who may now be remanded in custody are 15 and 16-year-old boys certified by the courts as being too unruly to be safely remanded to local authority care. The unruliness certification procedure is available for two categories of boys; those charged with or previously convicted of an offence of violence or charged with an offence carrying a penalty of at least 14 years imprisonment; and those remanded in care who have persistently absconded or been seriously disruptive. Under the Government's proposals, the procedure will still be available for 15 and 16-year-old boys but the categories will be narrowed. The first will be limited to boys charged with or previously convicted of an offence carrying a maximum penalty of life imprisonment, the second to those remanded in care who pose a substantial risk to themselves or others. Certain other changes to the procedure are also proposed. The changes will reduce the numbers of juveniles remanded in custody, while ensuring that the courts retain all necessary powers for the protection of the public. The details of the proposals are set out in a consultation paper published today.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Irish Republic (British Ambassador)

Mr. McCusker: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many times the British ambassador to the Irish Republic has been called to the Department of Foreign Affairs in Dublin during the past three months; and what matters the Government of the Irish Republic expressed concern about.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: The British ambassador to the Republic of Ireland regularly visits the Department of Foreign Affairs, at his request or at that of the Department. A variety of subjects of interest to both Governments have been raised at these meetings. He has been summoned to the Department only once in the past three months, to discuss the operation of the Prevention of Terrorism Act on 7 March.

Consultative Documents

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy that responses received to consultative documents issued by his Department be made publicly available in his Department's library, except where the respondent has specifically asked that this not be done; and if he will arrange for this procedure to be made clear when future consultative documents are issued.

Mr. Eggar: Although Foreign and Commonwealth Office consultative documents are few in number we have a clear policy to make as much information available as possible while preserving the confidentiality essential to the effective working of Government.

NATO (Brussels Demonstration)

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has regarding the arrest of 14 British citizens in Brussels during a demonstration outside the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation headquarters on 2 March; and if he will make representations to his counterpart in Belgium regarding the conditions of their detention.

Mr. Eggar: A group of British citizens were taken into custody by the Brussels town police on 2 March 1988 and held for between eight and 10 hours. They were detained under normal police procedures for reasons of security and public order.

We have no evidence to suggest that their conditions of detention were different from those which a Belgian citizen could expect if detained in similar circumstances.

Nuclear Materials

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has as to the evidence given on 10 March, by the EEC Energy Commissioner to the European Parliament special inquiry committee on nuclear materials mismanagement in the EEC, on the specific current location and present safeguard arrangements for (a) 180 kg of United Kingdom origin civil plutonium exported to Belgium under an agreement of 3 May 1968, and (b) 200 kg of United Kingdom civil origin plutonium exported to NUKEM, at Hanun in the Federal Republic of Germany under an agreement dated 4 August 1969.

Mr. Mellor: As far as we are aware, no evidence was given on either of these exports.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he possesses on the statement and hearing by the EEC Environment Commissioner before the European Parliament special inquiry committee into nuclear waste and nuclear materials transport in the EEC, held at Strasbourg on 10 March.

Mr. Mellor: Mr. Clinton Davies, Commissioner for the Environment, stated that the Commission had so far found no irregularities in the mode of transport or of the containers used in the transport of radioactive material between Belgium and Federal Germany and Commission experts had found that the radioactivity of discharges from Mol had remained within Community public health limits. However, there had been irregularities in the labelling and recording of nuclear waste sent from Mol and the Commission would now consider the need for Community legislation in this area.

DEFENCE

Soviet Missiles

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what evidence he has, and from what source, of Soviet development of tactical air-launch cruise missiles; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The Soviet Union deploys a wide range of tactical air-launched cruise missiles and continues to develop new and more advanced weapons systems of this type. It would not be in the interests of security to comment on the source of this information.

Soviet Territorial Waters

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what arrangements he has made to ensure that British vessels do not sail within Soviet territorial waters without authority; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The commanding officers of Royal Navy vessels are, of course, made fully aware of our obligations under international law and are issued with such other instructions as are considered appropriate for the areas to which they may be deployed. The details of such instructions are classified.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he has had with his NATO allies to ensure that none of the member states' vessels sail within Soviet territorial waters without authority; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: My right hon. Friend regularly has discussions with his NATO colleagues on a wide range of defence matters of mutual interest. It is not our general practice to disclose the details of such discussions.

South Atlantic

Mr. John M. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the conduct of the recent military exercise in the South Atlantic.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Exercise Fire Focus, designed to practise the reinforcement of the Falkland Islands, is still in progress, and it would be premature to comment on its conduct.

French Defence Minister

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on his most recent discussion with his French counterpart on matters of mutual interest.

Mr. Ian Stewart: When my right hon. Friend met M. Giraud in the context of the Anglo-French summit on 29 January they discussed a range of issues including equipment collaboration and European security co-operation. The talks were a valuable continuation of the close bilateral dialogue which we enjoy with France on defence matters.

Falkland War Widows

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has any plans to review the benefits paid by his Department to Falkland war widows: and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: I have no plans to do so.

HMS Resolution

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will place in the Library a copy of the report on the causes of the electrical malfunction affecting the cooling system of the nuclear reactor of the submarine HMS Resolution on 26 January.

Mr. Ian Stewart: No. Since it is not generally our practice to comment on matters affecting the operation of Her Majesty's submarines, the report in question will be classified.

Binary Munitions

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he has had with his North Atlantic Treaty Organisation counterparts regarding the deployment of binary munitions in western Europe.

Mr. Ian Stewart: My right hon. Friend has regular discussions with his NATO counterparts on a full range of defence issues. I have nothing further to add to the reply of my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for the Armed Forces to the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen) on 24 July 1986 at column 490.

Armed Forces (Shooting Inquiry)

Sir John Biggs-Davison: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the normal procedure of inquiry when someone is killed or injured as a result of opening of fire by a member of the armed forces.

Mr. Freeman: Cases of death or serious injury in the United Kingdom as a result of a service man opening fire would normally be investigated by the civil police and, in the case of death, by a coroner's inquest. The services would, of course, co-operate with the civil authorities in these investigations. The procedure for the investigations of incidents overseas will depend upon the jurisdictional arrangements that apply in the country concerned.

The form of any separate service inquiry would depend on the cirumstances of the particular incident. Where one was required the service police would carry out an initial investigation which would, if necessary, be followed by a service board of inquiry.

SCOTLAND

Scottish Development Agency

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the total expenditure in cash terms and at constant 1988 prices of the Scottish Development Agency on the tourism industry in each year since the establishment of the Scottish Development Agency; and what percentage these figures represent of the total expenditure of the Scottish Development Agency in each of these years.

Mr. Lang: The Scottish Development Agency's activity in tourism is concerted with the Scottish Tourist Board, the Highlands and Islands Development Board and other interested bodies in Scotland. The agency has provided loan and equity finance for tourism projects which meet its normal investment criteria, and has also funded tourist projects under the local enterprise grants for urban projects scheme and the programme for rural initiatives and developments. Expenditure on tourist projects from these sources is as follows:

Expenditure on tourism by SDA

	Cash terms £ million	Per cent. SDA expenditure	Real terms £ million	Per cent. SDA expenditure
1983-84	0·143	0·17	0·170	0·17
1984-85	0·240	0·3	0·273	0·3
1985-86	0·235	0·3	0·253	0·3
1986-87	4·62	6·4	4·82	6·4

The above table represents 14 investments. Prior to 1983-84 separate figures were not kept. In addition, the SDA funds feasibility studies, land engineering and property development projects which may have a tourist element.

Infertility

Mr. McTaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will instigate a survey by the Scottish Home and Health Department into the extent of infertility in Scotland and the case for increased staff at infertility clinics in each health board area.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Government have for some time recognised the importance of developments in the alleviation of infertility. We shall consider the need for a review of infertility services in Scotland when consideration has been completed of the Warnock report on human fertilisation and embryology.

Acute Surgical Beds

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the number of acute surgical beds in each hospital in each health board in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information requested is given in the table.

Under-Sixes (Education)

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will make a statement on the provision of education for the under-sixes;

(2) what was the cost of producing the review of education provision for the under six-year-olds prior to its abandonment;

(3) why his Department cancelled the review of education provision for the under six-year-olds; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The review was discontinued to allow resources to be concentrated on more urgent matters. Work on it formed part of the overall functions undertaken by Her Majesty's inspectorate of schools and professional staff in the social work services group, and was not separately costed. I see no case at present for changing the existing arrangements under which regional and Islands councils have discretion over the extent and content of provision for pre-school children.

Fife Health Board

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the number of (a) physiotherapists, (b) speech therapists, (c) radiographers, (d) chiropodists, (e) occupational therapists, (f) dieticians and (g) laboratory technicians employed by Fife health board in the last five years for which information is available; and what current vacancies, if any, there are.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information requested on numbers of staff employed by Fife health board is shown in the table. The number of vacancies is not available centrally.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the members of Fife health board, their respective dates of appointment and their respective periods of appointment.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I refer the hon. Member to my reply of 3 November 1987 at columns 687-8 to the hon. Member for Cumbernauld and Kilsyth (Mr. Hogg). All members of Fife health board are currently on four-year periods of appointment.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list (a) the capital expenditure and (b) the revenue expenditure incurred by Fife health board in the last five years for which information is available; and what is the projected capital and revenue expenditure in the current year.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information is as follows:

Kidney Dialysis

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many patients are currently undergoing kidney dialysis, by each health board area.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This information is not available in the form requested. Only five health boards provide renal dialysis services. The number of patients being treated by the various forms of dialysis by each of those boards at 31 December 1986 is as follows:

	Number
Grampian	59
Greater Glasgow	384
Highland	24
Lothian	147
Tayside	74
	688

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many patients are awaiting kidney dialysis, by each health board area.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: All patients who are referred to consultants for treatment for end-stage renal failure receive renal dialysis timeously provided that it is the consultant's clinical judgment that they would benefit from it.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what is the average number of nurses available for each kidney dialysis machine in each health board area;

(2) what is the percentage of time that kidney dialysis machines are either being used or are being prepared for use in each health board area.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This information is not centrally available.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he intends to provide extra funding to provide for nursing staff to allow the kidney dialysis machines at Edinburgh Western general infirmary to operate at maximum capacity.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: For 1988-89 Lothian health board has been allocated £266·427 million for net revenue expenditure on hospital and community health services, an increase of 5·3 per cent. over the equivalent figure for 1987-88. It is for individual boards, in the light of their knowledge of local needs, to decide on the provision of particular services and priorities between services. I understand that the board is preparing a report on the future provision of renal services in their area and that some neighbouring boards are also considering provision of this service.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many kidney dialysis machines there are in each health board area; and in which hospitals.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Information on the number of kidney dialysis machines in hospital use is not available centrally. Hospitals with renal units where dialysis is carried out are listed below. Many patients are dialysed outside hospital, either on a machine in their home or using the continuous peritoneal ambulatory dialysis technique. My officials are at present considering the geographic coverage provided by the service.

Private Hospitals

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, further to his reply of 24 February, Official Report, column 237, which health boards have met which private hospital operators.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This information is not available centrally.

Public Appointments

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in the Official Report all public and quasi-public body appointments for which he is responsible.

Mr. Rifkind: The bodies to which I make appointments are listed in "Public Bodies—1987" which is available in the Library of the House.

Forestry

Sir Hector Monro: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether any modifications to the Government's forestry policy policy are envisaged as a result of the changes to the forestry tax and grant arrangements announced by the Chancellor of the Exchequer in his Budget Statement.

Mr. Rifkind: The changes to the tax and grant arrangements announced by my right hon. Friend are designed to provide a simpler and more widely acceptable system of support for private forestry. There has not, however, been any fundamental change in the Government's policy for encouraging forestry, in an environmentally acceptable way. This is reflected in the Forestry Commission's statutory duty to endeavour to achieve a reasonable balance between forestry and environmental considerations.

My right hon. Friends, the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and the Secretary of State for Wales, and I remain of the view that a healthy forestry industry is in the national interest and that long term confidence in both forestry and wood processing industries in this country is fully justified. Last year in the context of new policies for alternative land use we announce an expansion of the forestry programme to 33,000 hectares of new planting a year, with particular emphasis on the private sector and with due regard to environmental considerations. The planting of a higher proportion of trees on low ground of better quality was also to be encouraged.

These policies remain unchanged, and to this end planting grants will be substantially increased. The expansion of planting in recent years has led to a significant and welcome growth in the United Kingdom of a modern wood processing industry through developments such as the Shotton Paper Company in Wales and Caledonian Paper in Scotland. The industry will in turn help to meet the growing demand for wood products and, together with the new planting programme, this will ensure that forestry contributes to employment in rural areas. Increased planting on better land will also provide an alternative to agricultural production and thereby assist in the reduction of agricultural surpluses.

4. The environmental effects of the changes will be positive for a number of reasons. First, the new arrangements for Government financial assistance for planting will strengthen the careful scrutiny and consultation procedures undertaken by the Forestry Commission, because it is very unlikely that any sizeable scheme will go ahead unless the commission has approved it for grant purposes. In considering applications the commission will continue to observe its published management guidelines relating to broadleaved woodland and will introduce similar guidelines for all types of woodland as part of the new scheme. Its procedures for dealing with applications for planting grants should thus gain in effectiveness as a means of controlling the environmental impact of forestry and ensure that the right trees are planted in the right places.

5. Second, the increased planting grants will incorporate a substantial differential in favour of broadleaved planting, so that the share of broadleaves in total planting can be expected to continue to increase. Third, there will be a new supplement for planting on arable or improved grassland. Full details of a new Forestry Commission grant scheme reflecting these new arrangements will be announced next week.

6. Finally, the increased grants will be available for replanting in existing forest areas. In considering applications for replanting grants the Forestry Commission will follow policies which are designed to convert forests of an even age into attractive and more varied landscapes with a mixture of types and ages of tree.

7. The changes that have been announced, together with the new grant scheme to be announced next week, are designed to encourage the achievement of the Government's aims for forestry in a manner which is acceptable in environmental and land use terms and which appeals to a wider range of interests. Forestry has an important role to play in the well being of this country. The industry has the support of this Government and has an assured future.

8. My right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for the Environment, is today making a separate announcement on behalf of my right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and himself, about environmental guidance on the approval of grant applications for afforestation in England.

Job Training Scheme (Dundee)

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give for the Manpower Services Commission area manpower board covering Dundee, the most recent monthly statistics for new JTS showing entrants in the latest available period, and the number of cumulative entrants since the scheme started and a breakdown of entrants which shows how many were male and female, the length of time they had been out of work, their ethnic backgrounds and whether or not they had any disabilities.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 10 March 1988]: The new job training scheme figures for Grampian and Tayside area manpower board are given in the table.

Labour Statistics

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give, for each of the last 10 years, the total number of long-term unemployed in each travel-to-work area and jobcentre area in Tayside, indicating the resultant fall since the introduction of the restart programme.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 10 March 1988]: Table 1 shows the number of people unemployed for six months or more in travel-to-work areas in Tayside in January of each year since 1979.

Table 2 shows the number of people unemployed for six months or more in jobcentre areas in Tayside in January each year from 1979 to 1985. Figures by jobcentre areas are not available after 1985.

Due to the various changes which have taken place in the compilation of the statistics during the period, the figures are not directly comparable.

It is not possible to determine how many unemployed claimants left the count as a direct result of the restart programme, which began in Dundee in January 1986 and was extended nationally in July 1986.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give for the Manpower Services Commission area manpower board covering Dundee, the most recent monthly statistics for new JTS showing (i) the number of trainees in the latest available period who entered work placements, (ii) the cumulative total of how many are in work places at the latest available date, (iii) trainees who left the scheme in the latest available period, and (iv) the number of cumulative leavers since the scheme started.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give for the Manpower Services Commission area manpower board covering Dundee, the most recent monthly statistics for new JTS showing for all those trainees who have left the scheme how many (i) found work, (ii) failed to attend, (iii) went on to another course of training or education, (iv) completed the course, (v) left for sickness and (vi) went back into unemployment; and what is the total number of currently filled places.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 10 March 1988]: This information is not available. An independent follow-up survey to collect data on the destination of trainees leaving the new job training scheme has been commissioned and the results are expected to be available in the next few months.

There are currently 277 trainees on new JTS in the Grampian and Tayside area manpower board area.

EMPLOYMENT

Benefit Fraud

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the estimated cash saving accrued to his Department in the last year as a result of the activities of his Department's benefit fraud investigators in the Seaham and Peterlee areas during that period; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: The estimated gross benefit saving from my Departments investigation work in the Seaham and Peterlee areas in 1987 is £232,000.

Jobcentres

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will establish a jobcentre at the business efficiency centre on the Isle of Dogs.

Mr. Lee: The area is already covered by jobcentres at Poplar and in the library building on the Isle of Dogs. We are currently considering whether any changes to the facilities are needed to improve the services to unemployed people in the area. If we do decide to relocate our jobcentres we would certainly wish to look at a number of possible locations.

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will establish jobcentre facilities for the people of Silvertown and Canning Town.

Mr. Lee: Silvertown and Canning Town are already well covered by our Plaistow jobcentre. This office deals with all jobseekers in the E13, E6 and E16 postal areas.

Thames Flood Plains

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will place a copy of the Thames water authority's map of the river Thames flood plains in the Library.

ENERGY

Nuclear Reactors (Decommissioning)

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what representations he has received regarding the ending of Central Electricity Generating Board participation in research programmes into decommissioning nuclear reactors.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The UKAEA is in touch with my Department about the implications of the CEGB's position.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many nuclear reactors he estimates will be decommissioned before the year 2000; and which ones they will be.

Mr. Michael Spicer: This is a matter for the Central Electricity Generating Board. I have asked the chairman to write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether the conduct of research into the decommissioning of nuclear reactors will be a managerial matter for the appropriate privatised electricity generation company.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Yes. Other organisations may of course also wish to undertake research into decommissioning.

Electricity Distribution

Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what representations he has received regarding the monopolistic position of electricity distribution boards; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: My right hon. Friend and I have received representations on numerous aspects of electricity distribution. As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State told the House on 25 February 1988, the distribution of electricity is largely a natural monopoly, in which it would not be economic to duplicate resources.

However, it will be possible for adjacent distribution companies to compete with one another to supply large users near their common borders, and there will be scope for large users to buy their supplies direct from generators. There is, in addition, substantial room for competition in the generation of electricity by power stations.

Uranium (Imports)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) for what purpose natural uranium was imported from Durban to Southampton on 28 February 1987; and if that material was under safeguards arrangements;

(2) what is the final destination and intended end-use of the uranium hexafluoride from Houston, received at Felixstowe on 22 April 1987; and if this material is under safeguards arrangements;

(3) for what purpose natural uranium was imported from Houston to Felixstowe on 15 May 1987; and if this uranium was under safeguards arrangements;

(4) for what purpose yellow cake uranium was imported from Houston to Liverpool on 17 June 1987; and if this material was under safeguards arrangements;

(5) for what purpose natural uranium was imported from Houston to Felixstowe on 24 June 1987; and if this material was covered by safeguards arrangements;

(6) for what purpose yellow cake uranium was imported from New Orleans to Felixstowe on 7 September 1987; and if this material was covered by safeguards arrangements;

(7) for what purpose uranium hexafluoride was imported from New Orleans to Felixstowe on 2 December 1987; and if this material was under safeguards arrangements;

(8) for what purpose natural uranium was imported from Savannah, Georgia, to Felixstowe on 2 December 1987; and if this material was covered by safeguards arrangements.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Uranium imported on the dates specified by the hon. Member was for processing in plants operated by British Nuclear Fuels plc. All material processed by BNFL for civil purposes is under safeguards.

Magnox Reactors

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will call for a report from (i) the Central Electricity Generating Board in the United Kingdom and (ii) the Health and Safety Executive's Nuclear Installations Inspectorate about what implications the closure of the Magnox reactor at Latina in Italy has for the British Magnox programme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on Thursday 10 March 1988 at column 349.

Mr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what information he has on the statement made by the EEC Environment Commissioner before the European Parliament on 9 March in Strasbourg concerning the applicability of Euratom treaty article 34 to present Central Electricity Generating Board plans to conduct safety tests on their Magnox reactors.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I have noted the points made by the Commissioner.

Regional Electricity Boards (Credit Sale Agreements)

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will publish in the Official Report what information he has on the real rates of interest charged by each of the regional electricity boards in England and Wales on credit sale agreements.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The setting of interest rates on credit sales agreements is a matter for the electricity industry. I have asked the chairman of the Electricity Council to write to my hon. Friend.

Oil and Gas Projects

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list the oil and gas projects in the North sea waiting for annex B approval; and if he will give the dates since which each of these projects has been waiting approval.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The Department is currently discussing with operators 16 North sea developments (new fields and incremental projects). Examination of development plans is undertaken on a confidential basis. I am unable to specify which projects are under consideration, and, as I said in my reply of 18 January 1988, column 506, it is not my practice to comment on timing.

Nuclear Materials

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on his Department's policy towards submitting evidence to the European Parliament committee of inquiry on nuclear materials safeguards in the European Economic Community, with particular regard to the managing and packaging of nuclear materials sent from the United Kingdom to Mol in Belgium and Hanau in the Federal Republic of Germany.

Mr. Michael Spicer: No request for evidence has been received by my Department.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what information he possesses on the statement, and subsequent cross-examination, of the EEC Energy Commissioner before the European Parliament special inquiry committee into nuclear materials mismanagement and transport in the EEC held in Strasbourg on 10 March.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Mr. Mosar, Commissioner for Energy, made a presentation to the committee stating that following re-examination of previous checks on nuclear material at Hanau and Mol, the Commission had found no evidence of illegal exports. Mr. Mosar noted that the International Atomic Energy Agency had reached the same conclusion.

Nuclear Accidents

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what national plan he has for dealing with a Chernobyl type accident in Britain.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The Chernobyl accident occurred because of a combination of design weaknesses in the reactor system, as the Russians themselves acknowledged, and deliberate failures of staff to observe prescribed safety procedures. The Chernoblyl reactor was of a completely different design from any operating in, or proposed for, the United Kingdom.

The precautions taken in the design and construction of nuclear installations in this country, and the very high standards applied in operating and maintaining them, make it highly unlikely that accidents will occur which might significantly affect the public. But, however remote that possibility, Her Majesty's nuclear installations inspectorate requires, as a condition of its site licences, that emergency plans are prepared and tested regularly in exercises. The Health and Safety Executive believes that a balance needs to be struck between detailed plans that are sufficiently extensive to cope with a serious accident and the unjustified use of resources involved in planning for improbable accidents.

Plutonium

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if any safeguarded plutonium, originating in the United Kingdom and exported to Belgium since 1979, was sent to the MOL nuclear centre.

Mr. Michael Spicer [holding answer 22 February 1988]: Total exports of safeguarded plutonium sent to the MOL nuclear research centre since 1979 have amounted to significantly less than 1 gram.

ENVIRONMENT

Unused Land

5. Mr. Madel: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will consider further action to improve the performance of local authorities in disposing of unused land.

Mr. Ridley: In replying to my hon. Friend, the Member for Banbury (Mr. Baldry) on 7 March, I said that I intend that local authorities should regularly publish information about the unused and underused land that they own, in order to stimulate improved management of their land and contribute to their public accountability.

Property Advisory Group

17. Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what issues are being investigated by the Property Advisory Group.

Mrs. Roe: The Property Advisory Group provides advice on a wide range of matters relating to land and property development, and is at present examining the problems of vacant land in inner cities.

Forestry

18. Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received about the measures the Government intend to apply to prevent further damage to forests in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Ridley: The Forestry Commission's 1987 survey established a benchmark of tree health, not evidence for damage. This is a point which the few representations my Department has received on the topic fail to understand.

Forestry (Grants)

Mr. Gow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what environmental guidance the Government propose to give to the Forestry Commission about the approval of grant applications for afforestation in England.

Mr. Ridley: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland is making a general statement about forestry policy in Great Britain in the light of the Budget changes. Both in its own forestry operations and in considering applications for planting grants, the Forestry Commission has statutory duty to endeavour to achieve a reasonable balance between forestry and environmental considerations. In cases where the appropriate balance is in doubt, because an objection has been made by the relevant public or local authority and has not been resolved by the commission's regional advisory committee, the commission has since 1974 been directed by forestry Ministers to seek their views before approving the application, or proceeding with the scheme, as the case may be. In England, I am consulted in appropriate cases.

My right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and I have decided that it would be helpful for the Forestry Commission also to have general guidance from the Government about fulfilling its statutory duties in relation to the environment in England. This guidance will be contained in a letter which the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food will be sending to the chairman of the Forestry Commission. The main features of the guidance will be as follows:

A large proportion of the land in England has been used for agriculture as either arable or improved grassland. We therefore attach a high value to conserving, and where necessary restoring, the habitats which the remaining unimproved land provides, including the uplands and ancient woodlands. While we see some scope for broadleaved and mixed woodlands, approval should not normally be given in the uplands of England for new planting which consists predominantly of conifers. The only exception would be small areas where it is clear that such planting would be environmentally acceptable.

The main potential for afforestation in England lies on arable land and improved grassland which may no longer be needed for food production. It has already been decided that the farm woodland scheme should be targeted on land previously in agricultural use. This concept is incorporated in the Farm Land and Rural Development Bill currently before Parliament. The new grant rates will provide additional incentives for the planting of broadleaved trees and for planting on improved land.

In existing forested areas, the granting of felling licences by the Forestry Commission to private owners is normally subject to the condition that replanting should be carried out. In future, however, the Forestry Commission will be expected to follow policies which will convert forests of an even age into attractive and more varied landscapes with a mixture of types and ages of trees.

Water Industry (Privatisation)

19. Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what response he has received from the Water Companies Association about the consultation papers relating to how the present structure of statutory water companies will be safeguarded in any future plans for privatisation.

Mr. Ridley: We are discussing with the association its constructive response to the two papers which outline our proposals for the future of the water companies.

Olympic Games (Funding)

20. Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from the British Olympic Association regarding the funding of high level competitors.

Mr. Moynihan: None.

Rating Reform

21. Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his estimate of the number of single old-age pensioners likely to lose financially from the introduction of the poll tax.

Mr. Howard: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Coventry, South-East (Mr. Nellist) some moments ago.

Opencast Mining

22. Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent representations he has received regarding planning policy in relation to opencast mining.

23. Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to revise further his planning policies towards opencast coal mining; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ridley: The Department issued revised draft guidelines for opencast coal mining for consultation in April last year. We received a number of representations and these are being considered. We propose to publish revised guidelines in the near future.

Nuclear Waste

24. Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from foreign Governments on Britain's nuclear waste disposal programe.

Mr. Moynihan: My right hon. Friend has received no recent representations from foreign Governments on Britain's nuclear waste disposal programme. However, the disposal options currently under consideration have been discussed at various international meetings.

Warrington-Runcorn New Town

25. Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement regarding the progress of Warrington-Runcorn new town in allocating factory space.

Mrs. Roe: Warrington and Runcorn development corporation continues to make good progress in attracting private investment for industrial development. In disposing of development land for new factories, the corporation is required to achieve the best consideration reasonably obtainable.

Homeless Children

26. Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give his estimate of the number of children in homeless accommodation and their approximate length of stay.

Mrs. Roe: This information is not collected by the Department.

Badgers

27. Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent representations he has received concerning the protection of badgers setts.

Mr. Moynihan: We have received a number of representations from right hon. and hon. Members and members of the public on this matter. The badger already receives a substantial degree of protection under the Badgers Act 1973 and the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981, as amended. We have no plans at present to amend the current statutory provisions.

Housing Action Trust

28. Mr. Litherland: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the Housing Action Trust areas.

Mrs. Roe: My right hon. Friend has yet to decide where he intends to seek designation of the first housing action trust areas. We shall announce our proposals while the Housing Bill is before Parliament.

Houses (Asbestos)

29. Mrs. Maureen Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what evidence he has of the number of local authority houses which have been identified as having sufficient asbestos content in their heating systems and service ducts to warrant remedial action.

Mrs. Roe: The joint central and local government working party on asbestos attempted to estimate the extent to which asbestos has been used in local authority properties, including its use in heating systems. The working party concluded that there was insufficient information for a meaningful estimate to be made. Furthermore, my Department and the working party take the view that the amount of asbestos is not an appropriate criterion for deciding on remedial action. Such actions should be based on an assessment of the condition of the asbestos and of its potential to release fibres. This can only be done locally and on a case by case basis.

Local Government Staff

30. Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement about the trends in numbers employed in local government over the last 10 years.

Mr. Howard: The numbers employed in local government fell from a peak of 1,975,200 full-time equivalents in June 1979 to 1,887,200 full-time equivalents in June 1982. There followed a period of relative stability until June 1985. Since then every quarterly survey of the Joint Manpower Watch has shown a year-on-year increase. This increase accelerated and by June 1987 the numbers had risen to 1,923,500 full-time equivalents.

Control over staff numbers should be a routine part of good management in local government. There is certainly scope for substantial staff reductions in local government without any loss in the quality of the services provided.

Local Authority Housing

31. Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give financial incentives to local authorities to build new dwellings for rent for groups in the population with special needs.

Mr. Waldegrave: No. It is for local authorities to determine their own priorities for capital spend. But they may find increasingly that they get better value for money by assisting other providers of housing for rent, including providers of housing for those with special needs, rather than by direct provision themselves.

Council House Sales

32. Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many local authority homes were sold in 1987 (a) to sitting tenants and (b) as empty properties.

Mrs. Roe: English local authorities sold 90,000 homes to sitting tenants and 2,900 vacant dwellings in 1987. In addition, the London residuary body transferred some 5,500 dwellings to Thamesmead Town Limited.

Local Authority Services

33. Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what percentage of work in the services to be put to compulsory tender he estimates will remain in-house once the Local Government Bill becomes law, in (a) Scotland and (b) England and Wales.

Mr. Howard: There is no way of predicting who will be successful in competition. My Department has therefore made no such estimates.

Camden Council

34. Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he last met the leader of Camden council; and what was discussed.

Mr. Chope: On my right hon. Friend's behalf, I met representatives of Camden council, including the leader, Councillor Dykes, on 28 January to discuss my right hon. Friend's proposal for Camden's rate limit for 1988-89.

My hon. Friend the Minister for Housing and Planning also met the council, including Councillor Dykes, on 9 February to discuss homelessness in the borough.

Flying Lessons

35. Mr. Leigh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment under what powers local authorities may provide free flying lessons.

Mr. Chope: Local authorities have powers under section 19 of the Local Government (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act 1976 to provide such recreational facilities as they think fit, inside or outside their area.

London Docklands Development Corporation

36. Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the existing and any known future vacancies in the offices, board or any senior executives of the London Docklands Development Corporation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: There are five vacancies on the LDDC board—for the deputy chairman, the chief executive and one other; and for two members with special knowledge of the locality. The corporation's staffing structure and organisation are matters for the board.

Planning Applications

37. Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proportion of planning applications are approved by his Department, following refusal by local authorities and subsequent appeal.

Mr. Waldegrave: The average planning appeal success rate is currently about 37 per cent.

Derbyshire and Staffordshire County Councils

38. Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what will be the level of rate precept levied by Derbyshire county council and Staffordshire county council in 1988-89.

Mr. Chope: The county precepts in Derbyshire and Staffordshire in 1988-89 will be 297·5p and 215p respectively.

Nirex

39. Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he next intends to meet the chairman of Nirex to discuss matters relating to the management of nuclear waste.

Mr. Moynihan: I refer the hon. Member to the answer my right hon. Friend gave to him on 17 February at column 673.

Empty Council Properties

40. Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his estimate of the number of empty council properties in England.

Mrs. Roe: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Bolton, North-East (Mr. Thurnham) on 28 October 1987 at column 276.

Ozone Layer

41. Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a further statement on recent Government action to protect the ozone layer.

Mr. Moynihan: I refer to the answer I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Argyll and Bute (Mrs. Michie).

Rate Support Grant

42. Mr. Butterfill: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether his provisional rate support grant settlement for 1988-89 took account of the cost of meeting the teachers' pay awards.

Mr. Chope: Yes.

Conservation Areas (Building Demolition)

43. Mr. Eastham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any proposals for bringing demolition of buildings in conservation areas under the control of the planning system; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: Most demolitions of any significance already require conservation area consent under the Town and Country Planning Act 1971. Similarly demolitions of listed buildings require listed building consent.

Waste Disposal

44. Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the public health implications of his decision to leave to the discretion of local authorities whether they collect or dispose of waste from non-domestic premises; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: The decisions on the classification of commercial and industrial waste reflect the existing collection practices of the majority of local authorities. Because of this, we do not believe that the decisions on classification carry any public health implications.

Homeless People

45. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what consideration he has given to ways of relaxing the duties of local authorities with respect to homeless persons; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Roe: My right hon. Friend has no plans to amend the duties of local authorities towards the homeless. But we do not rule out discussing with them ideas about the way they are carried out.

51. Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many homeless families have been placed in bed-and-breakfast accommodation in England and Wales in the current year so far; and what is his latest estimate of the cost.

Mrs. Roe: At 31 December 1987, the latest quarter for which information is available, there were 10,370 households in bed-and-breakfast accommodation placed there by local authorities in England. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales has responsibility for these matters as they affect the Principality. Information on the number of households placed in bed-and-breakfast accommodation during the financial year 1986-87 and on related expenditure is contained in "Homelessness Statistics, 1986-87 Actuals" published by the Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy, copies of which are in the Library.

Empty Council Houses

46. Mr. Fallon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will initiate legislation concerning empty council houses.

69. Mr. Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will be tabling amendments to the Housing Bill requiring local authorities to make better use of empty properties.

Mr. Waldegrave: I am considering whether to introduce legislation to make better use of empty local authority dwellings.

Nitrogen Emissions

47. Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment why, at a United Nations meeting on nitrogen emissions in February, his officials supported a draft agreement which would only freeze nitrogen oxide emissions at the current level by the end of the 1990s; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: A draft agreement in the terms described by the hon. Gentleman was not raised at the February meeting of the United Nations Economic Commission for Europe working group on nitrogen oxides. Negotiations are proceeding on a protocol to the UNECE convention on long-range transboundary air pollution, on the reduction of nitrogen oxide emissions. The United Kingdom is playing a full part in these negotiations, along with other parties to the convention, and I hope that early agreement will be reached.

Veterinary Premises (Waste)

48. Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will outline the reasons for his proposal to classify clinical waste from veterinary premises as industrial, rather than commercial waste.

Mr. Moynihan: Clinical waste arises in many different circumstances and we do not think it appropriate to lay an additional duty on local authorities to collect it, which would be the effect of classification as commercial waste. At present, the majority of authorities do not collect clinical waste and do not have the facilities to do so. Classification as industrial waste enables authorities which currently collect clinical waste from veterinary practices to continue to do so.

Defective Housing

49. Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what further financial support he will offer to local authorities with defective housing.

Mrs. Roe: The annual housing investment programme allocations take into account local authorities' needs for expenditure under the housing defects legislation. Those authorities with particular housing defects problems have also been able to bid for a share of the £20 million reserve put aside nationally for 1988-89. My right hon. Friend expects to decide these additional allocations within the next few weeks.

Density Planning Controls

50. Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to seek to change the existing density planning controls available to local authorities under town and country planning legislation.

Mr. Waldegrave: No. Density policies are a matter for local planning authorities and should normally be contained in their development plans. They should have sound planning justification. My Department's advice is that county structure plans should give general guidance on the densities expected; more detailed density policies are a matter for local plans. Where planning decisions are based on those policies, they should be well reasoned if they are to be secure against successful appeal.

Sports Policy

52. Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will next meet the chairman of the Sports Council to discuss issues affecting sports policy during the coming year.

Mr. Moynihan: I meet regularly the chairman of the Sports Council to discuss issues affecting sports policy. I have met him on two occasions recently, on 3 March and 8 March, and I look forward to seeing him at other times in the near future.

M20 (Hollingbourne)

53. Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many representations he has received on the planning implications of the proposal to site a motorway service area at Hollingbourne on the M20.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Department of Transport's and Esso Petroleum Company Limited's proposals to construct a motorway service area on the same site on the M20 at Hollingbourne were considered at a public local inquiry held last month. Fifty two representations on the proposals were received by Maidstone borough council and an additional three by the Department. Others may have been made at the inquiry, but until the inspector's report is received I am unable to say how many representations were made on planning grounds.

District Councils

54. Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he next intends to meet the representatives of district councils as planning authorities; and what he intends to discuss.

Mr. Waldegrave: I met representatives of the Association of District Councils on 2 February, and my hon. Friend the Member for Broxbourne (Mrs. Roe) met the National Development Control Forum on 18 February. No further meetings are fixed at present, but I have no doubt that they will take place as necessary.

Council Housing Accounts

55. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement about the treatment of balances in council housing accounts.

Mrs. Roe: In 1980 we removed from local authorities the restriction on the extent of credit balances for which they could budget in housing revenue accounts. We also permitted transfers of part or the whole of any balance to the general rate fund, a counterpart to the existing discretion to make contributions from the rate fund to the HRA. The obligation to make good any deficit in the HRA has not been altered. We are currently reviewing the financial regime for local authority housing.

Planning Gain Deals

56. Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if, in the light of the Royal Opera House case, he will review current planning legislation, with particular reference to the effect of planning gain deals on approved local plans.

Mr. Waldegrave: General policy guidance on planning gain is given in the Department's circular 22/83. We are considering whether any change is needed to the current legislation.

Rates

57. Mr. Stevens: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will meet members of the Association of County Councils to discuss the level of rates in the coming financial year.

Mr. Chope: The Association of County Councils will have an opportunity to discuss this with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State at the next meeting of the Consultative Council on Local Government Finance.

Rating Reform

71. Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he intends to respond to the recent paper issued by the Association of London Authorities on its preferred alternative to the community charge.

Mr. Howard: I do not intend to comment in detail on the ALA's suggestions, which I assume are directed primarily towards helping the Labour party find a local government finance policy. The Government's own proposals are presently before Parliament and received a large majority in this House on Second Reading.

I have, however, noted that the ALA advocates a combination of domestic rates and local income tax. Such a system would fail to provide accountability, be very volatile, produce big changes in Bills, and be extremely complicated and expensive to administer.

65. Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the estimated financial effect of the introduction of the community charge on a pensioner living on his own in (a) Stockport and (b) England and Wales as a whole.

Mr. Howard: In England and Wales as a whole we estimate that 80 per cent. of single pensioners living alone would have gained if the community charge had been introduced in full on the basis of 1987-88 local authority spending. Projections for individual local authority areas are not possible because of the limitations of the sample survey data on which the estimate is based.

Homelessness

58. Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he is taking to reduce the demand on homeless accommodation provided by the London borough of Newham.

Mrs. Roe: We are encouraging Newham to return to use as many as possible of its 2,500 empty dwellings by a combination of improved management and better targeting of resources. In 1987 we increased the HIP allocation by £1·2 million to enable 67 voids to be returned to use and provide 103 hostel places, all for homeless families. For 1988-89 we have increased Newham's initial HIP allocation to over £18 million with a further £3 million resources in prospect for estate action schemes.

Rate Increases

59. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what further research he intends to commission into the possible correlation between rate increases and job losses; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: I have no doubt that the excessive rates imposed by some councils can have serious consequences for employment opportunities. Many cases have been drawn to my attention where high business rates are reported to have affected the location of investment and employment by individual firms. The national non-domestic rate will soon be in place which will prevent high levels of business rates and damaging year-to-year variations. My right hon. Friend has no plans at the moment to commission further research into the correlation between rate increases and job losses.

Hampstead Heath

60. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will outline his Department's policies to safeguard the future of Hampstead heath.

Mr. Chope: The London residuary body will shortly be making recommendations to my right hon. Friend as to the future ownership and management of the heath. In accordance with undertakings given during the passage of the Local Government Act 1985, my right hon. Friend's policy is to ensure that Hampstead heath is managed as an entity.

Lambeth (Housing Investment Programme)

61. Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the housing investment programme allocation for Lambeth for 1988-89.

Mrs. Roe: The initial HIP allocation for 1988-89 is £29·4 million but there is a possibility of further allocations in support of estate action schemes.

Hooliganism

62. Mr. John Carlisle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he is considering recommending to the football authorities any further measures to combat hooliganism; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: I hold regular meetings with the football authorities. Measures to combat hooliganism are under continuous review.

Land Register

63. Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the area of land on the Land Register; and what was the area in 1983.

Mr. Trippier: On 29 February 1988 the registers of unused and underused land owned by public bodies contained details of 90,000 acres of such land. At the end of February 1983, details of 108,000 acres were recorded.

Horses (Breeding, Keeping and Stabling)

64. Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has for redesignating the breeding and keeping of horses and associated stabling as an agricultural activity for planning purposes.

Mr. Waldegrave: We have at present no proposals for altering the extent to which the general development order exempts development involving horses from the need for specific planning permission. Breeding and keeping horses for the working of the land or as agricultural livestock is not development for the purposes of the planning Acts.

Parliamentary Bills (Planning Permission)

66. Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many parliamentary Bills his Department has introduced in the last five years in relation to the construction of projects which would normally require planning permission; and what is his policy towards the use of legislation, rather than the planning system for this purpose.

Mr. Waldegrave: My Department does not itself promote private Bills. A private Bill may usually only be used as a means of securing planning permission (by virtue of class XII of the Town and Country Planning General Development Order 1977) if the scheme requires other authorisations which only Parliament can provide. If such a Bill is required, it is reasonable for Parliament to consider the planning issues at the same time. These matters are among those at present being considered by the Joint Committee on Private Bill Procedure.

Sheffield (Economic Regeneration)

67. Mr. Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he last met members of Sheffield council to discuss their policies for encouraging economic regeneration.

Mr. Trippier: I met members of Sheffield city council on 7 December for this purpose. Also I was in Sheffield earlier this week to announce that the Secretary of State is setting up an urban development corporation in the lower Don Valley area. This will make a major contribution towards urban regeneration.

Merseyside Urban Development Corporation

68. Mr. Day: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress has been made by Merseyside urban development corporation in regenerating the urban development corporation area.

Mr. Trippier: In 1981 the Merseyside development corporation was charged with the regeneration of 865 acres of derelict and disused docklands. Progress has been spectacular: 380 acres of land have been reclaimed; 1·5 million sq ft of buildings have been refurbished including the Albert dock, the largest collection of grade 1 listed buildings in the country. Factory units have been provided in Bootle and in particular at the Brunswick business park in the south docks where 500,000 sq ft has been let. Over 1,600 jobs have been created, 1,100 safeguarded and another 1,000 jobs provided on construction and related projects. Two hundred and forty residential flats are being provided by refurbishment and conversion schemes in partnership with the private sector at Albert dock and Wapping warehouse, another historic listed building. £47 million of private sector investment has been secured with another £67 million in the pipeline. In seven years MDC has transformed its area and the Secretary of State's announcement on 7 March to extend the designated area will enable a larger area of Liverpool and Wirral to benefit from MDC's direct and determined approach.

Council House Starts

70. Mr. Haynes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many council homes were started in 1987; and how many were completed.

Mrs. Roe: Provisional figures of local authority and new town house-building in 1987 appear in table 3 of this Department's press release No. 68 issued on 5 February, a copy of which is available in the Library.

Urban Initiatives

72. Mr. Andrew Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his Department's budget in the next financial year for urban initiatives.

Mr. Trippier: Planned expenditure in 1988-89 on my Department's urban group of programmes totals £593 million. The group includes urban development grant and urban regeneration grant (to be replaced from 2 May by city grant), the urban development corporations, derelict land grant (part of which will be incorporated in city grant) and the urban programme. Provision has also been made for £140 million additional resources for local authorities' estate action schemes, and for £5 million spending by housing action trusts. The level of provision for the urban group, estate action and housing action trusts combined is £120 million higher than in 1987-88.

Local Authority Land

73. Mr. Summerson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will take steps to ensure that every local authority (a) keeps a publicly available register of parcels of all land it owns, (b) is obliged to sell such land at valuation on request unless it proves to his satisfaction a genuine need to retain it for its own use, and (c) shall be forbidden to sell such land to any other public or official bodies without his consent.

Mr. Chope: My right hon. Friend announced on 7 March, at columns 75-76, in response to my hon. Friend the Member for Banbury (Mr. Baldry), that he intends that public bodies should regularly publish information about the unused and underused land they own.

There is immense scope for local authorities to improve the management of their property, including sales of surplus or underused assets particularly to the private sector. The Audit Commission's recent report on property management gives local authorities detailed guidance and I hope that they will follow up the recommendations in the report in the interests of their ratepayers.

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his statement on Wednesday 16 March, Official Report, columns 325-6, in what circumstances local authorities will be allowed to pass land over to a housing association and then to lease back any houses that are built by that housing association.

Mr. Chope: The measures announced on 9 March will not prevent local authorities disposing of land to housing associations or acquiring leases of houses built by housing associations. Prescribed expenditure will, however, now be scored when a lease of three or more years is acquired and authorities which wish to acquire such leases will need to make appropriate provision within their prescribed expenditure limits.

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will list in the Official Report those local authorities which have entered into negotiations on, but have not yet concluded, leaseback schemes with housing associations of the type which will be prevented by the legislation announced in his statement on Wednesday 9 March, Official Report, column 325.

Mr. Chope: Local authorities are not obliged to inform my right hon. Friend that they have entered into, or concluded, negotiations with housing associations and in general do not do so. The information requested is therefore not available.

Tree Preservation Orders

74. Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if in the light of the recent decision of the Court of Appeal, he has plans to introduce legislation to protect councils from claims for compensation from developers in relation to the effect of tree preservation orders, where the proposed development lies outside the Town and Country Planning Acts.

Mr. Moynihan: I understand that the local planning authority concerned are considering whether to petition the House of Lords for leave to appeal against the decision of the Court of Appeal. Until the judicial process is complete in would be inappropriate for me to comment on this issue, but we are keeping in touch with developments.

Council House Rents

Mr. Forth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give the average council house rent for each region of England.

Mrs. Roe: Estimates of the average rents, net of charges for amenities and rates, in each English region were published by the Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy in "Housing Rents Statistics at April 1987," a copy of which is in the Library.

Moorings

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received seeking an explanation of the different treatment of swinging moorings, as defined in the new schedule on Non-Domestic Rating: Exemption to the Local Government Finance Bill, and mooring between piles and in marinas; and what response he has sent.

Mr. Howard: I have received one such representation. The Bill, as amended, preserves the existing exemption from rating for "swinging" moorings consisting of a buoy attached to a weight or anchor. Permanent moorings, including those in marinas or between piles, will continue to be rated unless they are used for a boat which is someone's sole or main residence.

National Rivers Authority

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what responses he has had to date to the proposals to set up the National Rivers Authority; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given on 17 December 1987, at columns 619-21, to my hon. Friend the Member for Banbury (Mr. Baldry). Copies of responses to the consultation paper on the National Rivers Authority, which respondents agreed could be published, were placed in the Libraries of both Houses. Further details of our policy were given in a memorandum issued at the time of the statement. The Public Utility Transfers and Water Charges Bill, which is currently before Parliament, will confer on the water authorities an express power to prepare for privatisation, including preparations for the setting up of the National Rivers Authority. Once the Bill has received Royal Assent, guidelines will be issued to the authorities about the preparation of schemes of organisation.

Beaches (East Anglia)

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress has been made on bringing beaches in East Anglia into line with European Economic Community standards; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: In the Anglian water authority area, 28 waters are identified as within the scope of the bathing water directive (76/160/EEC). Twenty of these waters met the directive's standards in 1986, and provisional results for 1987 suggest that 22 now meet these standards. Major improvement schemes are under way at Great Yarmouth, Heacham and Cromer, and Anglian water authority plans to spend some £18 million over the next four years on schemes related to the improvement of bathing waters.

Rainfall (Radioactive Fallout)

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what measures the Government have now adopted for early detection of rainfall which may be carrying radioactive fallout.

Mr. Moynihan: The Government's proposals for implementing their national response plan for detecting and responding to future nuclear incidents like Chernobyl were published in January (reference: "The National Response Plan and Radioactive Incident Monitoring Network (Rimnet). A Statement of Proposals"). Copies of the statement have been placed in the Library of the House. Annex 3(iv) sets out the proposed procedures for detecting radioactivity in rainwater.

Mortgages

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to the proportion of mortgages which have gone to first-time buyers in inner cities in 1983, 1984, 1985, 1986 and 1987.

Mrs. Roe: The information available is for 42 authorities which are urban programme areas in London and the English metropolitan counties and the four which comprise the county of Cleveland. In these areas, first-time buyers received 58 per cent. of mortgages advanced for house purchase by building societies in 1984, 59 per cent. in 1985, 58 per cent. in 1986 and 53 per cent. in 1987.

Construction Industry

Mr. Kirkhope: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he last met representatives of the construction industry; and what was discussed.

Mr. Ridley: The Under-Secretary of State, my hon. Friend the Member for Rossendale and Darwen (Mr. Trippier), met the group of eight last July when issues of current concern such as work load, training, research and development and inner cities were discussed. In addition, I met construction industry representatives at numerous functions organised by the industry's organisations and institutions over the year.

Water Charges

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he is satisfied that the water authorities are taking sufficient steps to produce a new and fair system of levying charges after the disappearance of rateable values; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: Water authorities are actively considering alternatives to replace the present rateable value basis of water charges. Whatever new methods of charging they decide to introduce will have to comply with the statutory requirements, in section 30 of the Water Act 1973, that in fixing their charges water undertakers must have regard to cost, and must not show undue preference to or undue discrimination against any class of persons.

Water Industry (Privatisation)

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his estimate of the expenditure in preparation for privatisation with regard to the water industry.

Mr. Moynihan: The latest estimates of expenditure in 1987-88 by the Department on preparation for the privatisation of the water authorities are as follows:

DOE staff and office services	760,000
Advisers' Fees	650,000

These figures do not include certain other costs, such as accommodation, which are borne centrally. The first item includes the costs of the present system of financial control of the water authorities.

Information on water authorities' own expenditure in relation to privatisation is not available centrally.

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much aid from the EEC regional fund has been received by the English water authorities in each year since 1980; how many applications are projected for each year until 1993; and whether water authorities will continue to be eligible for such grants before and after the privatisation of the water industry.

Mr. Moynihan: The total amounts of grant aid awarded to English water authorities from the European regional development fund since 1980 are:

1980	13,778,150
1981	16,286,365
1982	18,748,630
1983	26,085,600
1984	31,662,700
1985	17,481,406
1986	84,594,532
1987	48,200,842

I would expect future applications to come forward at broadly the present level. Water authorities will be eligible to apply before and after privatisation.

Rate Support Grant

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will show for each local authority the rate support grant paid in each year since 1979, expressed in (a) cash terms and (b) real terms at 1987-88 prices; and what percentage of the council's total expenditure in each year this represented.

Mr. Ridley [holding answer 15 March 1988]: I have today placed this information in the House of Commons Library.

Government Property

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which Government property assets have been the subject of sale and lease-back agreements with private institutions since 1979.

Mr. Chope: We do not keep records as far back as 1979. But we certainly know of no such cases during the last three years involving properties on the civil estate held in the name of my right hon. Friend.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Rating Reform

76. Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he is now in a position to estimate how many student nurses will be eligible for a rebate under the poll tax.

Mr. Scott: It is not possible to make such an estimate. The details of the community charge rebate scheme have yet to be decided and benefit rates for 1989 (when the community charge is introduced in Scotland) and 1990 (when it is introduced in England and Wales) have not yet been set. Whether individual student nurses will be entitled to rebate will also depend on their resources, their age and family circumstances, and on the level of community charge set by the local authority in the area in which they live.

South East RHA

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what has been the average cost per accident and emergency attendance and per new accident and emergency case in each hospital in the South East regional health authority area in the last year.

Mrs. Currie: The information for 1986-87 in respect of those hospitals in the South East Thames region which undertake treatment of accident and emergency patients is as follows:

NHS (Land)

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the total amount and value of surplus land owned by each district and regional health authority; and how much land has been disposed of by each district and regional health authority between (a) 1974 and 1979 and (b) 1979 and 1987.

Mrs. Currie: The amount of surplus land held and disposed of by regional health authorities in the years in question is as follows:

Region	Surplus Land held as at 31 March 1987 acres	Surplus Land Disposed 1974-75 to 1978-79 acres	1979-80 to 1986-87 acres

Figures for district health authorities and the value of surplus land currently held are not kept centrally.

Cervical Cancer

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the average length of time between screen testing and the attainment of test results relating to cervical cancer in (a) the Northern regional health authority and (b) Sunderland district health authority.

Mrs. Currie: This information is not available centrally. The hon. Member may therefore wish to contact the chairman of the Northern regional health authority for the information he requires.

In the recently issued Health Circular HC(88) on 12 January, we asked health authorities to ensure that laboratories report the results of smear test within one month. Health authorities not meeting this target are asked to explain what action they are taking to remedy the situation.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what new cervical cancer smear tests have been tried by his Department; and how these compare with the effectiveness of the present test systems.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 14 March 1988]: The Department keeps under review all scientific and technological developments that might improve the effectiveness of cervical cancer screening. Its procurement directorate recognises the importance of finding a practical system that will improve routine laboratory examination of cervical smears. Applications for research funding that are endorsed by independent referees as having scientific merit are giving high priority in the competition for funds. The active involvement of British industry is sought to ensure that any potentially successful system can be made commercially available and brought into NHS use as rapidly as possible.

The Government have contributed towards the cost of developing and evaluating several automated systems for cervical cancer screening. In recent months a number of applications have been received by the Department for funds to support other possible developments. These applications were reviewed on 26 February by an expert panel chaired by the Department's chief scientist, Professor O'Grady, and are now receiving final consideration in the light of the panel's views.

Intermediate Treatment Projects

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what the cost of grants to intermediate treatment projects have been since their implementation; how many people have attended intermediate treatment projects; and what he estimates the savings were to the Exchequer of keeping young people on intermediate treatment projects rather than in custody or borstals.

Mrs. Currie: By the end of March 1988 the Department will have made grants to voluntary organisations in England under the intermediate treatment initiative (launched in 1983) totalling some £13·1 million. These grants were to provide intensive schemes of intermediate treatment for young offenders as direct alternatives to care or custodial disposals. One hundred and ten such schemes have been established capable of providing intensive IT programmes for some 3,400 juvenile offenders a year.

Information about the number of young people attending such projects is not held centrally, nor is information available about comparative costs or possible savings. We have commissioned Dr. Martin Knapp (University of Kent) to undertake a research study to evaluate the cost-effectiveness of various forms of intermediate treatment compared with other court disposals, both custodial and non-custodial, but the results of his work are not yet available.

Mental Handicap Services

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what assessment he has made of the value to mental handicap services of improvements in co-ordination and co-operation between various agencies involved, rather than a single agency taking lead responsibility; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: Sir Roy Griffiths addresses the general issue here, among others, in his report on community care published today. As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State said in his reply to the hon. Member, the right hon. Member for Manchester, Wythenshawe (Mr. Morris) and the hon. Member for Ynys Môn (Mr. Jones) on 8 March at column 771, the Government will be considering Sir Roy's proposals, taking account also of the report of the committee chaired by Lady Wagner, and of reactions to both reports; and will bring forward their own proposals in due course. But clearly it will always be important to develop co-ordination and co-operation between the wide range of agencies involved in the provision of care for mentally handicapped people.

Mental Handicap Nurses

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what evaluation has been made by his Department of the contribution of qualified mental handicap nurses to the success of community care initiatives relating to mental handicap and the use of such qualified nurses by local services in these initiatives.

Mr. Newton: Departmentally sponsored evaluations of community care initiatives for mentally handicapped people take account of the contribution by all categories of care and support staff. A recent survey of centrally funded schemes providing alternative health care in the community for long-stay children from mental handicap hospitals pays particular attention to the role of qualified mental handicap nurses, along with other care staff. A copy of this survey "Out of Hospital", by Anne Leonard, department of social policy and social work, University of York, will be placed in the Library.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on his policy with regard to trained mental handicap nurses.

Mr. Newton: The Chief Nursing Officer's letter of 18 December 1985 (CNO(85)5), a copy of which has been placed in the Library, discusses the developing role of mental handicap nurses in the light of the shift to community care and the contribution they can make to the support of people in their own homes or in a range of residential and other settings in the community.

Mental Hospitals

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what information he has regarding district health authorities which have decided on mental hospital closures before the full implementation of appropriate community services;

(2) what guidance he has issued to district general managers concerning the time scale of mental hospital closures in cases where appropriate alternative community services have not been fully implemented.

Mr. Newton: Guidance in the relevant policy paper sent to all districts says:

"New facilities must be available before old facilities are dispensed with."

We do not fix any time scales on closure plans and I am not aware of any health authority which has closed facilities without the provision of appropriate alternative services. We see the closure of mental illness and mental handicap hospitals as a consequence of the current development of comprehensive locally-based community-oriented services and not vice versa.

Maternity Units

Mrs. Rosie Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many general practitioner maternity units have been closed in England since 1983.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 15 March 1988]: Twelve general practitioner maternity units were approved for closure between 1983 and December 1986.

Mentally Ill People (Day Centres)

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list those district health authorities in England and Wales which do not have a day centre for mentally ill people.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 10 March 1988]: Day centres for mentally ill people are usually provided by local authorities. In England only Trafford, Suffolk, Hounslow, Gloucestershire and City of London did not report having day centre places for mentally ill people in 1986. Additionally the following district health authorities in England did not report attendances at mental illness day hospitals in 1986:

Hartlepool
Darlington
Scarborough
North Lincolnshire
West Norfolk and Wisbech
Winchester
Torbay
Herefordshire
Halton
Rochdale
North Tyneside
Northallerton
Dewsbury
Rugby
East Birmingham

However, all except the last five in the list reported attendances at mental illness day facilities at the main hospital in 1986.

Information for Wales is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Teachers of the Deaf

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many teachers from Northern Ireland are being trained as teachers of the deaf; and if he is satisfied that sufficient qualified teachers are available to meet the needs of hearing impaired children in Northern Ireland.

Dr. Mawhinney: Thirteen student teachers are on specialist courses of initial training for teachers of the hearing impaired. In addition, eight serving teachers have engaged over the past two academic years in a range of courses of in-service training.

I am satisfied that sufficient qualified teachers are available.

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what action he has taken in response to the recommendations of the Northern Ireland Assembly report on the education of hearing impaired children (March 1985) concerning the training of teachers of the deaf.

Dr. Mawhinney: Consideration is being given to the best means, in the long term, of providing training in counselling for teachers at one of the training institutions. In the meantime, a short course has been included in the 1988 summer school programme to cater for any immediate demand.

Advertising Costs

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the cost of his Department's advertising campaign currently being screened on television and broadcast on radio.

Dr. Mawhinney: The cost of the present, television only, campaign from its inception on 18 January 1988 to 14 March 1988 is £136,000, including £73,600 for production of the commercial.

The BBC did not use the commercial but did broadcast a supporting public information message on radio and television; only minor production costs were met by the Northern Ireland Office.

War Memorials

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many names of Ulster Defence Regiment members murdered by terrorists have been added to war memorials in Northern Ireland to date.

Mr. Needham: War memorials are the responsibility of individual district council and other bodies and no central records are maintained of the names recorded on them.

University Courses

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what information he has as to how many four-year courses at (a) the University of Ulster and (b) Queen's University, Belfast, have been cut to three-year courses over the past three years.

Dr. Mawhinney: No such reductions have been made at the University of Ulster. Owing to changes in course structure and subject options at Queen's University, it is not possible to provide the information in the form requested.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what information he has as to how many Gaelic-oriented courses exist at (a) the University of Ulster and (b) Queen's University, Belfast; and what increase in the number of such courses has taken place over the last five years.

Dr. Mawhinney: Three at the University of Ulster and six at Queen's University. There has been an increase of three in the last five years.

Single Payments

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many (a) claims for single payments and benefit and (b) appeals currently await decisions arising from claims lodged at Department of Health and Social Security offices in Larne, Carrickfergus and Newtownabbey.

Mr. Needham: At 4 March 1988 the information was as follows:

	Larne	Carrickfergus	Newtownabbey
Single Payments	141	430	816
Supplementary Benefit	18	133	183
Unemployment Benefit	60	96	182
Appeals	7	5	8

Belfast Urban Area Plan

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give his best estimate of the cost of preparation of the Belfast urban area plan including the involvement of staff, consultants, reports, publications and so on; and what additional expenditure he envisages in the process up to the public inquiry.

Mr. Needham: Much of the work on the plan was carried out by officials of the Department of the Environment (NI) over a period of three years, and it is not possible to cost this input without disproportionate effort. Work by consultants up to the commencement of the public inquiry is estimated to cost a total £1·9 million of which £1·2 million relates to transportation. Other costs, including grants to community technical aid, amount to £200,000.

Farmland

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the average price paid per acre for farmland taken into public ownership for the building of Craigavon; how much land was taken; how much was subsequently sold back to its original owners; and what was the average price of the land resold to each category of owner as set out in the legislation to deal with such resales.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 14 March 1988]: Some 6,200 acres of land was vested for Craigavon new town in 1966 at an average price per acre of £650. To date 560 acres of the surplus land has been sold to former owners. The average price of land sold to former owners who are still on the land is £1,565 and the average price for land sold to former owners who left the land is £1,765.

Nurses

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how long the system of 12 hour shifts for nurses has been in operation in the Western health and social services board area; and whether he can give a comparison of wages and salary costs of the personnel involved in the 12 hour shifts as opposed to the previous eight hour shifts.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 14 March 1988]: The 12-hour shift system for nurses in the Western health and social services board has been implemented progressively since the summer of 1986; information on the comparative costs of wages and salaries is not readily available at present but I will write to the hon. Gentleman with this information as soon as possible.

Health and Social Services Boards

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish a table showing for each unit of management in the Eastern, Northern, Southern and Western health and social services boards the number of new beds, the bed complement and the number of permanent bed closures for (i) strategic, (ii) rationalisation and (iii) financial reasons in the last three years.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 14 March 1988]: This information is not available in the form requested.

Ardilea River, County Down

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he will now take urgent steps to designate the Ardilea river, County Down as a salmonid river under the EEC directive 78/759/EEC; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 15 March 1988]: The Ardilea river will be considered along with other rivers for future designation under the EEC directive 78/659/EEC. As I pointed out to the hon. Gentleman on 1 March 1988, at column 524, further disignations will be made as resources permit. I am unable at present to say when further designations will be made.

Road Works Carrickfergus

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, further to his answer of 18 January, Official Report, column 549, when he anticipates work will begin on the shore road between Carrickfergus and Whiteabbey, County Antrim.

Mr. Needham: No start date has been allocated. However, proposals for the work remain in the Department of the Environment's current major works programmes.

Schools and Colleges (Insurance)

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish the arrangements made by Her Majesty's Government for the insurance of (a) controlled schools and colleges, (b) maintained schools and (c) voluntary schools.

Dr. Mawhinney: Property insurance policy is as follows:

Controlled Schools and Colleges

These properties are not insured against fire and special perils which is in line with current Government practice for publicly-owned properties.

Voluntary (including Maintained) Schools

School authorities are required, as a condition for receipt of grant, to insure these properties adequately against fire, flood and other risk.

Electricity (Privatisation)

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what discussions he has had with Northern Ireland Electricity about the privatisation of the company; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Viggers: None as yet. However, NIE is aware of the Government's commitment to the privatisation of the electricity supply industry throughout the United Kingdom and that it is our intention to examine the prospects of privatising NIE after a decision has been taken on the next phase of generating capacity in the Province.

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to publish a White Paper on the privatisation of electricity in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Viggers: None at present. Our immediate priority is the determination of the current competition between Antrim Power Company Limited (a private consortium) and Northern Ireland Electricity for the provision of the next phase of generating capacity in the Province.

TRANSPORT

Motor Cycles (Leg Protectors)

Mr. Beaumont-Dark: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) how many organisations or individuals have notified his Department that they are wholly in favour of the introduction of leg protectors for motor cycles;

(2) how many organisations have been consulted on his proposals to introduce leg protectors on motor cycles;

(3) what extent the research into proposed leg protectors for motor cycles has established that they will not, in the event of accidents, subject the rider to greater danger in terms of injury or death;

(4) if he will make a statement on the extent of the research into leg protectors for motor cycles carried out by his Department, particularly that research relating to the transfer of injuries to parts of the body other than the lower leg.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: A draft specification for leg protectors was sent to 26 organisations for comment. Of the 13 who responded three expressed support for the principle of leg protectors. The TRRL's research which includes over 50 impact tests so far, took as a main objective the avoidance of injuries to other parts of the body, including the head. The specification fully achieves this objective. We are making some detailed amendments in the light of comments received. I will send a video of the tests to my hon. Friend shortly and make a copy available in the Library.

Manchester Airport

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what arrangements have now been made for negotiations with the United States Government on United States carrier access to Manchester international airport; what consideration was given in arranging a date for the negotiations to the letter dated 2 February from Northwest Airlines sent to him by the right hon. Member for Manchester, Wythenshawe; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Officials from the Department of Transport will be meeting a delegation from the United States Government in London tomorrow. The discussions are planned to last two days. All relevant representations were, of course, taken into account in seeking a meeting with the United States Government on this subject.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what emphasis he will be giving, in the impending negotiations between the United Kingdom and United States Governments on United States carrier access to Manchester international airport; to improving access to the United States for British airlines flying from Manchester; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: In negotiating wider access for United States carriers to Manchester international airport, the Government are committed, by the 1985 airports policy White Paper, to securing benefits of equivalent value for United Kingdom carriers in return. British airlines already have substantial opportunities under the United Kingdom/United States air services agreement to serve the United States from Manchester. The emphasis placed on obtaining further improvement access from Manchester must remain a matter to be decided in the course of the negotiations.

Motor Cyclists (Eye Protectors)

Mr. Roger King: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has received any representations about the difficulty that motor cyclists with prescription-lensed goggles have in complying with the eye protector regulations.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Yes. I understand that prescription-lensed goggles meeting the British Standard in full are not yet available. Since existing prescription-lensed goggles will generally be of good quality, we propose to amend the regulations to allow the continued use of existing goggles of this special type and to postpone the requirement for new ones to be BS approved and marked, for a further year. The Department is circulating for comment appropriate draft amendments to the regulations. The amendments also permit the use of glass-lensed goggles approved to an earlier version of the standard which did not require marking with the letter A to show abrasion resistance.

Pedestrian Areas

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he plans to issue up-to-date guidance on ways in which traffic and parking in pedestrian areas can be better regulated; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: All county, borough and district councils in England and Wales are being sent a local transport note—"Getting the Right Balance—Guidance on Vehicle Restriction on Pedestrian Zones". This will also be sent to national and other organisations who responded to our earlier consultation on the subject.

The guidance to local authorities and others stresses the need for a careful balance to be drawn where ideas are being considered for pedestrian zones. Traffic restriction measures can increase safety and convenience for many pedestrians, and improve the attractiveness of a street or area. The importance of providing access for essential vehicle movements, including servicing and for mobility handicapped people is emphasised strongly.

Copies of the note have been placed in the Library, and are available for sale at HMSO.

Dual Carriageways

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has on the estimated cost, first year rate of return and net present value for the dualling of the current roads (a) between Lydden and Whitfield (A256), (b) Whitfield to Deal road (A258) and (c) Deal road to Eastern docks in Dover; and if he has any further information on those road projects.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The following provisional estimates for dualling the A2 between junctions were prepared in 1985:

£ million—1979 prices

	Cost	Net present value[1]
Lydden to Whitfield (A256)	5·1	−1·0 to −0·7
Whitfield to Deal Road (A258)	3·2	−0·7 to −0·5

[1] Discounted to 1979.

We have no proposals to improve the A2 between Lydden and Dover. We shall keep the position under review. The A2 and the improved A20 routes, taken together, should be able to cope with predicted traffic beyond the turn of the century.

VED (Evasion)

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to reduce the level of evasion of vehicle excise duty on heavy goods vehicles.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Reducing the level of excise duty evasion on heavy goods vehicles is central to the Department's enforcement strategy. In addition to the attention given to goods vehicles in day-to-day enforcement they are subject to special roadside inspections by the Department's traffic examiners which include checks to ensure that they are fully licensed.

THE ARTS

Museum Training

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Minister for the Arts what developments there have been on museum training following the publication of the Museums and Galleries Commission working party report on museum training and career structure.

Mr. Luce: The Museums and Galleries Commission working party report on museums training and career structure was published in July 1987.

I am grateful to the working party and to its chairman Sir John Hale for the thoughtful and detailed consideration which they have given to the important subject of the training which is required by those who work at all levels and in all sectors and all aspects of our museums. At a time of opportunity for museums, and when the number and diversity of museums, and the number of those who visit and use them are increasing, it is important that staff employed in museums are equipped with the skills they need, in management and marketing as well as in the more traditional and still essential areas of museum activity.

The Hale working party produced a wide-ranging report, and I thought it appropriate for my Department to consult widely on its findings. I am grateful to all those who submitted their views. I have now considered the report's recommendations in the light of the comments and advice which my Department received.

There is general agreement about the need for a fresh look at training for museum work to make that training better reflect the skills which are needed and will be needed by those working in museums. The necessary first step in this process is an examination of the needs of the museum industry for key skills and competences. It is desirable, in order to facilitate the development of new provision for museums training, for such a study to proceed quickly and on an industrywide basis taking account of the needs of the main sectors of the museum world and of the relevant areas of the heritage sector. I am pleased to announce that my Department with the Manpower Services Commission will be providing support and financial assistance for a needs assessment study for which the principal agent will be the Museums Association. This six-month study will represent phase I of a programme which is intended by the Museums Association to result in the production of new modules for the training of those currently or prospectively working in museums.

The needs assessment study, to be carried out by consultants experienced in the field of training assessment and provision, will be overseen by a steering committee on which the major interests in the museum community—the Museums and Galleries Commission, the Museums Association, the area museum councils, the national museums and galleries, the independent and the local authority museums—will be represented. The steering committee will be chaired by the Office of Arts and Libraries.

Beyond the first phase of this programme, I shall take a continuing close interest in the development of museum training. I think it right, however, that the primary responsibility for museums training should rest with the museums industry itself, and that the continuing developments in this area should be overseen and guided by a consortium representing the main sectors of the museums industry. It is not my intention to set up a museums training council with regional panels in the form recommended by the Hale report. I shall be consulting further about the composition of the consortium of interests which I have in mind, with a view to its establishment later this year. I should be prepared to provide limited funding on a pump-priming basis for a museums training consortium, for a period of up to five years, but I should expect the museums industry and employers to contribute an increasing share of the costs of this group and, following a substantial public investment by my Department and the MSC in an initial programme of development of museum training. I shall expect the provision and further development of museum training to become self-financing. I attach importance to the development and application of skills in management and marketing within the museums sector, and to the transfer of skills between institutions. I hope that the development of new training modules which are relevant to all sectors of the museums industry will help to increase the scope for mobility and exchanges of staff between museums.

The Museums and Galleries Commission working party report on museums training has provided a useful foundation on which the various sectors of the museums world, with the Government's help, can build in partnership. I am pleased that an ambitious but realistic programme of development of museums training, with the Government's backing, is now under way.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

VAT (Greece)

Mr. Sims: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what action he proposes to take following the introduction on 1 January by the Government of Greece of a value added tax structure which increases rather than diminishes discrimination in favour of locally produced spirits and against imported products.

Mr. Alan Clark: The discriminatory VAT rates operating in Greece are already under challenge in the European Court of Justice: the EC Commission has brought proceedings under article 169 of the treaty. The Commission is in no doubt that the United Kingdom attacahes the greatest importance to this case.

Inner City Initiative (Publicity)

Mr. Beith: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what was the cost to public funds of the press conference and associated publicity for the Government's inner city initiative announced on 7 March; what part of the charge to public funds is attributable to the cost of providing a blue stage setting and furniture; and how many persons other than civil servants took part in the arrangements.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: About £34,400, including £4,238 for the stage setting. The document "Action for Cities" costs about £68,970 for a print run of 37,000. The press conference was arranged by the Central Office of Information. This represents a very small part of the Government's expenditure of around £3,000 million on inner cities programmes and the presentation of those programmes is an important part of the process of establishing a partnership with the private sector and local government to help deliver them.

"Action for Cities" (Breakfasts)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if, pursuant to his answer of 14 March, he will provide a detailed breakdown of his estimate of the cost of the six working breakfasts planned.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The estimated expenditure on the working breakfasts covers all the production and management costs of a professional presentation to senior industrialists and business men, whose commitment and support we are seeking. The total costs will include the preparation of audio-visual material, the hire of halls, printing and the issue of invitations, transport and storage. Catering will cost under £5 per person.

City Action Teams

Mr. Madden: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will consider setting up a new office in Bradford, staffed by officials of the Departments of the Environment, Employment and Trade and Industry, to administer that part of the recently announced city action team programme of benefit to Bradford.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: No. City action teams are operating successfully from the regional offices of the three Departments, including in those areas where the city action team also covers an adjacent city.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how much he plans to spend on giving breakfasts in Bradford under his city action team programme; how many such breakfasts he intends to organise in Bradford,; who is to be invited; where the breakfasts will be held; and when the first breakfast will take place.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: My present plans do not include a presentation in Bradford. However, a working breakfast will be held in Pudsey on 26 April for about 250 senior business men and industrialists from the west Yorkshire urban area, including Bradford in order to seek their commitment to and support for the Government's programmes of urban regeneration in Leeds and Bradford.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, pursuant to his reply of 14 March, if he will list broad expenditure heads for the estimated expenditure by the city action team in Bradford of about £50 million in 1987-88; and if he will specify how much of the money to be spent in Bradford is a new allocation of funds.

Mr Kenneth Clarke: As I indicated in my reply to the hon. Member's question of 14 March at column 434, the total estimated expenditure in Bradford of the three city action team departments in 1987-88 is about £50 million. The broad areas of expenditure are:

	million £
Housing	13
Regeneration of land and buildings	6
Employment, Training and Industry	34
Total	53

This is existing expenditure through main departmental programmes. In addition, the Government are making a further £0·79 million available to the Leeds/Bradford city action team to be spent in the area the team covers, without prior allocation to particular districts.

DEFENCE

Military Personnel (Wales)

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the location and number of (a) military personnel and (b) non-military personnel employed in (i) Pembrokeshire, (ii) Dyfed and (iii) Wales.

Mr. Freeman: It would not be in the public interest to provide details of the number of personnel in individual defence establishments. The total numbers of personnel, military and non-military, in the areas specified are shown in the table. The figures relate to 1 July 1987, and those for Pembrokeshire cover establishments in the Preseli and South Pembrokeshire local authority areas.

	Total	Service Personnel	Civilian Personnel
(i) Pembrokeshire	1,884	797	1,087
(ii) Dyfed	3,040	831	2,209
(iii) Wales	12,040	6,076	5,964

European Fighter Aircraft

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress has been made on deciding on the radar system for the European fighter aircraft; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: As my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Armed Forces said on 11 February 1988 at column 592, revised bids for the EFA radar have been received. The assessment of these bids is in hand, but will take some time and a decision is unlikely until the summer.

Trident

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give details of the sub-headings of expenditure in the Trident miscellaneous budget.

Mr. Sainsbury: The sub-headings of expenditure in the miscellaneous element of the Trident budget are functional machinery, logistic and other support costs, and additional intramural costs.

Soviet Weapons

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment his Department has made of Soviet modernisation of their conventional weapons; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I refer my hon. Friend to the statement made by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on the NATO summit on 4 March at columns 1279-80 which emphasised that there has been no let-up in the Soviet Union's extensive military modernisation programme, covering both the improvement of existing platforms, weapons and equipment and also the introduction of new ones. For example, among major items a new version of the T-72 tank has recently appeared and a new heavy lift aircraft has been introduced, while new attack helicopters and a range of new missiles are under development. Further information is given regularly in the annual "Statement on the Defence Estimates".

Territorial Army

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on current levels of recruitment and retention into the Territorial Army.

Mr. Freeman: Recruitment and retention figures for the Territorial Army are, of course, subject to seasonal variations. The overall strength reached a temporary peak of over 78,000 in May 1987. Essentially the main concern lies in retaining experienced volunteers, rather than in attracting new recruits, although the latter is, of course, closely monitored. We have implemented a number of initiatives aimed at improving retention, most recently agreement to the funding of a major media campaign recommended by the National Employer Liaison Committee, details of which I gave in the answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Hampshire, East (Mr. Mates) on 29 February 1988 at column 142.

Army Trucks

Mr. Eastham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what refurbishing work is to be carried out on the Army's existing 4-tonne trucks; and when he plans to order a replacement.

Mr. Sainsbury: We have no plans to refurbish the Army's existing 4-tonne truck fleet. A competition to select a new 4-tonne vehicle is currently in progress. The new vehicles will be ordered in 1989 and will begin to enter service in 1990. Consideration is also being given to a further order for the existing model as an interim measure.

Chemical Weapons

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consideration and discussions have taken place within the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation in respect of the possibility of retaining safety margins of chemical weapons; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: There are no chemical weapons declared to NATO, although the United States possesses a minimal retaliatory capability. It is the aim of all NATO states to achieve a comprehensive, verifiable and global ban on all chemical weapons, as was confirmed at the meeting of the Heads of State and Government of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation in Brussels on 2-3 March.

Bearer Parties

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence under what circumstances bearer parties are provided for the coffins of deceased military personnel on arrival in the United Kingdom from overseas.

Mr. Freeman: Bodies returning to the United Kingdom from overseas normally arrive on scheduled aeroplanes at civil airports where provision of a bearer party might cause difficulties or be inappropriate. In those cases the body is met and taken from the airfield by a civilian undertaking. Whether or not to supply a bearer party in other circumstances rests with the regiment and the wishes of the family.

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether bearer parties were provided for the officers killed on duty off Portugal on the return of their bodies to the United Kingdom.

Mr. Freeman: The bodies of Lt. Cdr. Davies and S/Lt. Cawthorne, who were tragically killed while on duty on 10 March, were returned to the United Kingdom on board the RFA Engadine. The ship docked at Portland naval base. The bodies were piped from the ship in accordance with naval custom. Royal Navy personnel were used to deliver the bodies into the custody of the coroner for Dorset. The question of bearers does not therefore arise until the funeral service where a naval bearer party will be provided if the next-of-kin so request.

Loan Service Personnel Programme

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the names of countries to which Britain has military personnel on loan currently under the loan service personnel programme.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Members of Her Majesty's armed forces have served in the following countries and territories on loan or secondment terms during the current financial year:

Australia
Bahrain
Bangladesh
Barbados
Belize
Bermuda
Brunei
Dominica
Fiji
Gambia
Ghana
Hong Kong
Indonesia
Jordan
Kenya
Kuwait
Lesotho
Mauritius
New Zealand
Nigeria
Oman
Qatar
Saudi Arabia
St. Lucia
St. Vincent
Sudan
Swaziland
Uganda
United Arab Emirates
Zimbabwe[1]

[1] Since January 1986 a wing of the British military advisory and training team has been specifically allocated to train Mozambican troops within Zimbabwe.

HMS Tireless

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the purpose of the visit of HMS Tireless to the port of Southampton; how often visits of this type are made; what are the criteria for deciding the timing and location of such visits; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: HMS Tireless made a routine visit to Southampton from 9-15 March in order to give her crew a period of rest and recreation and an opportunity to meet local organisations, including the sea cadet corps. The timing of such visits is largely determined by the operational programme of HM submarines and the availability of suitable port facilities. In my reply to the hon. Member for Cardiff, South and Penarth (Mr. Michael) on 9 March at column 216, I gave the number of United Kingdom nuclear powered submarine visits to United Kingdom non-naval ports since 1970.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the local public safety scheme was activated in response to the visit of HMS Tireless to the port of Southampton; what class of berth the submarine is using; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The procedures for notifying the appropriate local authorities, emergency services and other civilian agencies of an impending visit of a nuclear submarine, specified in the Southampton special safety scheme, were carried out prior to the recent visit of HMS Tireless to the port. The berth used by HMS Tireless is categorised as a Z berth.

TRANSPORT

Road Maintenance (Northern Region)

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the expected increase in real terms to be allocated for road maintenance in the northern region.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We have increased the 1988-89 allocation for the maintenance of motorways and trunk roads in the northern region by 3·2 per cent. in real terms compared with the initial allocation for 1987-88. We are maintaining provision for local road maintenance in England at £1,264 million for 1988-89. This represents an increase of 8·4 per cent. in real terms on what local authorities have budgeted to spend in 1987-88. This provision is not broken down by region.

Dual Carriageways (Central Reservations)

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what mileage of steel barriers was erected in the central reservations of dual carriageway roads and motorways during the last financial year; and what mileage has been contracted for in the present financial year.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The information requested is not held centrally. I shall write to my hon. Friend.

Highway Authorities (Underspending)

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations have been made to his Department by the Federation of Civil Engineering Contractors regarding alleged underspending by highway authorities on road building or maintenance; what statistical evidence is available to him in that regard; and what action he is taking.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Federation of Civil Engineering Contractors wrote to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State on 16 September enclosing a copy of its submission to the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on roads and bridges expenditure. This contained representations on expenditure by highway authorities on road building and maintenance. The issues raised in their submission were discussed with my right hon. Friend on 26 November.

Statistical evidence on highway authorities' spending on roads comes from their budget and expenditure returns to the Department of the Environment. In the last three financial years public expenditure provision for local authority roads capital spending was not underspent. Local authorities' budgets for 1987-88 show £148 million underspending on road maintenance, despite the poor state of local roads. Public expenditure provision for 1988-89 allows for a 13 per cent. increase on these budgets. If 1988-89 budgets show continuing underspend, we shall need to consider, with the local authority associations, what further steps may be needed to ensure adequate road maintenance by local authorities.

Panama Canal

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when his Department last consulted British shipping interests concerning the situation in the Panama canal zone; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave on 4 March, at column 740. We continue to keep the situation under review in close consultation with British shipping interests.

A12 Bypass (Emergency Telephones)

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received regarding the installation of emergency telephones on the A12 bypass at Chelmsford; what proposals there are to install such telephones; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Representations have been received from two local residents. The A12 Chelmsford bypass is one of a number of lengths of trunk road identified by the Department as meriting installation of emergency telephones when funds can be made available.

I hope to announce shortly a list of sites at which installation is proposed in 1988-89 and 1989-90.

Arms Shipments

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has on the cargo of arms carried by an aircraft owned by Great Southern Airways which stopped over at Prestwick airport on a flight from France to the United States of America on 24 November 1987; what notification is required of such arms shipments; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Great Southern Airways sought routine permission for a technical refuelling stop at Prestwick on 14 November 1987 under articles 43 and 44 of the air navigation order. The application was fully in order and permission was granted.

Breeches Buoy Equipment

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many coastguard stations have breeches buoy equipment; when it was installed; why he has decided to remove existing equipment from use; if he will make a statement as to the cost involved of (a) withdrawal of the equipment and (b) leaving it in place; and how the need formerly met by breeches buoy will henceforth be met.

Mr. David Mitchell: There are 263 coastguard stations which hold breeches buoy equipment. The majority of this equipment has been in place since the mid-19th century, although some modifications have taken place in the intervening years.

The existing equipment is to be removed because its use as a method of rescuing stranded mariners has progressively declined and its retention for use by Her Majesty's coastguard can no longer be justified.

The only costs involved in withdrawing this equipment will be in transportation. These costs have not been calculated although they are expected to be minimal. Any time spent by coastguards on this task will be part of their everyday working and no extra expenditure will be incurred.

The costs involved in retaining the equipment would be in the region of £230,000 per year. This includes replacement, maintenance costs and care of equipment payments to auxiliary coastguards. However, development costs for replacement of obsolescent rocket apparatus would also have to be incurred in the near future.

The need formerly met by breeches buoys is now met by search and rescue helicopters provided by my Department and the Ministry of Defence and lifeboats provided by the Royal National Lifeboat Institution. The cliff rescue capability which is also provided by my Department may also be appropriate in certain cases.

Manchester Airport

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations his Department has received from British airlines on the matters to be negotiated by the British and United States Governments in regard to United States carrier access to Manchester international airport; what response he has made; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: A number of representations have been received from British airlines in regard to wider access for United States carriers to serve Manchester international airport. Their representations, together with all other representation received on this issue, will be taken into account in the forthcoming negotiations with the United States Government, scheduled for 17-18 March.

Wortley (Rail Services)

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received to the effect that the notice, published by the British Railways Boad on 10 March, concerning a proposal to discontinue railway passenger services between Wortley South and Wortley West junction, is invalid in that it fails to meet the requirements of section 56 of the Transport Act 1962; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: None. That is not a matter for me.

Vehicle Number Plates

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether proposals have been made to impose a common design vehicle number plate throughout the EEC.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: It has been made clear to the Commission that any proposals which prejudiced the high standards of clarity and readability of the current United Kingdom design would be opposed.

Officials in the Commission are considering the possibility of harmonising the size and design of number plates throughout the Community as part of a common transport policy. The Government have not received any formal proposals for harmonisation.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

United Nations Children's Fund

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what contribution was made by Her Majesty's Government to the United Nations Children's Fund in each financial year since 1978-79 in both current and actual prices.

Mr. Chris Patten: The information is as follows:

Year	Contributions at current prices (£ million) General fund	Special appeals	Total	1986-87 prices (£ million) General fund	Total
1978-79	4·500	0·664	5·164	8·8	10·1

[1] Special increase to mark International Year of the Child.
[2] £3·25 million, originally planned to be paid in April 1986, was paid in March.

Departmental Grants

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the non-governmental organisations in receipt of grants from his Department during 1987-88; and what is the size of each grant.

Mr. Eggar: Current information about the total of grants committed in 1987-88 by the Overseas Development Administration to particular non-governmental organisations under arrangements for the joint funding of development projects, support to volunteer and other agencies and support for refugee relief and related development projects is given below.

Pre-School Playgroups Association	108,000
National Association for Gifted Children	10,000
National Bureau for Handicapped Students	30,750

Students (Records)

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he intends to issue a consultation document on the keeping and disclosure of records concerning students in further education establishments; and when he intends to table regulations.

Mr. Jackson: My right hon. Friend plans to issue a consultation paper on this subject later this year and will deal then with the making of regulations.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he intends to issue a circular to local education authorities on the keeping and disclosure of pupil records; and when he now expects regulations to be tabled in Parliament.

Mrs. Rumbold: Our intention is to make regulations by the end of 1988. Guidance will be issued at the same time to local education authorities.

Primary and Secondary Schools (Expenditure)

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will show the amount spent per pupil on education in (a) primary schools and (b) secondary schools in the counties of Staffordshire and Derbyshire.

Mr. Dunn: The latest information is provided in the table.

Net institutional recurrent expenditure[1] per pupil—1986-87

	Primary Schools £	Secondary Schools £
Staffordshire	878	1,257
Derbyshire	877	1,304

Note:

[1] Net institutional recurrent expenditure covers the cost of salaries and wages, premises and certain supplies and services. It does not include the cost of school meals, central administration and inspection, debt charges or revenue contributions to capital outlay.

PRIME MINISTER

Church Lawford

Q27. Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Prime Minister if she has any plans to make an official visit to Church Lawford, near Rugby.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

NHS Hospital, Bradford

Q41. Mr. Cryer: To ask the Prime Minister when she next expects to pay an official visit to a National Health Service hospital in Bradford.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

West Berlin (Bomb Alert)

Q69. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister if she will discuss with President Reagan the statements of Secretary of State Schultz and Secretary Weinberger that there was a bomb alert in West Berlin on 14 April 1986, in the light of the statement by the duty head of the United States military police in Berlin, Major Ruth La Fontaine, that there was no such alert; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: No.

West Berkshire

Q77. Mr. Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Prime Minister when she next intends to visit west Berkshire.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Agricultural and Industrial Support

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Prime Minister if, on the same basis as the reply to the hon. Member for Norfolk, North on 16 March 1987, Official Report, columns 425-26, she will show the cost of agricultural support for each year since 1960 at 1988-89 prices, and in real terms; and how much has been paid out, at 1988-89 prices and in real terms to (a) the motor industry, (b) the coal industry, (c) the steel industry, (d) the shipbuilding industry and (e) the aircraft industry; and if she will also show the total amount paid to industry as a whole for each year since 1960.

The Prime Minister: The table sets out the public expenditure cost of supporting agriculture as compared with the public expenditure cost of support to manufacturing industry over the period since 1977. The presentation is not identical with that on previous occasions. Because many industrial support schemes, such as support for innovation, operate across industries, disaggregation into individual industries is not possible. However estimates are made by the Central Statistical Office for manufacturing, mining and construction taken as a whole. These figures have been set alongside comparable figures for agriculture, forestry and fishing. Data prior to 1977 are not available on a consistent basis because of changes in industrial classifications. On these figures, support for agriculture as a proportion of its contribution to value added is about 20 times that provided to manufacturing industry. The figures for support to agriculture in the United Kingdom relate solely to amounts financed by the Government and by the European Community budget and do not include costs to the consumer of holding food prices above world prices.

	General government expenditure on		Gross domestic product arising from		General government expend as percentage of GDP in each sector
	Agriculture forestry and fishing £ million	[1] Manufacturing £ million	Agriculture forestry and fishing £ million	[1] Manufacturing £ million	Agriculture forestry and fishing Per cent.	[1] Manufacturing Per cent.

Civil Servants

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Prime Minister what advice is given to Departments about the promotion within executive officer and higher executive officer grades of persons who are already members of or intend to stand as candidates for membership of local councils; and what restriction is placed on their promotion.

The Prime Minister: The rules governing political activities by civil servants are set out in the Civil Service pay and conditions of service code (paragraphs 9923 to 9957), a copy of which is available in the House of Commons Library. Promotion is solely on merit in accordance with the general principles of fair and open competition. The grades referred to fall in the category of civil servants who need to apply for departmental permission to take part in local political activities, under the provisions set out in paragraphs 9929-9932 and 9934.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Prime Minister what functions and roles are restricted to those who are not members of, or candidates for, local councils within the Departments of the Environment and Transport at executive officer and higher executive officer grades.

The Prime Minister: There are many posts in the Department of Environment and the Department of Transport which could not appropriately be held by officers who are members of, or candidates for, local councils, because it is important that the staff concerned should be seen to be politically impartial. All applications for permission to take part in local political activities are dates considered on a case by case basis, as is the posting of officers who have received such permission.

I also refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I am giving him today to another question.

Engagements

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 17 March.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 17 March.

Mr. Stern: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 17 March.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 17 March.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House I shall be having further meetings later today.

WALES

Welsh Development Agency

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the total expenditure in cash terms and at constant 1988 prices of the Welsh Development Agency on the tourism industry in each year since the establishment of the Welsh Development Agency; and what percentage these figures represent of the total expenditure of the Welsh Development Agency in each of these years.

Mr. Peter Walker: The Welsh Development Agency's contribution to the development of the tourism industry is mainly indirect through key programmes such as land reclamation, environmental improvement and investment.

Since the agency's inception, tourism-related projects costing in the order of £20 million have been completed or are in progress. This is equivalent to about 3 per cent. of total mainstream Welsh Development Agency spending over the same period. A broad estimate of tourism-related expenditure at 1988 prices is £32 million or 3·5 per cent. of total spending since 1976. Comparable information is not available for individual financial years.

NHS (Land)

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the total amount and value of surplus land owned by each Welsh district health authority; and how much land has been disposed of by each authority between (a) 1974 and 1979 and (b) 1979 and 1987.

Mr. Grist: The amount of surplus land held and disposed of by district health authorities in Wales in the years in question is as follows:

District	Surplus land held as at 31 March 1987 (acres)	Surplus Land Disposed 1974-1979 (acres)	1979-1987 (acres)
Clwyd	100	5	677
East Dyfed	12	37	35
Gwent	30	43	187
Gwynedd	99	100	5
Mid Glamorgan	30	18	234
Pembrokeshire	1	122	1
Powys	81	Nil	79
South Glamorgan	23	37	10
West Glamorgan	13	9	38

The value of surplus land currently held is not available centrally.

Exports

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales to what extent he has been able to participate in spearheading export drives for products made in Wales since June 1987.

Mr. Peter Walker: On 26 June 1987 I launched a public awareness campaign of the exporting services offered through the Welsh Office. I have also decided to provide staff reinforcement to the export branch to improve the service to Welsh exporters.

Since then, I have on several occasions spoken to industrialists both individually and collectively about the need to increase the level of Welsh exporting. I have set in motion plans for two overseas trade missions which will be led by me and will later this year take Welsh business men to explore new opportunities in Russia and Saudi Arabia.

Tomorrow I am giving an exporting breakfast in the St. David's hall Cardiff, and next week I will host a similar event in north Wales. I have also arranged that later this year a series of seminars on individual markets will visit west, mid and north Wales. Towards the end of the year I will hold seminars on the theme of the single European market in Cardiff and Wrexham.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Conveyancing

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Attorney-General what representations he has received concerning delays in conveyancing procedures; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: From time to time the Lord Chancellor receives representations from hon. Members and others about delays in conveyancing procedures. Through its practice recommendations, explanatory guides and consultation papers the Conveyancing Standing Committee, set up in 1985 by the Law Commission at the Government's request, seeks to promote changes in practice and procedure to make conveyancing simpler, cheaper, quicker and more effective.

ENERGY

Margam Pit

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what discussions have taken place between his Department, British Coal, the National Union of Mineworkers and the National Association of Colliery Overmen, Deputies and Shotfirers concerning the proposed Margam pit; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: This matter is for discussion between the management and unions. British Coal has kept me informed of developments. It also consulted my right hon. Friend's predecessor when he was Secretary of State about the project. British Coal reached the view that because of the high capital cost the project could be viable only if flexible working was introduced. My right hon. Friend's predecessor agreed with this assessment. My right hon. Friend and I fully support his view and hope that working arrangements can be agreed and the project can proceed as planned.

British Nuclear Forum (Contracts)

Mr. Ashdown: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what percentage of contracts over £1 million awarded by the Central Electricity Generating Board, Nirex, British Nuclear Fuels Ltd., and the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority went to members of the British Nuclear Forum; and if he will list the firms to which these went, together with the contract values.

Mr. Michael Spicer: These are commercial matters for the bodies concerned.

Pressurised Water Reactors

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what are the schedules and time scales for building each of the six proposed pressurised water reactors; and where it is proposed to site them.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Consent for the Sizewell B PWR was granted in March 1987. The CEGB applied in August 1987 for consent to construct a PWR at Hinkley Point C. A public inquiry will be held, following objections from local planning authorities.

No other applications to build nuclear power stations have been received. The timing of applications and the choice of sites are matters for the CEGB.

Renewable Energy Sources

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make it his policy to remove current constraints on renewable energy sources to enable them to compete on equal terms with nuclear power sources for the reserved percentage of electricity generation.

Mr. Michael Spicer: It is the Government's policy that there should be no constraints on renewable energy sources which would handicap them in competing with other fuels in supplying electricity to the grid.

British Coal (Enterprise) Ltd.

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many jobs have been created in the Houghton and Washington constituency by British Coal (Enterprise) Ltd.

Mr. Michael Spicer: This is a matter for British Coal (Enterprise) Ltd. and I shall ask the chairman to write to the hon. Member.

British Coal

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list the names of all private firms contracted to British Coal, stating their type of work and areas covered.

Mr. Michael Spicer: This is a matter for the British Coal Corporation.

Coal Products Limited

Mr. Neil Hamilton: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether he has reached a decision about the capital reconstruction of the British Coal Corporation's subsidiary, Coal Products Limited; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Parkinson: In recent years the British Coal Corporation's (BCC's) coal derivatives subsidiary, Coal Products Limited, has incurred heavy losses, particularly as a result of the NUM strike in 1984-85. Since 1984-85 its cumulative losses have exceeded its capital of £100 million. At the end of March 1987 they stood at £143 million.

These losses were funded by British Coal, with the Government's consent, largely in the form of loans. It is clear, however, that there is no realistic prospect that BCC will recover this money, and I have therefore agreed that it has to be written off by means of a waiver of the loans due to BCC and by cancellation of the company's £22·5 million preference share capital.

I am pleased to report, however, that the management of Coal Products has now carried out a vigorous and fundamental reconstruction of its business; substantial progress has been made to eliminate loss-making activities and to make the company viable. The management is determined that the company should establish a profitable track record on normal commercial terms with BCC.

Apart from any non-deficit grants for which it might be eligible, it is intended that neither the Government nor BCC will provide further support, either by injecting further loans or capital into the company, or by way of further guarantees.

EMPLOYMENT

Loan Guarantee Scheme

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans are being considered further to develop the loan guarantee scheme for inner city investment and development.

Mr. Cope: One of this Government's principal aims has been to encourage the establishment and development of businesses in the inner city areas. As part of the action for cities initiative launched on Monday 7 March 1988 we have increased the guarantee available under the loan guarantee scheme to businesses based or wishing to be based in the 16 inner city task force areas from 70 per cent. to 80 per cent. I hope that this increase in the guarantee will make it easier for businesses in inner city areas to take advantage of the scheme.

Construction Industry (Fatalities)

Mr. Heffer: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many fatalities of self-employed persons and illegally employed persons took place whilst carrying out work covered by the construction regulations of the Factories Act in the years 1985, 1986 and 1987.

Mr. Nicholls: The table gives the available information for reported fatalities of those self-employed persons in the construction industry from 1985 to March 1987. Accidents to illegally employed persons cannot be distinguished in the records.

Fatalities of self-employed persons in the construction industry[1]

Year	Number
1985	22
1986 January-March	2
1986-87[2]	27

Notes:

[1] As defined by division 5 of the 1980 standard industrial classification.

[2] Year commencing 1 April 1986. More recent information is not yet available.

In addition, the Health and Safety Executive knows of other fatal accidents to self-employed persons engaged in construction work outside the construction industry. For 1985 the number was 1; for 1986-87 it was also 1.

Wages (Underpayment)

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information he has on the distribution between age groups of cases of illegal underpayments.

Mr. Nicholls: I regret that the information requested is not available.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many cases of illegal underpayment of workers by their employers there were in each year since 1974.

Mr. Patrick Nicholls: The numbers of workers found to be underpaid under wages council legislation were as follows:

	Number
1974	15,368
1975	22,604
1976	24,831
1977	26,920
1978	22,671
1979	22,457
1980	28,373
1981	24,117
1982	20,406
1983	20,832
1984	18,043
1985	16,948
1986	15,533
1987	9,129

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many cases of underpayment the wages inspectorate investigated in the north-west division in each of the past five years; how many were the results of complaints by staff; how many were the results of routine spot checks; and what were the outcomes.

Mr. Nicholls [pursuant to his reply, 15 February 1988, c. 472]: In my earlier reply I undertook to give information for 1987. This is as follows:

Outcome of checks of pay carried out at establishments in north-west division, 1987

	Number
Checked by visit (routine)	2,267
Found to be underpaying	254
Checked by visit (complaint)	440
Found to be underpaying	287

Member's Correspondence

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to his answer of 25 February, Official Report, column 293, if he will now reply to the letter from the hon. Member for Rugby and Kenilworth dated 3 December 1987.

Mr. Lee: I have now written to my hon. Friend.

Small Businesses

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Stretford of 1 March, Official Report, column 543, he will place in the Library copies of the report of the results of the surveys containing evidence that some employers are reluctant to recruit additional staff because of employment protection legislation; if he will list the surveys in the Official Report; and if he will give details of his assessment of the total national job loss caused.

Mr. Nicholls: Results of two studies by this Department were published as Research Papers 6 and 53 and placed in the Library. It is not possible to estimate the effect on job opportunities since the employment legislation is one of many factors to be considered by an employer.

Hotel and Catering Industry (Wages)

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, how many cases of underpayment in the hotel and catering industry the wages inspectors investigated in 1987; how many were the result of complaints by staff; and how many were the result of routine spot checks.

Mr. Nicholls [pursuant to his reply, 2 February 1988, c. 558]: In my earlier reply I undertook to provide some additional information. This is as follows.

In 1987, wages inspectors visited 1,311 establishments in the hotel and catering trades to investigate complaints. Underpayments were found at 780. Inspectors also visited 6,932 establishments to carry out routine checks. Underpayments were found at 892.

ENVIRONMENT

Direct Labour Building Departments

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will list by date all cases in which he or his predecessors have used their restrictive powers under the Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980 in respect of local authority direct labour building departments; what were the reasons for the exercise of powers in each case; and what was the outcome in each case.

Mr. Chope: The table lists the 20 occasions on which, following serious failures to meet the required financial objectives, my right hon. Friend has directed an authority to prepare a special report under section 17(4) of the 1980 Act, and the action taken as a result. In three cases closure directions have been made. In 10 others the council has been informed that no further action will be taken apart from careful monitoring of future performance. In the other seven no decision has yet been taken.

Football Matches (Attendances)

Mr. Heffer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to how many people attended all association football league and cup matches in England and Wales, from the commencement of the football season up to and including 29 February.

Mr. Moynihan: Information held by the Football Association and the Football league shows the following attendances at league and FA cup matches from the beginning of the current season up to 29 February 1988:

	Million
League matches	12·77
Football Association Challenge cup	[1]1·72

[1] Up to and including fifth round.

Figures for the three cup competitions run by the Football League are available only up to 31 January 1988 and are as follows:

	Million
Littlewoods Challenge Cup	1·34
Simod Cup	0·17
Sherpa Van Trophy	0·18

GLC Heritage Collection

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has regarding the disposal of the items held by the London residuary body termed the GLC Heritage Collection.

Mr. Chope: I understand that the board of the London residuary body has made a decision to transfer most of the artefacts to the Greater London record office, where they will be available for public inspection. Other artefacts will be transferred to successor bodies such as the London fire and civil defence authority and the Thames water authority. Pending completion of agreements, the artefacts are in secure storage.

GLC Dais (Badges of Office)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has regarding the present location of the badges of office previously worn by members of the GLC dais.

Mr. Chope: The badges of office of the former chairman, vice-chairman and deputy-chairman are in secure storage at county hall pending their eventual transfer to the Greater London record office.

Chlorofluorocarbons and Halogens

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to how many research projects on the impact of chlorofluorocarbons and halogens upon the environment and, specifically, the ozone layer are at present being carried out in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Moynihan: I listed in my reply to a question by the hon. Member on 2 November 1987, column 437, the establishments funded by the Department, and the stratospheric ozone research topics on which they are engaged. In addition, the Department co-operates closely with the programmes supported by the Meteorological Office, the Natural Environment Research Council, the Science and Engineering Research Council, the Department of Trade and Industry and the Chemical Manufacturers Association.

Privately Rented Accommodation

Mr. Neil Hamilton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to the amount by which the supply of privately rented accommodation in the Greater Manchester area has declined in the past 10 years; and what indications there are that demand exceeds supply.

Mrs. Roe: No statistics for Greater Manchester are kept, but nationally private rented dwellings as a proportion of the total declined from 12 per cent. in 1979 to 8 per cent. in 1987.

We have no information on part two of the question.

County Rate Precepts

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the county rate precepts in order, from the highest to the lowest.

Mr. Chope: Following is a list of the county precepts for 1988-89:

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will provide a list showing for those county councils which changed control in 1981 their county precept (a) in 1981 and (b) 1989.

Mr. Chope: Following is a list of precepts for the counties which changed political control in 1981:

County	Precept 1981-82 (p)	Precept 1988-89 (p)	Increase (Percentage)
Avon	120·60	246·50	104

[1]The 1988-89 precept for Northumberland includes the Northumbria police authority's precept of 14·40p.

Merseyside Development Corporation

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the members of the Merseyside Development Corporation.

Mr. Trippier: The members of the Merseyside Development Corporation board are:

Mr. Philip Carter—Chairman
Mr. John Smith CBE—Deputy Chairman
Professor Graham Ashworth
Mr. Brian Thaxter
Professor Patrick Minford
Mr. Clive Lewis, FRICS, FSVA
Councillor Thomas Glover
Councillor John Hale
Dr. John Ritchie.

Public Health Consultants (Medical Assessments)

Mr. Brandon-Bravo: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what consideration he has given to the recommendation in the Acheson report that public health consultants should no longer undertake medical assessments on behalf of housing departments; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: I have been asked to reply.

We are currently studying all the recommendations of this report. It would not be appropriate for me to comment on any one of them at this stage. As my right hon. Friend indicated in his reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Sevenoaks (Mr. Wolfson) on 14 January 1988, at column 401, we hope to make a further announcement on implementation in the near future.

Chlorofluorocarbons

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will introduce legislation to compel prominent labelling of products containing chlorofluorocarbons.

Mr. Atkins: I have been asked to reply.

I refer to my reply to the hon. Member for the City of Durham (Mr. Steinberg) on 5 November 1987 at column 802.

Market forces also operate for the very wide range of other products which contain chlorofluorocarbons and for which in many cases there is no suitable alternative.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Chemical Weapons

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on what date discussions were first (a) proposed and (b) commenced between Her Majesty's Government and the Soviet Administration with a view to achieving an agreement on chemical weapons; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: Both we and the Soviet Union are members of the 40 nation conference on disarmament in Geneva, where negotiations for a comprehensive and verifiable global chemical weapons ban are taking place. British and Soviet officials have met frequently since July 1985 to discuss progress at these negotiations.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on what date he was first notified by the United States Administration that they were going to commence production of binary chemical weapons.

Mr. Mellor: The United States proposal to commence production of binary chemical weapons was contained in legislation passed by Congress in May 1985. The United States Government have kept us fully informed of their plans.

Torture Convention (Ratification)

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he expects the United Kingdom to be in a position to ratify the European convention against torture.

Mrs. Chalker: We hope to ratify the convention in the near future.

Panama

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if any requests have been received from the United States' authorities for co-operation in actions being taken against the Government of Panama; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: We have not been asked by the United States authorities to co-operate in actions being taken against the Government of Panama.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the policy of Her Majesty's Government in respect of current United States' actions towards Panama; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: Relations between the United States and Panama are matters for the two Governments concerned.

Hotels (Fire Safety)

Dr. Glyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what action he is taking with the Bulgarian Government to inquire into the fire precautions in the Hotel Moussala following the fire of 22 February; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what action he is taking as the result of the fire which occurred on 22 February at the Hotel Moussala in the resort of Borovets, Bulgaria, to inquire into the minimum fire standards required by tour operators in hotels into which they book their clients overseas.

Mr. Eggar: The Bulgarian Government have appointed a special commission to investigate the fire. A report should issue within 60 days of the event.

Her Majesty's embassy in Sofia has requested a copy of the report, and has sought the assurance of the Bulgarian Government that any recommendations for improvements to safety procedures will be implemented without delay.

The consular department of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office raised the matter at a meeting with the tour operators study group (TOSG) on 15 March 1988. The TOSG informed officials that they had sent a message to some 50 Governments, including the Bulgarian Government, seeking an assurance that local fire safety regulations will be fully implemented.

Military Training (Foreign Students)

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the names of countries currently sending students to Britain under the military training assistance programme.

Mr. Mellor: The countries which have sent students to the United Kingdom for military training in 1987-88, whose costs have been wholly or partially paid for from the United Kingdom military training assistance scheme are:

Algeria
Antigua
Bahamas
Bangladesh
Barbados
Belize
Botswana
Brazil
Burma
Cameroon
China
Colombia
Congo
Cyprus
Djibouti
El Salvador
Egypt
Fiji
Gambia
Ghana
Greece
Guyana
India
Indonesia
Ireland
Ivory Coast
Jamaica
Jordan
Kenya
Korea
Lebanon
Lesotho
Malaysia
Malawi
Maldives
Malta
Mauritius
Morocco
Mozambique
Nepal
Nigeria
Pakistan
Philippines
Portugal
Senegal
Sierra Leone
Singapore
Somalia
Spain
Sri Lanka
St. Vincent
Sudan
Swaziland
Tanzania
Thailand
Tonga
Trinidad and Tobago
Tunisia
Turkey
Uganda
Uruguay
Venezuela
West Samoa
Yemen Arab Republic
Zaire
Zambia
Zimbabwe

Refugees (Visas)

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will raise within the Council of Europe France's revocation of the Council of Europe agreement of 1959 on the abolition of visas for refugees travelling within EEC states.

Mrs. Chalker: No. The French acted in accordance with article 7 of the agreement on the abolition of visas for refugees.

DNA Testing (Islamabad)

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been made by the ICI subsidiary responsible for the commercial development of DNA testing about current arrangements at the British embassy at Islamabad for blood samples to be collected.

Mr. Eggar: No formal representations from ICI have been received.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on how many days in each month the British embassy in Islamabad makes arrangements to take samples in connection with DNA tests; if there are plans to increase the number of days; how many blood samples have been taken in the last two years, to date; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: On average the British embassy in Islamabad arrange for two daily DNA testing sessions each month. Since DNA tests commenced sessions have taken place as follows:

October 1987 — 1 Day
November 1987 — 4 Days
December 1987 — Nil
January 1988 — 1 Day
February 1988 — 1 Day
March 1988 — 4 Days

There are no plans to increase the number of sessions each month. Including the pilot scheme, 218 blood samples have been taken from mid-1987, when the local facility became available, to date.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many people have applied to the British embassy in Islamabad to offer blood samples in connection with DNA tests; what is the average waiting time for a person awaiting an appointment to offer blood; and what action is being taken to reduce waiting times.

Mr. Eggar: No records of people applying direct to the British embassy in Islamabad have been kept, but they are few in number. It is more common for the sponsor to initiate action with Cellmark in the United Kingdom. The latter forwards lists to the embassy. An average of five weeks then elapses before the appointment. This period could be reduced only at the expense of other work.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Dr. Alan Clift

7. Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the convicted prisoners whose convictions were found to be unsafe following the dismissal of Dr. Alan Clift from the Home Office Forensic Service, giving in each case the date of their release.

Mr. John Patten: Nine persons in whose cases Dr. Clift gave evidence had their convictions quashed at various times between 1978 and 1984. Some were released on completion of their sentences, some on licence, and some at the time their convictions were quashed. I shall write to the hon. Gentleman with the further details which he seeks. Copies of the letter will be placed in the Library.

50. Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list all statements made, following the dismissal of Dr. Alan Clift, by his Department's Ministers on the safety of convictions obtained as a result of his evidence.

Mr. John Patten: Dr. Cliftwas prematurely retired on 1 March 1982. Since that date, Ministers of this Department have answered questions or made statements on matters related to the safey of convictions in cases in which he gave evidence on the following occasions (all references are to Official Reprt).

Crime Statistics

12. Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of crime in 1987 was accounted for by theft of or from cars; what were the comparable figures for the five previous years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: In the last five years, about a quarter of all recorded crime has been theft of or from vehicles. In the first nine months of 1987, it was 26 per cent., but thefts of vehicles fell, while thefts from vehicles increased. We expect the full year figures to reflect this pattern. Many of these offences can be prevented. We believe that 20 per cent. of motorists do not always regularly lock their cars.

22. Mr. Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about the level of crime in the Metropolitan police area in 1987 and the previous year.

Mr. John Patten: The Commissioner of the Metropolitan Police has reported that in 1987 there were, in total, 4 per cent. fewer crimes recorded in the Metropolitan police district than in 1986. There were falls in recorded offences of rape, autocrime and burglary. Recorded offences of robbery and violence against the person increased although they still formed less than 6 per cent. of total recorded crime in 1987.

Gambling Machines

15. Dr. Reid: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has received any representations regarding the current review on the abuse of gambling machines.

Mr. John Patten: Yes. In the course of our review of the law on amusement arcades, we have received representations from a wide range of organisations and individuals.

43. Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the representations made to him regarding his review on the abuse of gambling machines.

Mr. John Patten: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given on 4 March to questions from my hon. Friend the Member for Taunton (Mr. Nicholson) at column 722, and to replies I gave today to questions from my hon. Friend the Member for Birmingham, Hall Green (Mr. Hargreaves) and the hon. Member for Motherwell, North (Dr. Reid).

52. Mr. Andrew Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received on the positioning of fruit or other gambling machines in fast food outlets where children and young teenagers congregate; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: In the course of our review of the law on amusement arcades we have received representations that additional restrictions are required on amusement-with-prizes machines wherever they are provided. The suggestion most frequently made in these representations is that access to places providing the machines or use of the machines themselves should be restricted to people aged over 16 or 18 years. It has also been represented to us that the current law is adequate. Under that law, local authorities already have power to ban the machines from premises other than amusement arcades and may pass a resolution limiting the machines to a particular class of premises or limiting the number of machines on any premises.

We hope to be able to reach conclusions on our review in due course.

Solicitors (Client Information)

16. Mr. Archer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many cases have occurred since 1972 where solicitors have been found to have passed on to a third party or parties, from clients now in police custody, information which has interfered in the police investigation of the case or any subsequent prosecution.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I regret that this information is not available.

Tamils

17. Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has received regarding the treatment in Sri Lanka of Tamils deported from the United Kingdom during the last month; and if this will be taken into account when decisions on future deportations are made.

Mr. Renton: There is no obligation under the United Nations convention on refugees to monitor the treatment of unsuccessful asylum seekers after return to their country of origin, and we have no mechanism for doing so. I understand, however, from our High Commission in Colombo that Tamils recently returned there have not been harassed in any way on arrival and that one has specifically stated that he has encountered no problems since his return.

So far as future cases are concerned, each will be considered on its merits in the light of all the relevant circumstances.

Television Licences

18. Mr. Holt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many television licence evaders in Cleveland were prosecuted in each of the past 10 years.

Mr. Renton: The readily available information is as follows:

	Number
1979-80	1,762
1980-81	1,852
1981-82	2,451
1982-83	2,587
1983-84	2,001
1984-85	1,983
1985-86	2,181

The figures have been supplied by the national television licence records office, which instigates all prosecutions for television licence evasion.

19. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent representations he has received calling for legislation providing free television licences for all pensioners; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: Since 1 January this year, one petition forwarded by an hon. Member has been received and three hon. Members and 17 members of the public have written seeking free television licences for pensioners.

28. Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he is now in a position to announce his decision on applications for concessionary television licences, following the Kirklees judgment.

Mr. Renton: We hope to do so shortly.

Fraud

20. Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals he has for reforming the law in relation to fraud.

Mr. John Patten: Provisions giving effect to the main recommendations of the Roskill committee on fraud trials have been either enacted in the Criminal Justice Act 1987 or included in the current Criminal Justice Bill.

London (Parking Control)

21. Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to transfer responsibility for parking control and enforcement from the Metropolitan police to the London boroughs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The possibility of giving local authorities, including those in London, more responsibility for the enforcement of parking regulations is among the matters being considered by a working party of representatives from the Home Office, Department of Transport, police and local authority associations. We hope to receive their report in the autumn.

Day Fine System

23. Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has given further consideration to the introduction of a day-fine system.

Mr. John Patten: We have no plans for legislation to introduce a formal day-fine system, but we are setting up experiments to see whether mean assessment can be improved so that fines can be linked more closely to the capacity of less well-off offenders to pay them.

Hampshire Constabulary

24. Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will reconsider his decision not to increase further the establishment of the Hampshire constabulary.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: As indicated in my reply of 15 February at column 437 to an earlier question from my hon. Friend, further consideration will be given to the application for an increase in the establishment of the Hampshire constabulary in 1988-89.

Commercial Radio Stations

25. Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received on the obligations of commercial radio stations to include news in their programming under his proposed new arrangements for broadcasting; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: Some comments on the radio Green Paper published last year suggested that commercial stations should continue to be required to include in their broadcasts a certain amount of news. We have, however, taken the view that stations should be able to decide for themselves on the basis of their own judgment of listeners' wishes how much, if any, news to provide and in what form. The legislative proposals we shall bring before Parliament will however include a provision requiring that any news that is broadcast by a licensed station must be presented with accuracy and impartiality.

Child Abuse Trials (Video Evidence)

26. Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received seeking the possibility of the use of pre-recorded video evidence in court of children in abuse cases.

Mr. John Patten: Two thirds of those who responded to our consultation paper issued last May on the use of video technology at the trials of alleged child abusers expressed some support for the wider use of video recordings. Since then we have also received a small number of letters of support from some hon. Members and members of the public. Recently I met a deputation led by the noble Baroness Faithfull, and one from the Police Federation led by my hon. Friend the Member for Bury St. Edmunds (Sir E. Griffiths) and in each case had useful discussions on the issue.

Autocrime

27. Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has for seeking to reduce car crime.

Mr. John Patten: Last November, the Home Office standing conference on crime prevention set up a working group to consider the prevention of car crime. Austin-Rover, who are represented on the working group, have offered to produce a thief-proof concept car, incorporating a range of the latest technology in car security, for display at this year's standing conference in December.

Three parts of a British Standard on vehicle security (mechanical locking systems, security of in-car entertainment equipment, and window etching) have been published and further parts are due to be published shortly. We are seeking to have the British Standard adopted as a European Community directive.

Our new crime prevention publicity campaign launched earlier this month includes information on car crime and the scope for preventing it.

Litter

29. Dr. Michael Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis on the priority accorded by the Commissioner to the detection or prevention of litter offences.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Government are concerned about the effect of litter on the environment. We do not regard this problem as one to which the primary response should be enforcement of the law by the police. Nevertheless, I understand from the Commissioner that his officers have been made aware of the provisions of the Litter Act and that the detection and prevention of litter offences are accorded as much priority as is compatible with other demands placed upon the Metropolitan police.

Olympic Games (Shooting Disciplines)

30. Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will take steps to assess whether the provisions of the Firearms Bill will prevent British participation in all the shooting disciplines in international events, such as the Olympics; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have met representatives of shooting organisations with an interest in rifle shooting to assess the effects that the Government's proposals to prohibit high-powered, self-loading rifles will have on British participation in international shooting competitions. I understand that full bore self-loading rifles are not used in any of the Olympic disciplines, or in international competitions organised by the Union International de Tir. Although some international "practical" rifle competition take place, the number of British shooters is limited. The Bill does not otherwise affect British participation in international events.

Drug Trafficking

31. Mr. Sackville: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what further progress has been made in his campaign to prevent trafficking in cocaine and other illegal drugs.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Government continue to attach the highest priority to our comprehensive strategy aimed at tackling both the demand for and supply of drugs. The strategy is co-ordinated by the interdepartmental ministerial group on the misuse of drugs which I chair.

We are playing a leading role in drawing up a new United Nations convention on drug trafficking, and continue to encourage improved international co-operation (for example, by signing last month a memorandum of understanding with the Soviet Union). We provide development aid and bilateral assistance to producer and transit countries for crop substitution measures and to combat drug production and trafficking. In addition, the Home Office programme for drug-related enforcement projects overseas will increase from £0·5 million to £2 million per year as from 1988-89, some of which will be targeted on coca producing countries in South America. We plan to add to our existing network of customs and police drug liaison officers at strategic points abroad.

We have strengthened domestic enforcement by both customs and police and will be providing increased resources to the national drug intelligence unit in 1988-89. Since the Drug Trafficking Offences Act 1986 came into force a year ago, some £7 million in assets has been frozen and substantial sums confiscated. We are now seeking reciprocal agreements with other countries to make these powers even more effective and the first such agreement with the USA was signed last month.

Chief Constables (Meeting)

32. Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he next expects to meet representatives of the non-metropolitan chief constables; and what subjects he expects to discuss.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My right hon. Friend plans to meet representatives of the Association of Chief Police Officers in the near future to discuss a number of topics, including prisoners held in police cells.

Immigration Policy

33. Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on what basic principles he bases his immigration policy.

Mr. Renton: In broad terms, the basic principles of the Government's immigration policy are to allow genuine visitors and students to come here; to give effect to the free movement provisions of European Community law; subject to that, to restrict severely the numbers coming to live permanently in this country or for employment, but to continue to admit the spouses and minor dependent children of those already settled here, provided they satisfy the requirements of the immigration rules. These principles are to be pursued firmly but fairly with the efficient use of resources.

Broadcasting (White Paper)

34. Mr. Leigh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he proposes to publish a White Paper on the future of broadcasting.

Mr. Renton: We intend to publish a White Paper within a few months.

Identity Cards

35. Mr. Andrew MacKay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will consider introducing identity cards in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No. This question has been considered from time to time, but we are not persuaded that there is a sufficiently strong case for reintroducing identity cards.

Homicide

36. Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the total number of homicides in 1958, 1968, 1978 and 1987.

Mr. John Patten: The information up to 1986 is published in table 4.1 of "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales, 1986" (Cm. 233), a copy of which is in the Library. Corresponding information for 1987 is not yet available.

Lunar House (Post Room)

37. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he now expects the post room to be cleared at Lunar house; and what proposals he has to remove the delays to the processing of passports and naturalisation papers.

Mr. Renton: I refer my hon. Friend to the announcement which I made on 16 February at column 863.

Shops Act 1950

38. Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to seek to amend the Shops Act 1950.

Mr. Renton: We are considering how best the law can be amended to bring sense and consistency to the present situation on Sunday trading.

Child Homicide (Sentences)

39. Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received regarding the minimum sentencing of offenders convicted of child homicide; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: We receive many letters about sentencing policy, some of which propose the introduction of minimum sentences. There is a mandatory sentence of life imprisonment for murder. In exercising discretion over the release of offenders sentenced to life imprisonment, my right hon. Friend follows his predecessor's policy under which sexual or sadistic murderers of children can expect to serve at least 20 years in custody. The maximum penalty for manslaughter of infanticide is also life imprisonment: the circumstances of such offences vary considerably; and statutory minimum sentences would be an unjustifiable interference with judicial discretion.

Gwent Police Force

40. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the manning of the Gwent police force.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My right hon. Friend approved an increase of eight posts in the Gwent constabulary with effect from 1 January 1988, bringing it up to 986. Gwent police authority has applied for an increase of a further 42 posts for 1988-89. This application will be considered, along with others in the light of advice from Her Majesty's inspectors of constabulary.

Exeter Prison

41. Mr Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons Exeter prison is designed to accommodate; how many were held there on the first days of January and February; how many of them were on remand awaiting trial and sentence; and if he will make a statement on the future of Exeter prison.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The certified normal accommodation of Exeter prison, including the remand centre, is 307. On 1 January the prison held 461 prisoners of whom 266 were sentenced, 62 were convicted but unsentenced and 133 were unconvicted. On 1 February the figures were 495, 305, 27 and 163 respectively. Refurbishment work currently in progress on the prison's D wing is due to be completed at the end of this year. That will enable 40 places to be brought back into use.

Butane Gas

42. Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any proposals for changes in the law affecting the sale of butane gas canisters and other substances used for sniffing to children and young persons; amd if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: The Government supported the passage through Parliament of the Intoxicating Substances (Supply) Act 1985, which penalises a person who supplies (or offers to supply) a substance, knowing or having reasonable cause to believe that it is likely to be inhaled by somebody under the age of 18 to achieve intoxication. We have no plans to amend this Act, but we will continue to encourage voluntary co-operation by retailers in controlling the supply of volatile substances to young people.

Independent Broadcasting Authority

44. Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he last met the chairman of the Independent Broadcasting Authority; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Renton: My right hon. Friend last met the chairman of the IBA on 19 January to discuss the Government's proposals for the future of commercial radio.

Telephone Tapping

45. Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to receive the next review of telephone tapping; and if he will make it his policy to publish the review.

Mr. Hurd: I expect my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister to present Lord Justice Lloyd's next annual report to the House later this month. As was the case last year, the report will be published and copies will be placed in the Library.

Victim Support Schemes

46. Mr. Burt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the results of his Department's funding for local victim support schemes.

Mr. John Patten: We are making available up to £11 million over the next three financial years for the benefit of local victims support schemes. We have made 155 awards to enable local schemes to employ paid co-ordinators, and 54 awards to help schemes meet running costs. We are also sponsoring three projects aimed at developing improved support for the families of murder victims, children as victims, and victims of racial harassment.

Crime Prevention

47. Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether Her Majesty's Government will take steps to improve co-operation against crime between the United Kingdom and other Western European countries.

Mr. John Patten: We are committed to strengthening the United Kingdom's effectiveness in the fight against international crime, and are taking forward a number of initiatives. The Drug Trafficking Offences Act 1986 enhances international co-operation by providing for the seizure of the profits of drug trafficking wherever it takes place. The extradition of people accused or convicted of serious crimes abroad is also a vital weapon: the reforms contained in the Criminal Justice Bill will, if enacted, enable the United Kingdom to accede to the European convention on extradition, the principal extradition arrangement in western Europe. At the level of operational co-operation the United Kingdom police participate in the International Police Organisation (Interpol). In other international organisations such as "Trevi" we continue to play a leading role in strengthening and improving co-operation against terrorism.

For the future, we published on 24 February a discussion paper on international mutual assistance in criminal matters, copies of which are in the Library. The paper is based on the report of an official working group which endorsed proposals for amending the law to enable the United Kingdom to participate in mutual assistance treaties and conventions (including the European convention on mutual assistance). Such participation would allow our prosecuting authorities to obtain evidence from abroad for use in criminal proceedings here, and enable us to provide similar facilities for other countries.

49. Mr. Stevens: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has for encouraging new crime prevention schemes.

Mr. John Patten: On 7 March my right hon. Friend announced the safer cities programme, under which it is intended to establish 20 crime prevention projects in high crime inner city areas over the next three years. After the necessary local consultation has taken place, a further announcement will be made about the location of the first of these projects

On 9 March we launched a new crime prevention publicity campaign. A central feature of the campaign is a handbook entitled "Practical Ways to Crack Crime". This offers a wide range of advice and information to individuals and organisations about what they can do to help prevent crime against themselves and their communities, including advice about how to join or start up local crime prevention schemes.

We hope to make a further announcement shortly about the formation of a national organisation to support local crime prevention and initiatives.

Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis

48. Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he last met the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis; and what was discussed.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My right hon. Friend last met the Commissioner on 4 February at a luncheon when they talked about a number of policing issues.

Prison Service

51. Mr. Soames: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on industrial relations in the prison service.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The national executive committee of the Prison Officers' Association has expressed concern about certain aspects of the new working practices introduced under fresh start and about manpower resources. Following a national ballot in favour of industrial action, it instructed its members not to complete a form required by management in connection with the control and allocation of staff hours. Talks are being held between officials and members of the NEC and some progress has been made. We urge the POA NEC now to recommend all industrial action be suspended in view of the progress. Local action is currently taking place over manpower issues surrounding the introduction of fresh start at Wormwood scrubs and Pentonville. The prison population at those establishments has been reduced and the numbers held in police cells has risen.

The fresh start working arrangements represented a major change for the prison service. No one doubted that the change would be difficult to achieve but a good start has been made and a recent study confirms that we are moving in the right direction. We are determined to see the task through to completion. We remain committed to achieving these crucial goals in the spirit of constructive collaboration with prison service trade unions.

Marriage Agencies

Mr. Allen Adams: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any proposals to change the laws governing the control of agencies that advertise marriage arrangements between male British nationals and women from overseas, especially the Phillipines.

Mr. John Patten: We have no plans at present to introduce legislation to control marriage agencies.

Consultative Documents

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy that responses received to consultative documents issued by his Department be made publicly available by placing these in his Department's library, except where the respondent has specifically asked that this not be done; and if he will arrange for this procedure to be made clear when future consultative documents are issued.

Mr. Hurd: No. There would be practical difficulties in arranging for inspection in this way in my Department. But in keeping with our policy of promoting greater openness in Government, I shall continue to look for ways in which more information about the work of the Department, and the measures it introduces, can be made publicly available.

Prisons (Syringes)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in how many prisons syringes have been discovered in the last year; what was the number for each prison; how many were discovered to contain the AIDS virus; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: During 1987, finds of syringes were reported in the following 13 establishments:

	Number
HMP Bedford	3
HMP Bristol	1
HMYCC Castington	1
HMP and YCC East Sutton Park	1
HMP and YCC Exeter	1
HMP Holloway	1
HMP Liverpool	2
HMP Manchester	5
HMP Preston	2
HMP Reading	2
HMP Shepton Mallet	4
HMYCC Thorn Cross	1
HMP Wandsworth	3
TOTAL	27

In addition, seven syringes were found in a visitor's bag at Brixton. It is not normally the practice to have such items tested for HIV antibody.

Prisoners (Transfer to Northern Ireland)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many requests for transfer to Northern Ireland prisons were received from prisoners serving their sentences in England and Wales during 1986 and 1987; and how many were granted.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: In 1986, 25 requests for permanent transfer were received, two of which were granted; in 1987, 31 such requests were received and three were granted. A number of these requests are still being considered by the Home Office and the Northern Ireland Office.

Metropolis (Access to Streets)

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 4 March, Official Report, column 725, on Downing street, what other streets in the metropolis have had similar permanent restrictions placed on their use for the reasons given in respect of Downing street.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I am informed by the commissioner that access to no other streets has been similarly restricted.

Downing Street (Access)

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 4 March, Official Report, column 725, on Downing street, the decision of the commissioner was made after consultation with, or application by, the residents of Downing street.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The decision was made after consultation with the Prime Minister's office.

Remand Prisoners

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners are being kept on remand in prisons more than 20 miles from their families' homes.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The information requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Civil Defence

Mr. Gerald Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he proposes to publish the conclusions of his review, of the role of the civil defence college, Easingwold.

Mr. John Patten: The results of the review are under consideration; no decision has yet been taken on publication.

Mr. Gerald Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Eastbourne (Mr. Gow) of 10 July, Official Report, columns 307-8, if the review of the United Kingdom warning and monitoring organisation will take into account the need for the introduction of measures to alert the public against local peace time emergencies.

Mr. John Patten: The review is principally concerned with wartime arrangements, but their possible relevance to peacetime emergencies is also being considered.

Mr. Gerald Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Eastbourne (Mr. Gow) of 10 July, Official Report, columns 307-8, when the review of the United Kingdom warning and monitoring organisation will be complete; and if the conclusions will be published.

Mr. John Patten: The review is expected to be completed in the next few months, and consideration will then be given to the extent to which its conclusions can be made available.

Football Matches (Arrests)

Mr. Heffer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has as to how many arrests there have been (a) inside football grounds and (b) outside football grounds arising from football matches during the current season.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: There were 2,297 arrests arising from Football League matches up to 31 October 1987, the latest date for which figures are available for this season. The figures do not distinguish between arrests occurring inside and outside football grounds.

National Identification Bureau

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department why the name of a constituent of the hon. Member for Basingstoke, the name of whom has been forwarded to him, whose conviction by court martial was quashed by the Courts Martial Appeals Court in 1963, has not been removed from the criminal records of the national identification bureau.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: As my noble Friend Lord Ferrers explained to the hon. Member in his letter of 9 March 1988, the conviction of his constituent by court martial has been retained on the records of the national identification bureau because it has not been notified of the result of any appeal. The bureau is now seeking further information from the prosecuting authority, following my hon. Friend's representation on behalf of his constituent.

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what individuals, organisations or authorities have, since 1963, had access to the criminal records of the national identification bureau; and in what circumstances.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The national identification bureau does not release details of criminal records to outside organisations except where disclosure is clearly in the public interest. On this basis, such information may be released, from time to time, depending on the particular circumstances of the case, to any of the following organisations:

Central Government Departments
Local Authorities
Foreign Governments (under Interpol arrangements)
Police Forces
Prosecuting Authorities
Courts
Judges
Magistrates
Prison Service
Probation Service
Hospitals
Banks
Lawyers
Research Organisations
British Telecom
British Broadcasting Corporation
Civil Aviation Authority
Post Office
Police Complaints Authority
General Medical Council and other similar professional organisations
Official Receiver
Traffic Commissioners
Criminal Injury Compensation Board
Crown Agents
Crown Estate Commissioners
National Museums and Galleries
Royal Mint
United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority

Information is also released on application to individuals under the subject access provisions of the Data Protection Act 1984.

Citizenship

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the total number of applications received for British citizenship by (a) adults and (b) children in each of the last five calendar years; and in each category how many were granted.

Mr. Renton: The number of applications received in caseworking groups in the years 1983-1986 is shown in the table.

	Adults	Minors
1983	70,416	9,433
1984	33,857	8,136
1985	41,905	10,666
1986	45,885	11,598

We estimate that about 290,000 applications were received in 1987.

Figures for grants of citizenship in 1983 to 1986 were published in table 2 of Home Office statistical bulletin "Citizenship Statistics, United Kingdom 1986" (Issue 29/87). Provisional figures for 1987 indicate that grants of citizenship were made to 55,600 adults and 9,200 minors. Final figures for 1987 will be published later this year.

Meridian

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has sent to the Secretary of State for Social Services correspondence with regard to Meridian referred to in his letter of 5 October 1987 to the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton, stating that he was sending this correspondence to that Secretary of State.

Mr. Hurd: A check with records held in the Department indicates that, as the right hon. Member was notified on 5 October 1987, the correspondence was forwarded to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Services. As the right hon. Member will know from my right hon. Friend's reply of 14 March at column 470, his Department has been unable to trace the correspondence despite extensive inquiries and he has therefore undertaken to look into the matter immediately on receipt of a copy of the correspondence.

Lincoln Prison

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if, pursuant to his reply of 8 March, Official Report, column 111, he will give details of the number of prisoners currently held in the remand wing of Lincoln prison; if he will give the number of urinals and water closets normally available and in use, and presently available and in use in Lincoln prison; if he will give details of the arrangements presently in operation for prisoners on remand in Lincoln prison to use urinals and water closets; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: On 15 March 1988, a total of 103 prisoners were in the remand wing of Lincoln prison. Prior to the commencement of the present refurbishment work on the toilet facilities in Lincoln prison there were 16 urinals and 31 water closets available and in use by prisoners (four urinals and eight water closets being situated in the remand wing). As a result of the refurbishment so far completed there are 28 urinals and 34 water closets available and in use (two urinals and four water closets being in the remand wing). Refurbishment of toilet facilities is in progress on two floors of the remand wing and, while this work continues, prisoners from these floors will use the facilities available on the other two floors of the remand wing and in the adjacent B wing.

DNA Testing

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he proposes to publish the feasibility study into DNA testing; and what are the broad conclusions of the study, including recommendations about establishing funding arrangements to enable those with limited financial resources to take DNA tests.

Mr. Renton: Officials have been consulting the scientists concerned on the text of a draft report. We expect the report to be published shortly.

Victims of Crime

Mr. Franks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action the Government are taking to improve the treatment of the victims of crime.

Mr. John Patten: The Criminal Justice Bill will strengthen the arrangements for victims to obtain compensation, will extend anonymity for rape victims and will enable children under 14 to give evidence by live closed circuit television link. We are making available up to £11 million over the next three financial years for the benefit of local victims support schemes. More than 200 awards have been made to local victims schemes as a result of our substantial new programme of funding. We shall shortly be issuing advice to police forces on further ways of helping victims. We shall also produce new leaflets advising victims on compensation and victims support and on attending court.

Party Conferences (Police Costs)

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent representations he has received regarding the funding of additional police costs in respect of national annual party political conferences.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have received recent representations from seven hon. Members, one local council, one police authority, one constituency Labour party and one chamber of commerce about the funding of police costs of national annual party political conferences in a number of areas.

We have considered all these representations carefully but have concluded that we would not be justified in departing from normal police funding arrangements in these cases.

Passports

Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he intends to seek parliamentary approval to replace the British passport with a European passport as planned for 1992; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: British passports are not being replaced with a European one. Rather, a new version of the British passport, machine-readable and in a common format agreed in 1981 with other member states of the European Community, will start to appear from this July when the Glasgow passport office is computerised. By the end of 1989 all six passport offices in the United Kingdom should be issuing British passports in the new format. Prototypes of the new passport and an explanatory note were placed in the Library in July 1984, and supplemented in December 1987 with updated versions of both.

Mrs. Sherbanu Dharas

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he intends to reply to the letter sent to him on 7 December 1987 by Councillor Mike Jackson in respect of Mrs. Sherbanu Dharas.

Mr. Renton [holding answer 3 March 1988]: A reply has now been sent to Councillor Jackson.

SCOTLAND

South of Scotland Electricity Board

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last met the chairman of the South of Scotland Electricity Board; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Lang: My right hon. and learned Friend meets the chairman of the South of Scotland Electricity Board from time to time to discuss a wide range of matters affecting the electricity supply industry.

Pupils (Records)

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) when he intends to issue a circular to local education authorities on the keeping and disclosure of pupil records; and when he expects to table regulations in Parliament;

(2) when he intends to issue a consultation document on the keeping and disclosure of records concerning students in further education establishments; and when he expects regulations to be tabled in Parliament.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My right hon. and learned Friend will honour the undertaking given to the hon. Member in April 1987 and will make regulations dealing with access to education and social work records, if possible by the end of 1988.

Councils of Social Service

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the funding of local councils of social service in rural Scotland, showing the amount paid to each local council of social service from public funds and the overall total paid to individual councils and to the Scottish Council for Voluntary Organisations in each of the last five years and for the coming year; and if it is his policy that these councils should be financed from (a) central or (b) local government.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My right hon. and learned Friend continues to attach importance to the claims of local councils of social service operating in rural areas in the allocation of grant assistance, under the Social Work (Scotland) Act 1968, to voluntary bodies in the social work field. The amounts of grant paid to individual councils for each year of the five-year period ending 31 March 1988 are in table A.

Total grant to local councils will be increased in 1988-89 to £504,000. That sum will be distributed to existing councils and three or four new councils which are expected to enter the grant arrangements for the first time. Allocations to individual councils will be indicated shortly.

Grant is paid in each case as a percentage of proposed total expenditure and councils are required to find the balance of their income from other sources. They are not required to obtain assistance from local authorities though this is in practice the source from which most additional funding is obtained.

Grants paid to the Scottish Council for Voluntary Organisations during each year of the same five-year period are set out in table B.

The council has been informed that, following the reassessment of priorities which led to the proposed increase in the level of support for local councils, grant for 1988-89, under section 10(1) of the 1968 Act, in respect of headquarters expenditure will be reduced to £250,000. In addition grant, amounting to £28,100, under section 9 of that Act, will be made towards the council's training activities. The council is free to seek additional income from other sources.

Central Government grants paid to local councils of social service

Coatbridge Project

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he intends to meet the appropriate local authority, hon. Members representing Monklands and other interested parties, to discuss the funding of the Coatbridge project or its successor project.

Mr. Lang: The funding of the Coatbridge project or any successor project is a matter for the partners in the project. My right hon. and learned Friend plans to visit Coatbridge on 18 March, when he expects to meet many of those with an interest in the project.

Scottish Health Management Efficiency Group

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 14 March, Official Report, column 171, if he will list the members of the Scottish Health Management Efficiency Group; when it was set up; where it is located; and what is its remit.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I assume that the hon. Member is referring to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Edinburgh, Central (Mr. Darling) in the Official Report at column 333.

The present membership of the Scottish Health Management Efficiency Group is as follows:

Mr. J. D. M. Robertson, OBE (Chairman), Chairman, Orkney Health Board;

Mr. D. Adams Jones, Director, Information Statistics Division Common Services Agency;

Dr. C. M. Brough, Chief Administrative Medical Officer, Lothian Health Board;

Mr. F. Clark, General Manager, Lanarkshire Health Board;

Mr. I. G. Dorward, Acting General Manager, Fife Health Board;

Mr. J. M. Eckford, General Manager, Ayrshire and Arran Health Board;

Mr. C. W. Ellis, Chairman, Grampian Health Board;

Miss I. I. Gordon, Deputy Chief Nursing Officer, Scottish Home and Health Department;

Mr. J. R. Hudson, Treasurer, Tayside Health Board;

Mr. L. J. M. Hynd, OBE, Chairman, Forth Valley Health Board;

Mr. K. MacAskill, Chief Work Study Officer, Common Services Agency;

Miss W. R. MacPherson, Chief Area Nursing Officer, Grampian Health Board;

Professor I. W. Percy-Robb, Department of Pathological Biochemistry, Western Infirmary Glasgow;

Mr. L. E. Peterken, General Manager, Greater Glasgow Health Board;

Mr. D. Stevenson, Assistant Secretary, Scottish Home and Health Department;

Mr. R. B. Weatherstone, TD, Chairman, Lothian Health Board;

Dr. D. Steel, Secretary.

The group's secretariat is located at Trinity Park house, Edinburgh.

The group was established in September 1985 with the following remit:

"To plan and co-ordinate arrangements to implement by December 1987 the national review programme proposed by the Efficiency Programmes Group; to make recommendations to the Minister for Education and Health, Health Boards and Common Services Agency on the implementation of review results; to review progress, including the level of savings achieved, by Health Boards and the Common Services Agency in implementing recommendations; to indentify and pursue future priorities for resource savings, to consider other matters relevant to efficiency in the Scottish Health Service; and to report progress."

Simplified Planning Zones

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the Government's policy in respect of simplified planning zones; how he intends to apply it to Monklands district; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Government believe that simplified planning zones will help to ease the burden on business, provide a more secure climate in which businesses can plan ahead, assist in generating confidence in the areas designated and stimulate investment and development activity.

It is primarily for planning authorities to come forward with proposals for simplified planning zones and Monklands district council has been quick to respond, by identifying a site in Coatbridge for potential designation as a simplified planning zone.

Forestry

Sir Hector Monro: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his policy on the location of forestry in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. and learned Friend's policy remains that of encouraging the expansion of forestry in Scotland in suitable locations, so that the economic and social life of rural areas may continue to benefit from forestry activity, with suitable environmental safeguards so as to protect Scotland's natural beauty and wildlife. The new tax and grant arrangements will offer scope for more people to invest in forestry and will increase the incentive to plant in lowland areas.

The present consultation arrangements for forestry planting grant, whose effectiveness will be enhanced under the proposed new grant regime, ensure that any significant planting proposal which is the subject of an unresolved objection from the local authority or, in respect of specially protected areas, from the statutory conservation agencies, is referred to the Secretary of State before any decision is taken to pay grant. My right hon. and learned Friend currently has before him proposals on forestry from the Countryside Commission for Scotland and from the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities and will be considering in that context whether there is scope for further improvement in the present arrangements.

Private Medical Projects

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give, for each year since 1979, the amount of assistance given by the Scottish Development Agency to private medical projects.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 22 February 1988]: The information is given in the following table:

Year	Assistance Given £	Number of Companies/ Individuals Assisted
1979-80	—	—
1980-81	—	—
1981-82	—	—
1982-83	—	—
1983-84	101,500	3
1984-85	90,000	2
1985-86	139,000	4
1986-87	180,000	4
1987-88	—	—

The projects identified above comprise nursing or residential homes where one or more medically qualified staff are involved.

Financial support was provided by way of loan and/or equity as appropriate.

The agency is also active in supporting Scottish companies which provide goods and services in the health care sector; for example, medical instrumentation and drug delivery systems.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Gross Domestic Product

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he last reviewed the allowance of 1¼ per cent. of the expenditure measure of gross domestic product to take account of (a) tax evasion and (b) self employment.

Mr. Major: A "net allowance for evasion", equal to 1¼ per cent. of the expenditure-based measure of gross domestic product (GDP) since 1981, is added to the income-based measure of GDP. This allowance represents the extent to which expenditures which are not concealed from statistical sources result in factor incomes (mainly of the self-employed) which are concealed. The allowance is necessary to ensure the conceptual equivalence of the two measures of GDP. The basis of the assessment, which is examined regularly, is described in "United Kingdom National Accounts: Sources and Methods" (paragraphs 3.32 to 3.36).

Economic Statistics

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what steps he intends to take to improve the economic statistics published by his Department;

(2) if he will list the measures taken to improve the accuracy of his Department's economic statistics since 1981.

Mr. Major: Steps are constantly being taken to improve Treasury statistics.

Vote Bundle (Printing)

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the printing of the Vote bundle.

Mr. Brooke: Since Wednesday 2 March, all amendments and proceedings have appeared in printed form. This represents a substantial achievement by Her Majesty's Stationery Office, given the volume of overnight printing. The printed Vote bundle distributed on 3 March is believed to be the largest in the history of the House of Commons.

Banking Act 1987

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when section 38 of the Banking Act 1987 will come into force.

Mr. Lilley: The Treasury has now made the commencement order for section 38 of the Banking Act 1987 to come into effect on 1 April. This section requires authorised institutions to report large credit exposures to the Bank of England. Exposures to a single borrower or group of connected borrowers above 10 per cent. of a bank's capital base must be reported after the event; proposed exposures above 25 per cent. of capital must be reported before the event. The main provisions of the Act came into force on 1 October 1987, and the date for implementing section 38 was announced at that time.

Importers' Details (Disclosure)

Mr. David Davis: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will announce the Government's decision on the question of disclosure of importers' details, on which the Government consulted interested parties in 1987.

Mr. Lilley: The Government intend to legislate in the 1988 Finance Bill to permit disclosure by sale of the names and addresses of importers. This follows the public consultation announced in last year's Budget debate in which a majority of those asked were in favour of the steps being taken. Customs and Excise will provide marketing agents monthly with the names and addresses of importers as shown on import declarations. The names will be listed against each of the nine digit commodity codes as published in the integrated tariff of the United Kingdom. The charge to marketing agents will be set at a level to cover Customs' costs. The marketing agents will be free to publish the information in a form and at a price attractive to their customers. The current arrangements known as suppressions will be continued. It is hoped to implement the arrangements from January 1989. This proposal should add significantly to the free flow of information on which competitive and efficient markets rely. Both industry and customers should benefit through improvements in the effectiveness of marketing, market research and product development.

SOCIAL SERVICES

1991 Census (Ethnic Origin)

53. Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he will make a decision on the inclusion of an ethnic origin question in the 1991 census; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: Proposals on the content of the 1991 census will be published as a White Paper later this year. It is planned to test the proposed questionnaire in early 1989 and thereafter to lay before Parliament a draft Order in Council prescribing the content of the census.

AIDS

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what proposals the chief medical officer made to the recent world conference on AIDS on facing up to the spread of the virus within prisons and after a prisoner is released.

Mr. Newton: The chief medical officer addressed the world summit on "Modes of transmission of HIV as a basis for prevention strategies". The purpose of his speech was to draw attention to problems that need to be addressed in this area, including that of HIV infection among prisoners, and not to make specific proposals.

Hospital Capital Programme

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the hospital capital programme, in cash and constant prices, together with the percentage increase or decrease over the preceding year, in each year since 1974-75.

Mr. Newton: Capital expenditure by regional and special health authorities, in the form requested by my hon. Friend, is given in the table.

Regional and Special Health Authorities Capital Expenditure (England)

Park Lane Hospital

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects to receive the report of the review of security at Park lane hospital; and if he will make it his policy to publish the report's conclusions in the Official Report.

Mr. Newton: The review team will be reporting to hospital management and the Department in August this year. Security arrangements at the hospital are not made public so as not to prejudice their effectiveness. It will not, therefore, be our intention to publish the findings of the review.

Community Health Councils

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the annual cost of community health councils.

Mrs. Currie: The total cost of community health council expenditure in 1986-87, the latest available figure, was £7·2 million. This figure includes staffing, premises and other costs.

Fraud

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the estimated cash saving accrued to his Department in the last year as a result of the activities of his Department's benefit fraud investigators in the Seaham and Peterlee areas during that period; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: Estimated benefit savings achieved in the year ended 9 February 1988 were £260,000.

Urgent Cases

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any plans to introduce new consultant, senior registrar or other senior posts in general surgery, ear, nose and throat, traumatic and orthopaedic and gynaecology, where the waiting lists are urgent.

Mr. Newton: Government policy is that new consultant posts should be set up to meet the needs of patient care as determined by health authorities in the light of the Government's broad priorities. Currently consultant expansion is averaging 2 per cent. per annum over all specialties. In addition, the Government are funding centrally 100 new posts targeted on specialties with particular problems of structural imbalance, including general surgery and traumatic and orthopaedic surgery.

Amenity Beds

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what efforts are being made to promote amenity beds.

Mrs. Currie: Existing instructions to health authorities are for amenity beds to be offered routinely to National Health Service patients when they are given a date for admission.

We are currently seeking powers in the Health and Medicines Bill to enable health authorities to charge for amenity beds on a commercial basis. Later in the year we will issue guidance to promote the use of amenity beds under these new powers.

Surgical Treatment

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if the new senior posts, one rank below consultant, carry the right to sole responsibility for a patient for surgical treatment without the necessity of reference to a consultant.

Mr. Newton: The new staff grade is a non-training grade intended for doctors who do not wish or are unable to train for consultant status. The staff doctor will be clinically responsible to a nominated consultant for all tasks and duties of the post although the degree to which these are delegated will be a matter for consultants' clinical judgment.

Community Care

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what sum has been spent or budgeted for in each of the district health authorities for the training and preparation of staff for the shift to the provision of care in the community;

(2) what sum has been spent and budgeted for in each of the district health authorities for the purpose of preparing patients for the shift into care in the community.

Mr. Newton: The information requested is not available centrally.

Nurses

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his estimate, for each regional health authority, and for the United Kingdom as a whole, in the last year for which figures are available, of how many National Health Service nurses left the Health Service for (a) private hospitals, and (b) private residential homes; and how many rejoined the National Health Service from the private sector.

Mr. Newton: The information is not collected centrally.

Recently published research estimated that, in 1985, the annual number of nurses joining the private health care sector direct from the NHS was 1,474. This represents approximately seven nurses per district health authority. Annually an estimated 477 nurses rejoin the NHS from the private sector.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give the total number of nurses employed (a) in the National Health Service and (b) in the private sector in each year since 1958, together with the annual turnover rate; and if he will give the equivalent information for other occupational groups within the National Health Service.

Mr. Newton [holding answer 8 February 1988]: Such information on staff employed as is available is shown in the tables.

Information on NHS staff employed in England is not available on a consistent basis prior to 1971.

Information on private sector nursing staff is not available prior to 1982.

Information on turnover rates is not available centrally for NHS or private sector. However the most commonly accepted estimate for qualified nursing and midwifery staff leaving the NHS is 10 per cent. a year.

NHS Review

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services which outside bodies he has invited to submit evidence to his current review of the National Health Service; and what account he proposes to take of the reports of Royal Commission and Select Committees on this or allied topics.

Mr. Moore: We have made it publicly clear that we shall consider carefully any submissions which are put to us. We shall also take into account any relevant reports and other published material.

South East Thames RHA

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the percentage change in (i) National Health Service funding in real terms and in cash terms and (ii) employment of medical staff from 1978 to 1988 in the South East Thames regional health authority.

Mrs. Currie: The latest available information for hospital and community health services in the South East Thames region is shown in the table.

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list (a) the number of private beds and (b) the total income from private beds in National Health Service hospitals in 1986-87 for the South East Thames regional health authority.

Mrs. Currie: There were 341 authorised pay beds within the South East Thames region at 31 December 1986. The 1986-87 annual accounts of health authorities in the region show that total income from private patients, under section 65 of the National Health Service Act 1977, was £5,732, 413.

Lewisham and North Southwark DHA

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give the nurse-patient ratio in the Lewisham and North Southwark district health authority for each of the last 10 years.

Mrs. Currie: Information on nursing and midwifery staff and hospital activity levels in Lewisham and North Southwark health authority from 1982 to 1986 is provided in the tables. Prior to 1 April 1982 the authority's predecessor health districts formed part of the Lambeth, Southwark and Lewisham area health authority and district-based figures were not collected centrally. The nursing and midwifery staff figures cover a wide range of Health Service activity, not just those related to hospital activity, and calculation of a nurse-patient ratio would be simplistic and might be misleading.

Health Index

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services which indicators will be included in the health index; who has been consulted about which indicators to include; if he will publish the existing list for wider consultation; if he intends to make additional resources available to (a) administer the index and (b) collect any additional data which may be required to compile the index.

Mr. Newton: We have asked officials to consider the feasibility of creating a portfolio of health indicators (health index). Consideration of such points as those raised by the hon. Member will of course depend on the results of the feasibility study.

British Oxygen Company

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how much has been paid to the British Oxygen Co. by the National Health Service, for each year since 1974, at current prices.

Mrs. Currie: I regret that this information is not available. The information which is readily available is as follows. All figures are for England and are at current prices.

Expenditure on medical gases by health authorities

Drug Companies

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is, for each year since 1974, the amount of prescription payments made to drug companies by the National Health Service, at current prices.

Mr. Newton: The cost of drugs to the NHS in England, at 1987-88 prices, is set out in the table:

	Family Practitioner Services £ million	Hospital and Community Health Services
1975-76	805	[1]197
1976-77	926	223
1977-78	1,038	242

Member's Correspondence

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects to give a definitive reply to the letter from the hon. Member for Rugby and Kenilworth dated 23 December 1987 concerning W. D. Caddern of York street, Rugby.

Mr. Portillo: I apologise for the delay.
I wrote to my hon. Friend yesterday.

Cook-chill Catering

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when, pursuant to his answer of 7 March, Official Report, column 51, he expects to reach a conclusion on the request of Wakefield district health authority for an investigation into the introduction of the cook-chill system of catering.

Mrs. Currie: Wakefield health authority's request was for a public inquiry "into the lengthy decision making process prior to the implementation of the cook-chill system of catering in Wakefield".
After careful thought I decided I could not agree to the authority's request and wrote to the chairman to that effect on 8 March, copying my letter to the regional chairman.

The authority in effect sought an inquiry into its own management of business. This seemed neither necessary nor appropriate, particularly when events were at all times fully within the authority's control. Yorkshire regional health authority at its annual review meeting with the district raised a number of concerns. These are being pursued through the normal accountability and review process between RHA and DHA and it seems entirely appropriate that the handling of the implementation of cook-chill should be considered in the same way.

Cancelled Operations

Mr. Watts: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many operations have been cancelled as a consequence of disruptive action by National Health Service employees on Monday 14 March and Tuesday 15 March.

Mr. Newton: The information we have so far received from health authorities show that the number of operations cancelled as a result of industrial action in the National Health Service was 156 on 14 March and 55 on 15 March.

Mildmay Mission Hospital

Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what assistance he intends to provide to the Mildmay mission hospital to provide help and hospice care for people with AIDS and HIV-related illnesses.

Mr. Newton: The Government have approved a further grant of £171,000 towards the capital cost of converting two wards at the hospital to provide help and hospice care for people with AIDS and HIV-related illness and a further revenue grant of £29,000 for the current financial year. This will bring the total capital grants approved for the Mildmay hospital this year to £321,000 and total revenue grants approved to £79,000.

Haemophiliacs (Financial Assistance)

Dame Peggy Fenner: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what progress has been made since the Minister for Health's statement on 16 November 1987, Official Report, column 773, concerning financial assistance to haemophiliacs infected with the AIDS virus.

Mr. Newton: My announcement indicated that the Government would make an ex-gratia grant of £10 million to enable the Haemophilia Society to establish a special trust fund to provide financial help to haemophiliacs infected with the AIDS virus and their families. A charitable trust fund to be known as the Macfarlane Trust has now been established. Letters exchanged with the Haemophilia Society and the trust deed incorporating the objects of the trust have been placed in the Library.

It will be the duty of the trustees to ensure that payments from the trust are made in the most effective way and take into account the differing circumstances of those affected. However to ensure that all the £10 million reaches those in need, regulations have been laid which disregard any payment from the trust fund when deciding entitlement to housing benefit and which also protect the confidentiality of the individual by making it unnecessary to report payments to the local authority. Similar regulations and arrangements have been introduced for income support and family credit. Because the Macfarlane Trust is charitable, beneficiaries will not be liable to income tax on payments made to them. Now that the Macfarlane Trust has been estalished, the £10 million is being paid to the Haemophilia Society.

Surgery Statistics

Mr. Lofthouse: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list in order of frequency the five most common forms of surgery for which patients are admitted to hospitals in (a) the Yorkshire regional health authority and (b) the Pontefract district health authority.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 1 March 1988]: The information requested is given in the table.

Hospitals

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what has been the average cost per patient treated over each of the past five years in (a) the Northern regional health authority and (b) the Sunderland district health authority hospitals.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 7 March 1988]: Tables showing this information by type of hospital and type of patient for the northern region and by individual hospital and type of patient for the Sunderland district have been placed in the Library.

Radiation

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will initiate a departmental evaluation of the paper, a copy of which has been sent to him, by Professor Emeritus E. J. Sternglass and Dr. J. Scheer entitled "Radiation Exposure of Bone Marrow Cells to Strontium 90 during early development as a possible co-factor in the etiology of AIDS", as presented at the first global radiation victims' conference in New York City in October 1987.

Mr. Newton [holding answer 11 March 1988]: When a copy of this paper is received, officials will consider whether it warrants evaluation.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Sheep (Radiation)

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what provisions the Government have adopted for a confirmed scientific source for radiation safety levels in sheep.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding answer 16 March 1988]: In setting the limit of 1,000Bq/kg, the Government took account of the published advice of the National Radiological Protection Board in the United Kingdom and of the interim guidance issued by the group of international experts set up under article 31 of the Euratom treaty. The Government also had to take note of the views of other countries with whom it was important for the United Kingdom to protect trading links.

Environmentally Sensitive Areas

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what staff and monetary resources are being made available for the monitoring of existing environmentally sensitive areas.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 8 March 1988]: We are making sufficient staff and monetary resources available, but it is not possible to separate accurately the staff time devoted to monitoring from other duties related to environmentally sensitive areas.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Driving Licences

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland why it is necessary for the holder of a valid Great Britain driving licence to replace it with a Northern Ireland driving licence before it expires.

Mr. Needham: When the holder of a driving licence issued either in Great Britain or Northern Ireland permanently changes address, the law requires that change to be notified to the relevant licensing authority to have the change recorded and a new licence issued. Holders of a licence issued in Great Britain who take up permanent residence in Northern Ireland must have their new address recorded on a licence issued by the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland, which is responsible for the issue of Northern Ireland driving licences.

Teachers of the Deaf

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the number of qualified teachers of the deaf employed to teach hearing impaired children in schools and units in Northern Ireland.

Dr. Mawhinney: Fifty full-time and two part-time.

Housing Waiting Lists

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people are currently listed on waiting lists to be allocated houses by the Northern Ireland Housing Executive; and how many people are currently on transfer waiting lists.

Mr. Needham: This is a matter for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive. I understand from the chief executive that the numbers on the Housing Executive's waiting list and transfer waiting list at 29 February 1988 are as follows:

	Number
Waiting list	[1] 24,136
Transfer list	22,801

[1] Of whom 11,117 are regarded as being in urgent housing need.

War Memorials

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what facilities exist to have the names of members of the Ulster Defence Regiment who have been murdered by terrorists placed on war memorials in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Needham: Anyone can apply to have a name added to a war memorial, but the decision whether this will be allowed rests with those in whose charge the memorial has been placed. In most, but not all, cases this will be a district council.

ENERGY

Nuclear Material

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy, 9 March, Official Report, columns 200-1, how much nuclear material in the United Kingdom has been subject to exchange of safeguards obligations on the basis of strict equivalent in quantity and quality, in each year since 1973.

Mr. Michael Spicer: This information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Sellafield

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy, 29 February, Official Report, column 483, when he expects the particular safeguards provisions for Sellafield referred to therein to enter into force.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Our aim is to bring the first four particular safeguards provisions for Sellafield into force by the end of 1988.

Uranium

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is Her Majesty's Government's policy on the acceptance of unsafeguarded uranium into the United Kingdom for processing and subsequent re-export without direct use or application in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Michael Spicer: All civil uranium imported into the United Kingdom for processing and subsequent re-export is under safeguards.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Falkland Islands

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has on the gross national product of the Falkland Islands economy in (a) 1986 and (b) 1987.

Mr. Eggar: The Falkland Islands gross national product for 1986 is estimated to have been approximately £9·9 million. In 1987 it was estimated to have risen to approximately £30·2 million.

Phyllis Coard

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make representations to the Government of Grenada on the treatment in prison of Phyllis Coard; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: No. The enforcement of prison regulations, which are presently the same as those introduced by the People's Revolutionary Government of which Mrs. Coard was a member, is entirely a matter for the Grenadian authorities.

Mr. Raoul Wallenberg

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last raised the case of Mr. Raoul Wallenberg with the Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: The case of Raoul Wallenberg was last raised with the Soviet authorities at ministerial level by the then Minister of State, my right hon. and learned Friend the Member for Edinburgh, Pentlands (Mr. Rifkind), during discussions in Moscow in July 1985.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Mairead Farrell

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he will call for a report from the Queen's university, Belfast, authorities on the status of Mairead Farrell; what public funds she was receiving in the year before her death; what steps will be taken to ensure that those with terrorist backgrounds are not able to receive public funds; and if he will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: Mairead Farrell was a full-time student in her first year of study in the faculty of economics at Queen's university, Belfast. Since her enrolment, on 23 September 1987, she received a maintenance grant of £1,380 from the Belfast education and library board. Grants for eligible students are mandatory.

PRIME MINISTER

Members' Delegations

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Prime Minister what guidance she gives to departmental Ministers about receiving delegations from right hon. and hon. Members; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: Such meetings are a matter for the judgment of individual departmental Ministers.

South Manchester Health Authority

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Prime Minister if, in the light of his refusal to meet a delegation of hon. Members to discuss the financial position of South Manchester health authority, she will dismiss the Minister for Health, the right hon. Member for Braintree (Mr. Newton); and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: No.

Mr. R. W. Marshall (Letter)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Prime Minister when she replied to a recent letter by Mr. R. W. Marshall of Cymerau, Dolwen, Blaenau Ffestiniog, on the subject of nuclear reactor risks, radiation fog and smog from power plants.

The Prime Minister: It is not my usual practice to give information on correspondence from third parties.

ATTORNEY GENERAL

Unification Church

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Attorney-General which religious organisations were approached for assistance when preparing the now abandoned appeal against the decision not to remove charity status from the Unification Church.

The Attorney-General [pursuant to his reply, 8 February 1988, c. 42]: Such an approach was made to the Church of England. I also received representations from the following organisations:

The Churches Main Committee; The General Assembly of Unitarian and Free Christian Churches; The Arya Samaj in London; The Ethiopian Orthodox Church.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Schools (Discipline)

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he is now in a position to announce the details of the inquiry he has decided to set up into discipline in schools.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The inquiry will be chaired by my noble Friend Lord Elton, will extend to England and Wales, and will have the following terms of reference:—

"In view of public concern about violence and indiscipline in schools and the problems faced by the teaching profession today, to consider what action can be taken by central Government, local authorities, voluntary bodies owning schools, governing bodies of schools, head teachers, teachers and parents to secure the orderly atmosphere necessary in schools for effective teaching and learning to take palce."

Other members of the Committee are:—

Vice-Chairman

Dr. Roy Bennett, Emeritus Reader in Educational Studies, Derbyshire College of Higher Education.

Members

Mr. Roy Atkinson, Chief Education Officer, Northamptonshire Education Authority.

Mr. J. A. Phillips, OBE, Headteacher of Graveney School, Wandsworth.

Mr. Linbert Spencer, Chief Executive, Project Fullemploy Ltd, London.

I shall be appointing two further members shortly. My intention is that the committee should start its work as soon as possible, and aim to complete its report by the end of the year.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Ministers (Integrated Office System)

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster which companies were asked to tender for the supply of the integrated Office System for Ministers in his Department; on what basis they were selected; what assessment was made of the suitability of HM Systems to provide the service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: A networked engagements management system was needed that could be met only by a bespoke software development. The Department was aware of the typical diary facilities available from a wide range of office automation suppliers and these fell far short of meeting the requirement.

The Department had previously used a particular software systems company to develop an earlier engagement management system. On the basis of that earlier successful implementation, a time and materials contract was placed with that company for the software development and hardware implementation. As part of the implementation, the software systems company had to take account of compatibility requirements. Additional facilities have subsequently been added to provide Ministers with an integrated office system.

Palestinian Terrorists (Military Equipment)

Mr. Latham: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what progress is being made with Her Majesty's Government's inquiry into the allegations of sales of military equipment to Palestinian terrorist organisations; and when it will be completed.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [holding answer 9 March 1988]: Allegations that in 1981-82, military communications equipment was licensed for shipment to the PLO have been investigated by the Departments concerned with the active co-operation of Racal-Tacticom.

Applications to export military communications equipment are considered by relevant Government Departments before any licence is granted by the DTI. Records have been examined and there is no trace of any licence having ever been granted for shipment to the PLO.

The investigation has revealed that in the case of one export licensed in 1982 to a company in the Lebanon an error occurred so that the usual procedures were completed without taking into account information showing that the Lebanon company had links with the PLO. It is possible therefore that this consignment eventually reached the PLO. It was of very small value and the equipment was non-lethal.

No evidence has been found to justify any suggestion of unlawful actions by Racal-Tacticom.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Special Hospitals

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many patients at Park lane hospital have been granted privileges to live at an outside hostel or to study at university while subject to a restriction order in each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: During the last five years one patient subject to a restriction order has been given permission to leave Park lane hospital to attend a college of further education. None has been given leave to attend a university. Two patients in 1983, two in 1985 and one in 1987 were granted leave from the hospital to live at an outside hostel on a trial basis.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what guidance his Department issues to special hospitals on the provision of unescorted trips for inmates who have not been approved for release by mental health tribunals.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Under sections 41 and 49 of the Mental Health Act 1983, persons detained in hospital subject to restriction orders may be granted leave of absence only with my right hon. Friend's consent. Consent is given only when, on the best assessment that can be made in advance, there appears to be no serious risk to the patient or to the public.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many patients detained under the Mental Health Acts have been released from (a) Park lane, (b) Rampton and (c) Broadmoor hospitals in each year since 1979; and how many of those released have since reoffended.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The readily available information is given in the table:

Discharges into the community of patients subject to special restrictions on discharge from special hospitals

	Broadmoor	Park Lane	Rampton
1979	18	1	11
1980	18	1	14

Self-help Transmitter Scheme

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to amend the self-help transmitter scheme as a way of providing alternative television programmes to areas such as Gloucester.

Mr. Renton: The self-help transmitter scheme enables isolated communities not served by the BBC or IBA to construct at their own expense transmitters to relay existing television signals on spare UHF channels. Recently, a community group was licensed on an experimental basis to provide a transmitter offering an alternative to the regional service provided by the BBC-IBA transmitter. Further schemes of this nature will be considered in the light of the current experiment and once decisions have been taken on the possible alternative use of UHF frequencies.

Refugees

Mr. Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received concerning the implications for his policy on refugees of Amnesty International's code of practice for fair treatment of refugees in the United Kingdom, a copy of which has been forwarded to him; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: A number of hon. Members and others have written to me drawing attention to Amnesty International's code of practice for fair treatment of refugees in the United Kingdom. I set out our views on Amnesty's proposals in my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Welwyn Hatfield (Mr. Evans) on 16 March at column 572.

Gary John Byrne

Mr. Holland: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he proposes to reply to the letter of 29 February from the hon. Member for Vauxhall concerning the treatment of Gary John Byrne.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I assume that the question refers to Gary John Byrne. I hope to reply shortly.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Bad Debt

Mr. Cox: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information he has as to the total amount of (a) United Kingdom and (b) overseas bad debt written off by United Kingdom banks in the financial years 1979-80 and 1986-87 at 1986 prices; and what has been the cost at 1986 prices to the Exchequer in each of those years of allowing these provisions to be written off against tax.

Mr. Lilley: I regret that information is not readily available in the form requested.

Customs Clearance (Channel Tunnel)

Mr. Gerald Bowden: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he now has plans to introduce customs clearance for passengers on Channel tunnel trains terminating at London, Waterloo.

Mr. Lilley: No. The most efficient and practicable customs control will be airport-type red and green channels at Waterloo. We are therefore planning on this basis.

Value Added Tax

Mr. Battle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has received any representations on value added tax rules applied to working men's clubs and institutes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley: A few representations about VAT on gaming machines were received in the run-up to the Budget, including those made by the Committee of Registered Clubs Associations.

Excise Duty

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will state those treaty obligations of Her Majesty's Government that either prevented him from making or required him to make changes in rates of excise duty between 1987-88 and 1988-89; and if he will list the commodities so affected.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 17 March 1988]: There is no obligation in the treaty of Rome which requires member states to set particular rates of excise duty. But, amongst other things, article 95 of the treaty prevents any member state from imposing, directly or indirectly, any internal taxation on the products of other member states in excess of that imposed directly or indirectly on similar domestic products. Article 95 applies to all the excise duties levied in the United Kingdom.

ENVIRONMENT

Housing

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the total of Government (a) assisted and (b) allowed capital expenditure by local authorities on (i) local authority housing, (ii) private sector improvement, repair and intermediate grants, and (iii) housing association grants in the financial years 1970-71 to 1986-87 in 1986 prices.

Mr. Waldegrave: At 1986-87 prices the total of gross capital public expenditure on housing in England (local authorities, Housing Corporation and new towns) in 1971-72, the earliest year for which figures are available on a consistent basis, was £4,327 million. The comparable figure for 1986-87 is £3,446 million.

Available information for the three categories of expenditure specified, for England and at 1986-87 prices, is set out in the table. Although the net total of local authority capital spending is cash limited, spending on the individual component elements specified is not. "Allowed" expenditure is taken to mean gross outturn public expenditure by local authorities. "Assisted" expenditure is taken to mean Exchequer contributions voted in estimates. Exchequer contributions in respect of assistance to housing associations cannot be disaggregated before 1976-77 as between local authority and Housing Corporation-sponsored schemes. For completeness, the table therefore also includes public and voted expenditure figures in respect of Housing Corporation-sponsored schemes. Information on public expenditure before 1971-72 and on voted expenditure before 1974-75 cannot be made available except at disproportionate cost.

[1] Uprated from the published cash figures using the GDP deflator.

[2] Consists of Housing Revenue Account (HRA) renovation, HEA land and dwelling acquisitions, HRA new building for rent and Estate Action. Does not include public expenditure on central government subsidies to LA capital expenditure (eg Main Housing Subsidy).

[3] Consists mainly of main housing subsidy which is paid to certain authorities reflecting annual revenue deficits as well as loan charges on capital borrowing. Also includes housing subsidies to the New Towns, which cannot easily be disaggregated.

[4] Public Expenditure on Home Improvement, Repairs and Intermediate Grants.

[5] Voted expenditure supporting Home Improvement, Repairs and Intermediate Grants.

[6] Local Authority support to housing associations for fair rent and low cost home ownership.

[7] Housing Corporation support to HAs for fair rent and low cost home ownership.

[8] Housing Association Grant (HAG) paid via local authorities.

[9] HAG paid via the Housing Corporation.

[10] Before 1974 the Housing Corporation/local authorities made loans to Housing Associations without exchequer support. A new system of funding, including capital grants, was introduced in the 1974 Housing Act.

[11] Cannot be disaggregated.

[12] For these years disaggregated Vote information is not available.

Planning Applications

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish in the Official Report the percentage of planning applications dealt with by local authorities within the statutory eight-week period at the latest available date; and if he will give figures for comparable periods since 1979.

Mr. Waldegrave: The information requested for the latest available quarter and comparable periods since 1979 are given in the table.

TRANSPORT

Vehicle Excise Duty (Evasion)

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his reply of 7 March, Official Report, columns 97-98, to the hon. Member for Gloucester, what is the cost of each intensive local comaign to discourage the evasion of vehicle excise duty carried out during 1987-88; what size of geographical area is covered by each such campaign; and if he has plans to establish a nationwide campaign.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The costs to the Department, together with the relicensing revenue and the court penalties imposed on evaders, of each of the campaigns already held or under way in the present financial year are estimated as follows:

	DTp[1] costs £	Relicensing revenue £	Court penalties £

[1] Police costs are not included; in total, they are probably of a similar order of magnitude.

Each campaign covers a single police force area and is the subject of separate negotiations with the chief constable. Where better publicity can be achieved by synchronised campaigns in adjacent areas, officials endeavour to arrange them in collaboration with the police. I have no plans for a single nationwide campaign.

Mr. Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what estimates have been made by his Department about the number of cars which are in use without a valid road fund licence.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The most recent estimate of vehicle excise duty evasion in Great Britain is based on a national survey in June 1984 which indicated that 580,000 unlicensed cars and vans were in use on the road.

EMPLOYMENT

Official Notepaper

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment why the Royal Arms no longer appear on the official notepaper of his office.

Mr. Nicholls: The Royal Arms crest appears on all letterhead paper supplied to the office of the Secretary of State, for official purposes.

Vocational Education and Training

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the terms of reference, and when is publication expected, of the study of the funding of vocational education and training being undertaken by the Manpower Services Commission.

Mr. Nicholls: The terms of reference of MSC's study of the funding of vocational education and training are:

(a) to describe fully current mechanisms for the financing of vocational education and training in Great Britain (excluding initial continuous full-time schooling) and of individuals (employed and unemployed) undertaking vocational education and training;

(b) to investigate, describe and analyse the effects and effectiveness of those mechanisms; and

(c) to make recommendations on ways in which the mechanisms and means for the financing of vocational education and training could be improved so as to achieve a system which —brings to bear sufficient resources for achievement of the New Training Initiative objectives and the proper vocational education and training of all the country's workforce;

—is effective and efficient in the use of resources;

—is responsive to changing needs; and

—meets labour market requirements.

The study is to be informed by an extensive programme of original research which will report to MSC during the spring and early summer. It is anticipated that the final report will be published later in 1988.

Children

Mr. Archer: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has any plans to introduce legislation requiring employers to provide adequate insurance cover for children in their employment.

Mr. Nicholls: Such provision already exists under the Employers' Liability (Compulsory Insurance) Act 1969.

Industrial Tribunals

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many prosecutions have taken place as a result of industrial tribunals in the south-west in the last year; and in what areas.

Mr. Nicholls: None. Industrial tribunal decisions do not of themselves lead to prosecutions.

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many women have served as sidesmen in industrial tribunals in the south-west in the last year.

Mr. Patrick Nicholls: Twenty-seven.

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many women have served as chairpersons of industrial tribunals in the south-west in the last year.

Mr. Nicholls: None.

SCOTLAND

Plant Grant and Felling Licence Applications

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many planting grant and felling licence applications to the Forestry Commission were objected to on environmental grounds in the last full year for which figures are available.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Twenty-four applications for planting grant were referred to the Forestry Commission's regional advisory committees in the year to 31 December 1987 because of sustained objections on environmental grounds. There were no sustained objections to applications for felling licences.

Civil Defence

Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, in the event of civil or nuclear disaster, what arrangements have been made for distribution of emergency supplies including food.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Regional and island councils have contingency plans for dealing with emergencies, which include arrangements, as appropriate, for the distribution of food and other supplies.

Electorate

Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the electorate in each local authority district council ward in Scotland according to the electoral roll currently in force.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 10 March to the hon. Member for Angus, East (Mr. Welsh) at columns 327-30.

Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the electorate in each parliamentary constituency in Scotland, according to the electoral roll currently in force.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: A table giving this information will be available in April, when I shall send a copy to the hon. Member and place one in the Library.

Rating Reform

Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the latest estimate of the level of uniform business rate for Scotland taking account of proposed rates for the financial year 1988-89.

Mr. Lang: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave on 27 November to the hon. Member for Clydebank and Milngavie (Mr. Worthington) at column 132.

Police Officers

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing for each rank of police officer in Scotland the number who are (i) from ethnic minorities and (ii) women; and what is the total number of police officers in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The position at 31 December 1987 was as follows:

Rank	Ethnic minorities	Policewomen
Chief Constable	—	—
Deputy Chief Constable	—	—
Assistant Chief Constable	—	—
Chief Superintendent	—	—
Superintendent	—	1
Chief Inspector	—	3
Inspector	—	11
Sergeant	3	50
Constable	11	870
Total	14	935

On the same date, total police strength in Scotland was 13,476.

Judges

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many judges in Scotland are (i) from ethnic minorities and (ii) women; and what is the total number of judges in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Of the 24 senators of the College of Justice, six sheriffs principal and 89 sheriffs, four are women. No information is collected centrally on the ethnic origins of judges in Scotland.

Private Medical Projects

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what factors of medical policy are considered by the Scottish Development Agency when considering financial support for private medical projects.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 22 February 1988]: The agency undertakes consultation with appropriate interests in considering support for any private medical project. If consultations bring out factors of medical policy then these are considered by the agency.

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the number of staff in the Scottish Development Agency, and their numbers, currently involved in the consideration of private medical projects.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 22 February 1988]: The numbers of agency staff, and their allocation among divisions, are given in the agency's annual report which is laid before Parliament each year. The staff in post, as at 31 March 1987, was 683.

No members of the agency's staff are employed solely in the consideration of private medical projects such as nursing or other homes for the elderly. Staff in the agency deal with such projects as and when appropriate.

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the private medical projects currently being considered by the Scottish Development Agency for financial assistance, giving the companies involved and the level of assistance.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 22 February 1988]: For reasons of commercial confidentiality, I am unable to provide this information. The number of private medical projects currently being considered by the agency is eight. These comprise projects where one or more medically qualified staff are involved in providing health care.

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if, when considering financial support to private medicine, he takes into consideration the equivalent number of jobs and quality of health care that could be provided in the National Health Service for a similar investment.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 22 February 1988]: No. Applications for financial assistance in respect of health care projects are assessed in terms of any relevant statutory provisions — for example, the Industry Acts — and against the criteria appropriate to the form of assistance applied for.

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland who are the Scottish Development Agency's medical advisers concerned with private medical projects.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 22 February 1988]: The Scottish Development Agency health care division provides in-house expertise in the evaluation of health care projects. Where necessary, this expertise is supplemented by the provision of advicce from specialists who are consulted, in confidence, on a case by case basis.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assistance has been given by the Scottish Development Agency to the setting up of private homes or hospitals for the elderly in each of the years 1983 to 1987; what individuals or companies were involved and what non-financial assistance was provided.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 22 February 1988]: The financial support given by the Scottish Development Agency to the setting up of private homes or hospitals for the elderly in each of the years 1983 to 1987 was as follows:

Year	Assistance given £	Number[1]
1983-84	101,500	3
1984-85	90,000	2
1985-86	139,000	4
1986-87	180,000	4
1987-88	—	—

[1] Companies-individuals assisted.

In each case the information relates to the Agency's Financial Year (ending 31 March).

The projects identified in the table comprise nursing or residential homes where one or more medically qualified staff are involved. Financial support was provided by way of loan and-or equity as appropriate.

For reasons of commercial confidentiality the names of individuals or companies assisted cannot be given.

In all cases the Scottish Development Agency's full range of business development advisory services was made available.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the guidelines within which the Scottish Development Agency considers requests for financial or other forms of assistance from private health care projects.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 22 February 1988]: Private health care projects are considered for financial or other forms of assistance by the Scottish Development Agency in exactly the same manner as projects in other business sectors. Projects are evaluated in terms of market demand, any relevant technical factors and the skills and experience of those engaged in management. Where investment or other forms of financial assistance are being considered, a financial appraisal is also undertaken. Investments are made under financial guidelines set jointly by the Secretary of State and the Treasury, with the agency board having delegated authority of up to £1 million or 30 per cent. of equity, whichever is the lower. Any investment proposed outside the guidelines has to be approved on a case by case basis by the Scottish Office.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will set out in the Official Report the employment creation criteria used by the Scottish Development Agency when assessing private health care projects.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 22 February 1988]: The employment creation criteria used by the Scottish Development Agency in assessing private health care projects are no different from those used in assessing projects in other areas of business activity. The agency takes into account the additional earnings generated both directly by the project and elsewhere within the Scottish economy.

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland which of his Departments is consulted about Scottish Development Agency support for private medical schemes; and which Department accepts final responsibility for approval.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 22 February 1988]: Within the limits of the agency's delegated authority, consultation in respect of any particular project is a matter for the agency's own discretion. Outwith these limits, the Industry Department for Scotland is responsible (in consultation with the Scottish Home and Health Department) for approval of agency involvement in such projects.

Elderly Persons' Homes

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assistance in the form of loan guarantees has been given by the Scottish Development Agency towards setting up homes for the elderly in each year from 1983; and what are the names of individuals and companies involved.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 22 February 1988]: There has been no such assistance over the period 1983 to date.

Coatbridge Project

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what discussions he has had with the Scottish Development Agency about extending the geographical area of the Coatbridge project to cover a larger area in Monklands district; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 17 March 1988]: I am pleased to say that agreement has been reached between the Scottish Development Agency and its partners in the Coatbridge project on an extension both to the area of the project to include the rest of Monklands district, and for a further two years from 1 April 1988. The new project will be known as the Monklands project. This does not require the approval of my right hon. and learned Friend. While, therefore, I have kept myself informed about the current discussions between the Scottish Development Agency and its partners about an extension, I have seen no need for separate discussions with the agency, which as I said in my answer to the hon. Member on 2 1 January —is aware that we regard Lanarkshire as an area which continues to need its special attention.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Maternity (Statistics)

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give figures for the last five years (a) by region, (b) by district and (c) nationally, and the percentage change since 1979 for (i) the number of general practitioner maternity beds, (ii) the number of maternity units in hospitals and (iii) the number of maternity hospitals.

Mrs. Currie: The available information about general practitioner maternity beds is given in the table. Consultant obstetric wards may also have beds available for use by general practitioners.

Information about individual units and maternity hospitals could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Average daily available beds, GP maternity specialty, 1979 and 1982 to 1986

n/a = Comparable data not available for 1979, due to NHS restructuring in 1982.

Operations (Cancellations)

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what estimates he has as to the number and percentage of operations which are cancelled due to the absence of the consultant surgeon; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: This information is not held centrally. Following implementation of the recommendations of the health services information steering group, information is now, for the first time, to be collected centrally on the availability and use of operating theatres, including the number of sessions cancelled during the year (but not the reason for those cancellations). Information for 1987-88 is exepected to be available later this year.

Consultative Documents

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make it his policy that responses received to consultative documents issued by his Department be made publicly available by placing them in his Department's library, except where the respondent has specifically asked that this not be done; and if he will arrange for this procedure to be made clear when future consultative documents are issued.

Mr. Moore: I am not planning to make special arrangements in this regard. Organisations which respond to consultative documents are of course free to publicise their replies as they see fit.

Health Care

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will publish the total spent on health care in the United Kingdom for each year since 1979, in absolute terms and as a percentage of gross national product.

Mr. Newton: The table shows for 1979 to 1986 total, net public and private expenditure on health care on the United Kingdom in both absolute terms and as a percentage of gross domestic product. The data have been derived from Central Statistical Office national accounts.

Note: There are slight rounding differences between these figures and those published by the OECD for purposes of international comparisons.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has as to the total cost of health care in France and Germany as a percentage of each country's own gross national product for each year since 1979.

Mr. Newton: The table shows for the period 1979 to 1985—the latest readily available year—total, public and private expenditure on health care in France and Germany as a percentage of their respective gross domestic products. The data have been derived from OECD accounts.

Expenditure on Health Care as a Percentage of Gross Domestic Product, 1979-1985

Nurse Teachers

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list those regional health authorities with a shortfall in nurse teachers; and what is the shortfall in each of the five parts of the nursing education register.

Mr. Newton: Information on shortfalls of nurse teachers is not collected centrally. However, a sample survey by regional health authority chairmen in March 1987, for the pay review body, showed that 4·1 per cent. of all tutorial staff posts had been vacant for three months or more.

NHS (Land and Property Sales)

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give for each regional health authority, district health authority and special health authority and for each year since 1982-83 the total income from the sales of surplus land and property in the National Health Service.

Mrs. Currie: Tables showing each health authority's income from the sale of land and buildings as recorded in its annual accounts for the years requested have been placed in the Library.

Geriatric Care

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps are being taken by his Department to ensure that Health Service managers and practitioners are informed of his Department's policy on geriatric care; and what measures are being taken to ensure that they are carrying out the policy.

Mrs. Currie: Our policy for geriatric care remains as set out in the 1981 White Paper "Growing Older", as amplified and extended by the annual planning guidelines issued to health authorities.

We monitor the effectiveness of service in a range of ways; including regular reports on aspects of performance, statistical returns of activity levels, and annual reviews with regional health authorities.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will make it his policy to issue guidelines to health authorities to provide for the continuation of geriatric nurse training to ensure the provision of competent practitioners for this client group;

(2) what plans he has to ensure the full use of specialist trained geriatric nurses in patterns of service training.

Mr. Newton: All nurse learners have an allocation to elderly care units as part of their basic training. In addition, outline curricula for two post-basic clinical courses on care of the elderly have been published by the English National Board for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting. It is for health authorities to determine their training needs, and seek approval to run courses based on these curricula.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what assessment he has made of the value to geriatric services of improvements in co-ordination and co-operation between various agencies involved, rather than a single agency taking lead responsibility; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: I refer the hon. Member to my right hon. Friend the Minister for Health's reply to him on 16 March at column 614. Similar considerations apply to care services for elderly people.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many (a) geriatric (b) mentally handicapped and (c) mentally ill people are waiting in special hospitals for places to be offered them in local authority residential homes.

Mr. Newton: The table shows the number of patients in the special hospitals who, at 16 January, were waiting for places to be offered them in local authority residential homes:

	Broadmoor	Moss Side	Park Lane	Rampton
Geriatric	—	—	—	1
Mentally handicapped[1]	—	1	—	6
Mentally ill people[2]	—	—	2	4

[1] Detained patients who are either mentally impaired or severely mentally impaired.

[2] Detained patients who are either mentally ill or psychopathically disordered.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what guidelines have been issued by his Department to health authorities concerning the detaining of (a) geriatric, (b) mentally ill and (c) mentally handicapped people in special hospitals while waiting for places in local authority residential homes.

Mr. Newton: The Department has issued no guidelines to health authorities on this matter. Guidelines issued to the special hospitals on the care of elderly and long-stay patients recommend that where such a patient is ready for discharge before suitable alternative provision has been made, he should be allowed to remain in the special hospital temporarily as an informal patient.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many (a) privately run nursing homes and (b) local authority run nursing homes accept elderly severely mentally ill people in each local authority area in England.

Mrs. Currie: The information requested is not available. The numbers of private and local authority homes and hostels for the mentally ill in each local authority are published in "Homes and Hostels for Mentally Ill and Mentally Handicapped People". The numbers of private and local authority homes for the elderly and younger physically handicapped people in each local authority are published in "Residential Accommodation for the Elderly and Younger Physically Handicapped People: All Residents in Local Authority, Voluntary and Private Homes". Both these publications are available in the Library, the latest relating to 1986.

Mental Illness

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what evaluation has been made by his Department of the contribution of qualified psychiatric nurses to the success of the community care initiatives relating to mental illness and the use of such qualified nurses by local services in these initiatives.

Mr. Newton: The contribution of all care and support staff will be taken into account in the evaluation of the care in the community pilot projects which is now under way. It is hoped the evaluation will be completed in 1989.

Senile Dementia

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people with irreversible senile dementia are being cared for in mental hospitals in each health authority area in England.

Mrs. Currie: I am sorry I cannot give the hon. Member the information he seeks in the form requested. Statistics on resident in-patients by diagnosis are not collected centrally. The table gives the most recent information on admissions, and some people may have been readmitted during the year.

Maternal Deaths

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many (a) direct and (b) indirect maternal deaths in England and Wales in each year since 1985 occurred in National Health Service hospitals without consultant obstetric units; and how many were associated with anaesthesia.

Mrs. Currie: I regret that the information requested is not yet available.

Fraud

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the total amount of money obtained by fraud from his Department's offices in the Bolton area during the last 12 months for which figures are available; how many cases this involved; and what action is being taken to prevent further occurrences.

Mr. Portillo: It is not possible to ascertain the total amount of money obtained by fraud. In the year ended 9 February 1988 fraud staff in the Bolton area discovered overpayments of benefit amounting to £129,691. To prevent fraud, benefit procedures are kept under continual review and measures are adopted to combat fraud wherever possible.

NHS (Birmingham)

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will now reply to a letter and analysis of the revenue and capital situation in the National Health Service in Birmingham sent on behalf of the five Birmingham community health councils dated 12 February.

Mrs. Currie: We can find no record of the original letter of 12 February although a copy has now been received. A reply to earlier correspondence from Central Birmingham community health council was sent by my right hon. Friend the Minister for Health on 17 March.

Dental Charges

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received from the General Dental Practitioners' Association in respect of the proposal to levy a charge for dental examinations; what his response has been; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: I received a letter from the General Dental Practitioners' Association dated 20 January which expressed the association's opposition to our proposals concerning charges for dental examinations. In my response, as with the similar representations I have received, I expressed the view that it is reasonable for patients who can afford it to make a contribution towards the cost of the dental examination of less than £3 at today's prices. Moreover, I pointed out that we were retaining all current exemptions from dental charges, and that therefore the charge could not be expected to have any significant deterrent effect.

Salford Health Authority (Delegation)

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what criteria he used in deciding to meet a delegation of hon. Members about the financial position of Salford health authority; what criteria the Minister for Health the right hon. Member for Braintree, (Mr. Newton), used in refusing to meet a delegation of hon. Members about the financial position of the South Manchester health authority; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: Such meetings are a matter for the judgment of individual departmental Ministers. In this case, the hon. Members refused an offer by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Health and Social Security to meet them.

Natural Medicine

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will detail proposed changes to the licences of natural medical practitioners;

(2) if he has received representations concerning the proposed changes in regulating licensed natural medical practitioners; and if he will make a statement;

(3) how many licensed natural medical practitioners have been licensed to practise in England, by regional health authority, in each of the past eight years.

Mr. Newton: Medical treatment provided under the National Health Service must be given or prescribed by a practitioner registered by the General Medical Council. Practitioners of alternative therapies who are not registered with that council are free to offer their services privately subject to the appropriate provisions of statute and common law and the Department does not collect information on them.

Narcolepsy

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has received any representations from the Narcolepsy Association (UK) concerning changes in drug availability; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: We have no record of any representations from the Narcolepsy Association (UK) about the availability of drugs required by people who suffer from narcolepsy. Amphetamines are normally prescribed for narcolepsy, and although these are controlled drugs, they continue to be available on NHS prescription from general practitioners.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list those research projects dealing with the problem of narcolepsy, stating in which regional health authorities these projects are being undertaken and the funding arrangements for each project.

Mrs. Currie: Narcolepsy is an irresistible tendency to go to sleep. It is more usual to speak of the narcolepsies, rather than of narcolepsy, for sudden, repetitive attacks of sleep occurring in the day-time arise in diverse clinical conditions.

It is understood the United Kingdom incidence of narcolepsy is very small.

The Department is not at present directly supporting any research into the problem of narcolepsy. I am not aware that any is being carried out by a regional health authority under the locally organised research scheme.

I understand there is a project on narcolepsy being carried out by the University of Manchester. Details of this and its funding are not held centrally.

Family Planning

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will make a statement about the future of the family planning services provided by district health authorities;

(2) whether he has plans to require all district health authorities to make sterilisation and vasectomy operations available on the National Health Service;

(3) if he plans to issue a circular to district health authorities about family planning services.

Mr. Newton: The principles underlying the 1974 memorandum of guidance on family planning services in the NHS continue to reflect Government policy, and we have no plans to issue new guidance. The memorandum includes advice on the availability of male and female sterilisation on family planning as well as medical grounds, and asks health authorities to ensure that those with a priority need for the operation are enabled to receive it quickly.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list district health authorities which are currently reducing the family planning services they provide.

Mr. Newton: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the right hon. Member for Tweeddale, Ettrick and Lauderdale (Mr. Steel) on 15 March at column 548.

Medical Appeal Tribunals (South-West)

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many women have served as chairpersons in medical appeal tribunals in the south-west in the last year.

Mr. Portillo: I am advised by the president of social security appeal tribunals and medical appeal tribunals that, in the region covering Wales and the south-west, there are currently 19 persons appointed to serve of whom one is a woman. In England and Wales, nominations are made by the president from a panel appointed by the Lord Chancellor.

Contraception

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what analysis his Department has made of the most cost-effective means of contraception.

Mr. Newton: The Department has made no such analysis. The method used should be that which is most suitable and acceptable in each individual case.

Unwanted Pregnancies

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what he estimates the number of unwanted pregnancies is per year.

Mr. Newton: I regret that the number of unwanted pregnancies is not known.

Supplementary Benefit Tribunals

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many women have served as chairpersons in supplementary benefit tribunals in the south-west in the last year.

Mr. Portillo: I am advised by the president of social security appeal tribunals that, in the region covering Wales and the south-west, there are currently 105 persons appointed to serve of whom 11 are women. In England and Wales, nominations are made by the president from a panel appointed by the Lord Chancellor.

Local Authority Expenditure

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what real percentage increase, according to personal social services pay and prices, in expenditure would have been required between 1978-79 and 1986-87 by local authority social services departments in order to keep pace with demographic and other pressures; which local authorities fell below this line in 1986-87; what the budget growth of these authorities was; what was the actual expenditure on personal social services in these authorities; what the expenditure should have been to meet the level indicated; and what was the difference between these two levels of expenditure.

Mr. Newton [holding answer 15 March 1988]: Taking 2 per cent. per annum as a broad measure of demographic and other pressures on the personal social services at national level, a 17·2 per cent. real percentage increase would have been required over the period 1978-79 to 1986-87. But demographic and other pressures do not bear evenly on individual local authorities and it is therefore not appropriate to apply this figure at authority level. Full relevant information is not available to enable a calculation based on local circumstances.

Nurses

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the number of nurses directly employed by National Health Service hospitals on (a) permanent and (b) temporary contracts, by region, for each year from 1983 to 1987; and what was the number of agency or bank nurses employed by National Health Service hospitals, by region, for each year from 1983 to 1987.

Mr. Newton [holding answer 11 February 1988]: Information about the number of nurses on permanent and temporary contracts is not collected centrally and information specifically for nurses employed in hospitals is not readily available.

The total number of nursing and midwifery staff employed in each region on 30 September 1983, 1984, 1985 and 1986 and the number of agency and bank staff is given in the table. Similar information for September 1987 is not yet available.

Yorkshire Health Authorities (Staffing)

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the staffing levels in each health authority within the Yorkshire region in each of the following categories (a) ancillary posts, (b) nursing, (c) medical dental (d) administration and clerical and (e) other grades, including ambulance staff and technicians, in 1986 and 1987, indicating the percentage increase or decrease in each category and in the total.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 18 January 1988]: Figures shown in the table relate to staff in post at 30 September 1985 and 1986. Figures are not yet available centrally for 1987.

[1] Figures are independently rounded to the nearest ten (10) whole time equivalents. Percentage changes are calculated on unrounded figures.

[2] Includes permanent paid, honorary and locum staff. Excludes consultants from non-teaching districts and senior registrars from all districts. Contracts for all senior registrars and for most consultants are held by regional health authorities centrally. There will therefore be more doctors and dentists actually working in the districts than are accounted for in the table.

[3] Includes agency staff.

[4] Includes Professional and Technical, Works, Maintenance and Ambulance Staff (including Officers).

[5] Includes Medical and Dental, Nursing and Midwifery, Professional and Technical, Works, Maintenance, Administrative and Clerical, Ambulance (including Officers) and Ancillary Staff.

[6] Includes staff at Regional Headquarters and HQ Units. Includes Senior Medical and Dental; staff whose contracts are held by the Regional Health Authority (see note (2)).

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Thames Flood Plains

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment his Department has made of the role of the River Thames flood plains in preventing serious flooding.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 10 March 1988]: It is for the water authorities to plan flood protection as they consider appropriate, and this Ministry is involved only when projects are proposed for grant approval.

DEFENCE

Chemical Weapons

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment his Department has made of Soviet modernisation of their chemical weapons; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The Soviet Union commands the world's largest and most sophisticated chemical warfare capability. In 1987, it admitted that it possessed chemical weapons but the dated examples on display during the visit to the Soviet chemical weapons facility at Shikhany last October, revealed little of Soviet modern weapons or chemical agent technology.

There have been many advances in chemical weapons technology in recent years. New methods of delivering an expanding range of potential new agents have been developed. We assess that the Soviet Union's extensive research and development programme will have enabled it to exploit many of these advances and to develop new weapons utilising advanced and sophisticated chemical agents.

Sea Systems Controllerate

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to receive the reports concerning the reorganisation of the sea systems controllerate.

Mr. Sainsbury: I expect to receive a report of a full investment appraisal into the options for the co-location of the controllerate project staffs in the autumn.

Management in Government (Report)

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what action he is taking on the recommendations of the efficiency committee report, "Improving Management in Government: The Next Steps," which are within the area of responsibility of his Department.

Mr. Sainsbury: In accordance with the policy on Civil Service management announced by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on 18 February, the Ministry of Defence is considering two candidates for possible agency status: the Non-Nuclear Research Establishments and the Meteorological Office.

Nuclear Missiles

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to reach a decision with his North Atlantic Treaty Organisation counterparts on the replacement of the intermediate range of land-based nuclear missiles, with new air and sea-launched cruise missiles and other nuclear weapons, in accordance with the Montebello programme.

Mr. Ian Stewart: NATO is not planning to replace intermediate range land-based nuclear missiles.

NATO Meeting (Belgium)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence why he did not attend the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation Ministers and Heads of State meeting in Belgium on 2-3 March.

Mr. Ian Stewart: In accordance with the normal practice for such meetings the United Kingdom was represented at the meeting of the North Atlantic Council on 2-3 March by my right hon. Friends the Prime Minister and the Foreign and Commonwealth Secretary.

INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES VOLUME 129

SESSION 1987–88

7th March–18th March 1988

SCOPE OF THE INDEX, ARRANGEMENT AND ABBREVIATIONS

This index is derived from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Information System (POLIS), and the subject terms used are based on those used in POLIS. There are often changes in column numbering, etc, between the daily part or weekly Hansard (which simply collects together the daily parts without revision) and the bound volume. The index for the bound volume is revised to take account of these changes.

Scope and arrangement of the Index

Oral and Written Parliamentary Questions are indexed under subject headings and the names of Members asking and Ministers replying to them. Questions are not listed under the names of Departments replying. Departmental listings can be arrived at indirectly by looking under the names of the Minister(s) of that Department. There are, however, the headings 'Northern Ireland', 'Scotland', and 'Wales' under which one can find not only most Questions answered by the Northern Ireland Office, Scottish Office, Welsh Office but also Questions about these areas of the United Kingdom which are answered by other Departments. Ministerial statements are indexed under subject headings, under 'Ministerial statements' and the names of Ministers making them and Members speaking on them. General debates are indexed under broad subject headings and under the names of all Members and Ministers taking part. Debates on legislation (Bills, Orders, Regulations etc.) are indexed under the name of the Bill, Statutory Instrument etc, under subject headings and under the names of those taking part.

Rulings and Statements by Mr Speaker and his deputies are brought together under the heading Speaker's rulings and statements.

Other contributions by Mr Speaker and his deputies appear under the heading Speaker.

Opposition Day Debates, Estimates Day Debates and Standing Order No. 10 applications are listed under those respective headings and under subject headings too.

The date of each item except Parliamentary Questions is inserted immediately before the reference.

Members' names are given in the form by which they prefer to be known and are printed in bold italics. Under their names, entries are arranged under one of the two headings Debates etc (to include interventions on statements, points of order and so on) or Questions.

Abbreviations

Bills 1R = first reading, 2R = second reading, Money res = money resolution, Com = Committee stage, Rep = Report stage, 3R = third reading, amendt/amendts = amendment/amendments, * = matter taken formally, without debate.

Column numbers followed by the letter W refer to Written Questions. These appear at the end of each daily part or volume with their own sequence of column numbers printed in italics.
